Longwood's Cyprus

Florida and Seminole County in general and Longwood in particular are coming in for a little free publicity recently as a result of the discovery of the "Big Tree," which has always been a subject of great local interest.

Dr. Krutz, a recognized authority on cypress trees, has been spending the summer studying the redwoods of California, and declares that in his opinion Longwood's "big tree" is not only older than most of California's redwoods, but is also practically the same age as the "Grizzly Giant," generally reputed to be the oldest in the United States.

It is impossible to determine the exact age of a tree without cutting it down and examining a cross-section, an operation which in this enlightened age, thanks to the garden clubs and botanical societies, is unthinkable, but Dr. Krutz has made his estimate in a conservative manner by comparing the diameters of similar trees of known age.

In determining the age of the Longwood tree, he has used the same method as was employed in finding the age of the California "Grizzly." Dr. Krutz made a special study of cypress trees and their ages. Of a great many trees, already destroyed, he counted the rings and computed the proportion between rings and diameters. In a great many trees, he withdrew plugs, and made the same compilation. Finally he figured the diameter of the Longwood tree, and from that ascertained its age.

The "Grizzly Giant" in California is twenty-nine and six-tenths feet in diameter, while the Longwood tree is only sixteen feet; yet because of the slowness with which the cypress tree grows, Dr. Krutz has determined by the ring method that both trees are about twenty-eight hundred years old. In other words both of these trees were eight hundred years old before Christ appeared on earth.

When you look again at that old tree at Longwood, think not how long the splinters from its sides could keep you from kindling, or how many boards could come from it for your boat. Rather, try to imagine, if you can, how things which have transpired in this world under its shade, and what sights it may yet be called upon to witness before its unknown foe strikes it down.

WASHINGTON DAY BY DAY

By Robert Barry

President Hoover had broken on his recent progress to the North Central States, but about the final trial on the famous "Swain" around the circle.

The White House makes it clear that Hoover is not to refrain from addresses outside of Washington, but there will be no more tours of one-night stands.

So many unpleasant things occurred on the Detroit, Cincinnati, Louisville junket the President is not to refuse to open talk about traveling for another six months.

Mr. Hoover's extreme sensitiveness revealed itself in his obvious disappointment over the flop in Louisville, a town which will have to be careful if distinguished performances are not to boycott it.

On a day when the temperature was 25 in the streets and 13,000 people packed the Armory for hours to hear Alfred E. Smith, someone turned on the heating plant.

Having in mind the rain which greeted them in Louisville last October, the first they had encountered in their campaign for the Presidency Mrs. Hoover on her most recent arrival in Louisville remarked:

"Oh, I see it's still raining." Embarrassments Along Line There were some embarrassments at Detroit and difficulties getting a boat out of the mud at Cincinnati.

George Akerson, the President's secretary, joked that, insisting either the Governor of the State or the President of the House of Representatives be his guestmaster.

Twenty rows of empty seats met under the speaker's platform greeted the President because the 700 internal waterways improvement enthusiasts preferred to hear the Hoover speech by radio rather than to endure the rain for a walk of two city blocks from the Brown Hotel to the War Memorial Auditorium.

Sponsors of the new bridge spanning the Ohio River at Louisville were angry because the President cut across from the Indiana to the Kentucky side and Akerson is blamed for that.

Mr. Hoover's embarrassments are part of a long story. It has been ever thus when the White House tries to be obliging to influential citizens in various communities honored by Presidential visits.

From the editorial columns of some Florida weeklies come some of the finest writing in the state, and we feel sure that the dailies are not going to eat out that source of interest entirely.

New Air Drama Made With Co-operation Of Marine Corps Fliers

Columbia's all-talking road show attraction, "Flight," opens at the Milane Theatre Wednesday. The cast includes Jack Holt, Lila Lee, Ralph Graves, Harold Goodwin, Jimmy De La Cruz and A. An Roscoe.

