exchange of Valentine Day cards today, a University of Florida professor on sexuality says there is a growing emotional estrangement between the sezes.

Dr. Hernan Vera said that seniors in his course, "The Sociology of Human Sexuality," often have a hard time coming up with answers when he asks them what purpose sex serves other than physical satisfaction. "I usually have to come right out and tell them that sex is also a form of human expression," he said. "Through it, one person is saying something to another human being." Vera believes that most people are afraid to commit themselves in a real loving relationship. "They turn to TV sets and stereos, not people, for leisure entertainment," he said, "and the dominant way of looking at sex is in terms of the satisfaction it gives, the same as a blender or a cigarette." Vera said part of the estrangement between the sexes is the result of an underlying fear of the opposite sex. "You can see it in popular rock songs. The male singer

And rape literature clearly shows women fear men use sex to dominate them." Students have told him, Vera said, that they're afraid they'll lose control of their lives if they depend on another human being for some of their happiness. "Of course, they can't really avoid it. It's part of being human," he said.

But Vera believes that the act of revealing those fears may be a healthy sign in the eternal battle of the sexes. "We are only going to be liberated to the extent that we can really see each other and really communicate," said the professor, whose course examines the origins of many popular notions of human sexuality. "If the liberation movement is successful," he said, "the time will come when tenderness and strength will not be connected with one's sex. We will become aware we are all human and that there are two modalities of being

An Episode In Diplomacy

The State Department's weak attempt to tone down the remarks of Leonard Woodcock, the United States' envoy to the People's Republic of China, is more troublesome than Mr. Weedcack's Taking a page from the Andy Young guide to diplomacy. Mr. Woodcock said, among other things, that the absence of full diplomatic relations with Puking is "an obvious absurdity;" that he himself was "delighted" with a recommendation of Sen. Alan Cranaton that the United States quit recognizing Taiwan; and that there is a danger of war in Korea so long as the United States does not "take the step for a full and nermal relationship. between the world's most populous power and the world's mightlest power."

Apparently, Mr. Weedcock does not recognize that diplomats are supposed to carry out their government's foreign policy, not create it.

The State Department declined to distinguish Mr. Woodcock's remarks from the administration of the state of the sta ministration's beliefs, saying merely that Mr. Woodcock's remarks were not prepared or cleared

It is understood, of course, that the Carter administration has been favorably disposed toward a "full and normal relationship" with Peking; but does the State Department's response to Mr. Woodcock indicate something more than this at-

Does it indicate something in the offing — a clan, perhaps, to expedite divorce from Taiwan and marriage to Peking?

Perhaps not, but in any event, this little episode in diplomacy comes at a politically bad time.

President Carter ness all the support he can muster on the Panama Canal treaties; particularly does he need it among those who believe that the United Staates is in the process of global retreat.

Those so believing may see in the Woodcock episode more evidence for this belief. Consequently, Mr. Carter's job of selling the Panama Canal treaties may now be more difficult.

spouse and two children) making $20,000 in 1979 will gain, because of the tax cut, $100 even after paying the higher Social Security taxes. Yet this is misleading, as Mr. Fellour saints out. If our worker is making $20,000 at the beginning of 1970, he must finish the year having made an additional $1,300 in order to keep pace with inflation, figured to be 6 percent.

Yet to earn $21,000, as Mr. Feliner goes on to say, has its own complications. Our worker will be clipped for $576 in income taxes on the extra $1,550. By Markf, the $576 exceeds the $156 tax cut on the initial 200,000. Mr. Polinor's point is that at this neighberhood of income, our werker's tax liability increases by somewhat more than 6 percent, the rate of inflation. What to do? Clearly, Washington should adjust the tax schedules as that, as in the case of our example, a 6 percent salary increase does not automatically increase the proportion of income tame; this is called "indusing." Indexing would prevent the tax burden from increasing because of inflation; thereby it would help mutain the occasemic recovery. It is a tax reform the administration should consider.

for the day and with nothing but time on his hands, he strolled into the hotel lobby to give the slot machines a fiveminate workout.