Against the varied and picturesque backgrounds of a marine flying base, the rough wilderness of Nicaragua and a Central American dance hall, awe-inspiring flying feats lend color, drama and daring to a poignant love story and the great friendship of two buddies in the Marine Corps.

The film made with the cooperation of the United States Marine Corp. is technically perfect. The most spectacular air feats ever photographed keep the audience in breathless suspense. The Captain Ho T-Graves combination that made "Submarine" the outstanding sea picture of many seasons, makes good in a new field. Lila Lee plays the leading feminine role with skill and enthusiasm. Good film fare for all.

Alleged Slayer Of Kraft May Never Be Taken To Trial

POINT-A-LA-HACHE, La., Nov. 5.—(INS)—The possibility that John McGoutrick, held for the mysterious murder of Jack Kraft, New York pressman and adventurer, may never be brought to trial was disclosed today by District Attorney Leander Perez.

Whether or not McGoutrick, second mate of the steamer Crook, will face trial depends upon the deposition and testimony of Sam Epstein, and Miss Gloria Rouze, alias Ione Ord, Kraft's traveling companion on the Creole, according to Perez.

The district attorney, announcing a sudden change in the prosecution's plans, declared McGoutrick would be arraigned today instead of tomorrow, as was originally planned.

After the arraignment and the deposition and testimony of Epstein who is held as a material witness, will be "perpetrated," Perez said.

"Then, said the district attorney, there is a strong probability we will take the testimony of Ione Ord and decide whether or not to fix the case for trial."

Perez disclosed that if the testimony of the girl, also held as a material witness, is not taken, she probably will be admitted to bond. He said he would ask that it be fixed at $2,500.

Miss Rouze is scheduled to appear at a habeas corpus writ hearing arranged by her attorney to secure her release on bond. The hearing has been set for 8:30 to morrow morning.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 5.—(INS)—Governor Manuel Carpio of the state of Aguascalientes and John Carmichael, an American pilot, were among four persons killed when a Mexico City to El Paso passenger airplane crashed in a remote section of the state of Mexico yesterday, it was learned here today.

The wreckage of the plane and the bodies of the four dead were found after an extensive search, instituted when the plane failed to appear at its destination. Governor Carpio, a former Mexican journalist, was on his way to El Paso on official business. Carmichael, the pilot of the plane, was 27 years of age. He bore a United States department of commerce license numbered 3062.

Police Continue To Seek Missing Son Of Detroit Newsman

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 5.—(INS)—Police throughout the United States and Canada continued today to be on the lookout for William J. Scripps, who disappeared in Windsor, Ontario, Oct. 23. ROLLINS WILL SEEK REVENGE ON LOCAL BOYS

To Enter Fray Tonight Determined To Give Celery-Feds Battle

WINTER PARK, Fla., Nov. 5.—Smiling under the sting of their defeat last Friday by St. Petersburg Junior College, the Rollins Rats are looking forward to their battle tonight against Seminole High in Sanford as an opportunity to take revenge on the world in general. In particular, the Rats intend to show that the tie game between the two teams earlier in the season was all a huge mistake and that they are thoroughly capable of giving the Seminole lads a sound drubbing.

Captain Rogers and his mates are not discounting the strength of the Sanford boys, however. They realize that Seminole will be a lot tougher than at the engagement of several weeks back and Coach McDowell is having no trouble in making the Tar Babies realize the seriousness of the task before them.

None of the regulars was hurt enough in the St. Petersburg fracas to keep him on the sidelines tonight and the Rats will thus be able to flash their full strength. The youngsters have learned a lot of football since they opened their season at Sanford a month ago. Rogers has made remarkable development not only as a ball carrier but as a field general and several other regulars, notably Durand, the two Morris boys, Crigger, Dawson, Moeen, Horton, Child, Crawford, Lilly, Denning and Anger give promise of developing into first class performers.

Where the Rats had time to practice on only three offensive plays for Seminole in the lid after tonight Rogers will be able to call for a wide variety of play, engineering his running attack. It is doubtful if the Rats will have much success in sending play through the heavy and powerful Seminole line but the invaders will have an interesting assortment of lateral passes and end plays that are designed to keep their opponents "up in the air."

As the game is the first night football game in the history of Florida, hundreds of rooters from Orlando and Winter Park are expected to attend. They are assured of an interesting spectacle and a hard fought game.

Brazil's area approximately equals that of Europe.

Local Gridders Ready To Meet Rollins In Big Contest Tonight

A final practice last night under the glare of giant floodlights with a white football capitated the last drilling received by Coach Whelchel's Seminole High School Celery-feds. The practice, held almost an hour and that time was almost wholly devoted to new offensive plays which showed materially aid the local gridders when they meet the Baby Tars on Municipal Field tonight in Florida's initial night football game. Rollins was invited to indulge in an hour's use of the lighted field but either Coach McDowell has a bag of tricks up his sleeve or prefers to let his boys take their chances without a night practice, for the Winter Park aggregation failed to put in an appearance.

Final seating arrangements and minor details were completed at the field this afternoon and everything is in readiness for the game. One of the largest crowds ever to witness a football game in this section is expected to be on hand and both coaches have promised a real battle for their entertainment, as the teams are practically evenly matched. Rollins won from the Sanford eleven last year by the close score of 6 to 0 while in the first tilt of the season they fought to a scoreless tie. Both teams are reported to be in splendid shape, and more than likely will start first string men.

Regardless of the outcome the battle is expected to be a thrilling one, while the innovation of night sport should appeal to hundreds as it has won many supporters in the few similar games that have been staged. The colorful crowds, band music and festival atmosphere should make the event one of the most spectacular ever staged in Central Florida.

Some pecan trees in Texas are said to be 300 years old.

Chicago uses over 27 carloads of garlic a year.