Like everyone else, the 24-year-old Otympic gold medalist from St. Louis stuck his coins into the slot almost mechanically, one after another, hardly paying much attention to the machine's revolving cylinder, which showed he was a loser each time. lenly, there was a loud buzzing

One hundred silver dellars came clattering down into a metal tray. Leen Spinks watched the entire process in wide-eyed

He had hit the jackpot, the same thing he hopes to do again Wednesday night when as a 5 to 1 underdog with only seven professional fights under his belt, he's going to try to take away the world heavyweight title from Muhammad Ali, who doesn't have any intention of letting him do it.

Barely more than a year out of the amateur ranks, Spinks thinks he can even though he's completely aware that he and his brother Mike, a light heavyweight fighting on the same card, constitute a minority of two who feel he has any real chance of together ex-Marine, who won 178 of his 186 amateur bouts before turning professional. "I wipe that from my mind. I'm not even thinking about the fight. If I think about it, the only thing it'll do is worry me. But you don't see me biting my nails.

"Ali has always been my idol. He still is, but that isn't going to stop me from going out and giving it all I've got. I'll fight him the same way as I would anyone else."

All has been guaranteed $3 million for the fight and the $350,000 Spinks is getting represents his biggest purse by far. It upsets him that some feel the only reason he got this fight was because of his someone gave it to me on a silver platter. No such thing. I had to fight to get what I did. I went through the same thing (Ken)

Norton and (Jimmy) Young did. Nobody gave me anything for Although he has been fighting since he was 15, hardly anyone heard of Leon Spinks before the 1976 Olympics in Montreal where he won his gold medal in the light heavyweight class. Several amateurs before Spinks have tried to make it in a hurry in the professional ranks. Some like Pete Rademacher, who went in against Floyd Patterson in his very first pre fight in 1967 when Patterson was the heavyweight champ, never got very far, but it was an entirely different story with an amateur like Sugar Ray Robinson, who defeated such name fighters as Jake LaMotta, Fritzie Zivic, Marty Servo and Sammy Angott little more than a year or so after turning pro. "To me, there ain't that much difference between the pros and the ameteurs," says Spinks. "The pros are allowed to hold and grab more, that's all."

Spinks is a younger edition of Smekin' Joe Frazier in that he's eager and aggressive and likes to keep coming at you. He implies that's the tray he's going to fight All, but when the time comes and the full significance of being involved in a world championship the full significance of being involved in a world championship fight hits him, he may decide to play it safe and stay back. I wouldn't be surprised at all to see that hoppen In the event he does boat Alt, which would be the biggest upset the heavyweight ranks since Ali took the title from the late Sonny Liston 14 years ago, Spinks says he would try to use the championship as an instrument to inspire youngsters.

"Especially the ones who have dropped out of school," he says.

"Expectatly the ones who have dropped on a race, he may a "I'm a dropout myself. I had one more grade to go in high acheol but never finished and I'm sarry. What I'd like to do in deliver that message to those who are dropping out of school today."

The odd thing about what Spinks is talking about is that one former heavyweight champion hoose preaching the very same theme today. This follow's EL years old and was a dropped himself.

On most occasions the nine play would show strength and the three play weakness. This time the nine couldn't be strength so West knew that East was showing an even number of diamonds. It was most unlikely that he held just two so it had to be four. Hence, West cashed his ace of diamonds, got out with a black card, avoided the end play and held South to just eight tricks. 7 14 1 KQJ 10 you could encounter someone today whe'll make you feel poor LEO (July 25-Aug. 22) Even though you'd like to, it's very . North really should have passed two notrump. But when clubs broke 3-3, South would have made his contract except for perfect defense.

He took East's queen of hearts with his ace; led a diamond to dummy's 10 and returned a club to his nine. West was in with the 10.

Had West shifted to a spade or led a club, South would have cashed four clubs and two spades to come to eight tricks. Then he would have thrown West in with the ace of diamonds to force West to lead a heart. This would have given South his ninth trick with the jack.

However, East had played the nine on the first diamond lead and the three spot on the club lead.