Diamond Ball Game Tonight Postponed

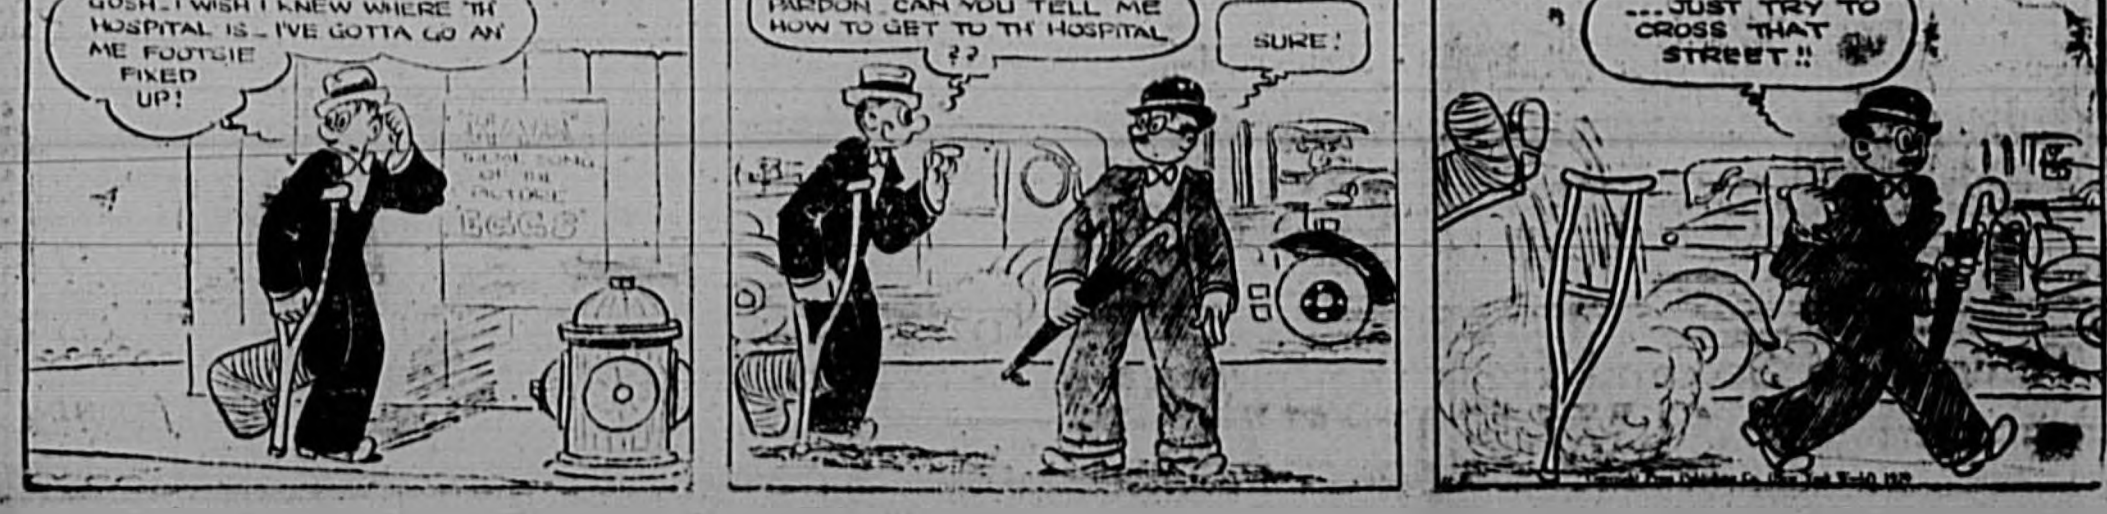

On account of the football game which will be played tonight between Seminole High School and the Rollins College Rats, the game scheduled between the Professional Men and Piggly Wiggly has been postponed until later in the season. The league has expressed the hope that everyone will take advantage of witnessing the first night football game ever played in Florida.

COSTLESS COMFORTS

You own an automobile. It's warm today... you hop into your car and spend gallons of gasoline and wear and tear on your car hunting a cool spot and don't think anything about the cost. You can do it, but you DON'T have to. For the insignificant price of a single gallon of gasoline, twenty-five cents, you can keep cool night or day in your own home seventy-two hours or three days of twenty-four hours each. Electrically and a ten-cent Electric Fan will do it. By comparison you will admit electricity is routine comfort.

NOAH'S ARK

Copyright 1929, Warner Bros. Pictures Inc. "NOAH'S ARK" starring Dolores Costello and featuring George O'Brien. A Warner Bros. production of this novel. It is based upon the scenario by Darryl Francis Zuckor.

SYNOPSIS
The Ark is a magnificent monument on a mountain side. It is the last refuge for the animals of the world. Noah, a Russian; Armand, a Frenchman; and Emil, a German, are among the animals. Noah is interested in a French girl, Marie, who is the daughter of a French nobleman. They are followed by the Americans, Jim Travis and Al, who interrupt the situation. The train is wrecked and Travis rescues Marie and with Al, they discover a mysterious man. They are followed by the three friends. That night Emil steals into the girl's room, but Armand follows. They fight, and Armand wounds his friend with a knife. Marie, terrified, runs to Travis's room.

After a moment the German managed to struggle to his feet, still holding the head. In the dark he could feel the warm stickiness of cooling blood.
In the next room Armand was waiting the soft shuffle on his handkerchief and striking it back into his belt. His eyes, now accustomed to the darkness, sought the portiere that concealed the bed where, as he supposed, the girl still slept. He crossed the floor stealthily, then pulled the hanging away with a swift gesture. The silence was empty.
Armand considered the situation. The American had the room next door. His hand dropped to his knife. But even as he stepped his still warm hand on the balcony door opened and a heavy hand clutched his shoulder.
"Ivan lifted his friend off his feet and deposited him bodily on the balcony, cursing loudly. As he in the collar, Al started into activity, jumping to his feet, reacting as steadily, and indeed stupidly about, unable to realize where he was or what was happening. In the first flying light, however, he caught sight of the door, and pulling her along with him, rushed for the stairs, terrified.

The landlord, too, had been awakened by the shock. From a cavernous hallway he suddenly emerged at the top of the kitchen steps and stood listening, his breath coming quick and fast, his eyes searching this way and that for an explanation of the noise. Then he started slowly down the steps.
"Al and Hilda stopped abruptly in the archway as they caught sight of the group in the main room. They seemed to wait, tense and silent, as though ready to spring at each other's throats should any one of them give the slightest sign of attack.
The cold, gray dawn filtered through the big windows, paling the dim light in the room and throwing the into black relief the various objects about, making elongated, grotesque shadows on the walls. With the coming of morning the rain had ceased, and now only the monotonous dripping of water sounded without.
And then the stillness was shattered by the thud of horses' hoofs splashing through the thick mud. The landlord tapped nervously with his cane on the floor. He frightened gasp turned towards the heavy door. He started as though to bar it when a thunderous knock had halted him. The door opened slowly. A gray uniformed man stood in the entrance.
"War is imminent! We have orders to search the houses of all citizens along the border!"
CHAPTER VI
War is imminent!
Like a thunderbolt from a clear sky the declaration rolled out over the room.
"What the very word sent his message of grim warning to each member of the group that gathered with startled faces staring up at the officer who had brought the message. Hours seemed to drag by before anyone spoke. Then:
"Halt!" The officer snapped out the command.
The others turned to look. The landlord, who had been partially hidden in the archway, was stealthily making his way towards the kitchen.
"We have orders to search this house," the officer began. Then he turned to the soldiers framed in the doorway behind him and issued curt commands.
The uniformed men stepped forward, saluted, and scattered about the room. Without more ado they began to strip open doors, tapping the walls with the butts of their guns, stamping on loose boards and knocking down partitions.
On the balcony Travis drew Marie back into the shadow of the doorway, but he, too, was waiting anxiously for the outcome of this search.
"What did he say about war—that officer?" he whispered to Marie. "All I could get was something about war."
"The war is to be war," Marie whispered back, looking up at Travis with frightened eyes. "They come to search this house—I don't know why. They are Germans."
"Well, whatever it is, we'd better get away from here pretty quick."
"Perhaps it is not possible," the girl suggested anxiously.
"Listen, baby, we're going to get out and 'oot sweet,' as you say. I'm not interested in having one of these men wrapped around my neck just because a couple of armies decide they need a little exercise."
Now the searching party, having found nothing in the kitchen, turned towards the main room below, started out towards the kitchen. At the approach Al and Hilda drew further back into the shadows, and then slipped along the kitchen wall and around the stairs and started up. Their way led through a short, dark passage to the balcony.
"Well, my goal! There's Jim!" Al rushed forward and grabbed his friend by the arm. "Say, what's going on here?"
"Wars, and rumors of wars," Travis quoted. "Look here, are you sure?"
"You're damned tootin'! Al doesn't need no more. What are we going to do?"
"That's just what I'm trying to figure out," Travis answered. "We're got to get away, that's certain. But how? We can't run for it. If we had a horse and buggy or something—like I had. Look, Marie, he turned to the girl beside him. "Can you ask the maid whether there's a horse and buggy or something—like I had—here, and it's very far to station."
"Oh, yes," Marie answered. She beckoned to Hilda who came over confidentially to the little group, and began explaining their case.

to there a horse?"
stared, at Armand's bid busy inquired, and with a hollow roar of rage he lunged forward and flung himself at his opponent's throat. Now Noah's three men in a slow, deliberate way, they stepped against the door. A fierce struggle brought Marie and Travis to the scene. As they opened the door they saw Armand's friend, Marie, rushing towards a room. Startling with rage the Russian unlocked the door, and shoved his companion inside. But as Armand came tumbling in, Emily, recognizing him, stepped forward, embracing him out on the balcony once more. His nose taking a tattoo of blows on the other's face.
With a renewed burst of energy, Armand threw off his friend and the two rolled over on the floor together. But as they rolled they reached the top of the steps and with terrific force, still grasping, they crashed to the bottom, Ivan struggling after them.
Panting and gasping from their reckless Emil and Armand gated in a sort of dazed bewilderment. It was the Russian who occupied the Frenchman's mind. A nasty look convulsed his swollen face. With an insane shriek he clutched his knife and rushed forward. Marie, being on a higher level, had the advantage. As he saw the bare blade sweeping through the air, he reached out and caught the ascending wrist, wrenching the weapon free from the hand that held it. The knife fell to the floor with a clatter. The two struggled with out-stretched arms, each grasping for a weapon. Then Marie's fingers closed over the sharp blade. But even as she detached the blade Armand's foot came down heavily upon the clamped fist. Blood oozed over the bone handle. Armand, with pain and rage, fell full sideways, grasping at his hurt member.
But the sounds of the struggle brought the other members of the household to the scene. Down

TALES THAT TABLES TELL

In every department of decoration we feel the emphasis of modern design, and these days—welcome it with far more cordiality than when it first came upon us several years ago.
For with true diplomacy the new movement has learned to adapt itself. Instead of turning your household topsy-turvy in order to establish itself on a brand new basis, the mode has effected a "kifful" compromise which enabled it to get on amicably with many old-fashioned and conventional schemes. And this without losing a whit of its originality or its distinction.
The new note is found in floor coverings, in draperies, in pictures, in upholstery and in accessories, in occasional pieces which fit them, in accessories most graciously into schemes not entirely planned around them as the central theme.
And nowhere is the modern touch more easily introduced than at the table, where it may be suggested by the china, the glassware, the silver or merely by the cloth alone.
An interesting example of the way in which the dynamic qualities of modern applied art have established themselves in the dining room is shown by the table illustrated, where an emphatic yet harmonious accent is given to the setting by the tablecloth—a linen damask, as good in the modern manner. Here we have a study in occasional forms placed apparently at random on the field of the cloth, but in reality arranged adroitly so as to give a feeling of both symmetry and vitality.
The modern note is not, however, carried to extremes by the appointments—a though the ensemble is in perfect harmony. The fluted china classic rather than modern, is in the feeling, with the white pattern of the modern glassware and certain circular suggestions of the tablecloth motif. The silver, a though conventional in design, is also in keeping with the modern theme, which the group as a whole represents.
It may also be noted that the explanation today is toward simplicity in table settings, to avoid burdening the table with too much ware and decoration, and to rely for effect upon the excellent design of the linen and the few accessories which are necessary.

Acquitted Slayer Of Mother Says He Would Do It Again

DRAGUIGNAN, France, Nov. 5 (INS)—Although a free man by the verdict of a jury which acquitted him though he admitted having deliberately killed his mother, a young man today declared that he would do it all over again if he had the chance.
The verdict of acquittal makes no difference to me," he continued. "There is nothing more in life for me. It would have been better if I had been condemned for I no longer have my mother."
The son of an English banker, was greatly attached to his French-born mother, his father having died soon after his birth. When he became of age, he elected to become a French citizen and live in this vicinity with his mother.
Throughout the trial sympathy was with Corbett but the verdict resulted in a storm of controversy all over the world. Another victory had been won by those who feel that a man has a right to kill in order to put a fellow in man out of misery resulting from illness.
But to Corbett neither evidence nor sympathy have had the effect of easing the wound caused by the loss of his mother.
