JOE LOUIS FERRY, 19, a senior at Crooms Academy, snagged a 3 1/2 foot alligator while fishing for bass yesterday in Lake Monroe. It took about 20 minutes to land and he was assisted by Robert Stringer, 15, seventh grade Crooms student. The boys related that there were hooks and bits of line in the "reptile's" mouth which had apparently been caught before and freed himself. The creature was donated to the zoo. (Staff Photo)

Yoshida Claims Notes Molested

TOKYO (AP)—Shigeru Yoshida says in his memoirs that some of Japan's leaders at the time of Pearl Harbor tampered with the text of a final U.S. note, thus persuading reluctant officials to agree to war.

"This was a fraud by the military and amounted to conspiracy," declares the 76-year-old diplomat and politician who guided Japan as prime minister through six post-war years.

He said the note from the late Secretary of State Cordell Hull just before the Pearl Harbor attack was marked "Not definitive." There was the added comment in the note that "this is a basis for negotiation" and part of the preamble emphasized "this is a tentative plan."

"Not only were all these words deleted," Yoshida said, "but the portion covering the Japanese stand was also deleted when the document was submitted to the Privy Council as 'the Hull note.'" It was informed that only the American position was carried in a one-sided manner.

It was on the basis of this doctored note, accepted by Japan as a virtual U.S. ultimatum—that reluctant Japanese civilian leaders and some doubtful military chiefs finally agreed to war, Yoshida said.

Wife Is Run Over As Hubby Flees From Gas Station

CINCINNATI (AP)—Lee Murphy 40, who ran over his wife while fleeing from the scene of an alleged gasoline theft, was in custody awaiting a charge of murder in her death.

Investigator Carl G. Meyer said Murphy would be charged with murdering his wife Willoughby, 39, mother of 12.

On surrendering to Meyer Saturday, 10 hours after the hit-and-run incident, Murphy said, "I was crazy drunk. I didn't know I ran over anything."

Police said Mrs. Murphy was killed in nearby Harrison when her husband fled from a concrete mixing plant from which the couple had attempted to steal gasoline. Frank Roubush, co-owner of the plant, said he was holding the pair at gunpoint when the man suddenly started the car.

Roubush said he fired at the man and shoved the woman into the path of the automobile.

"He ran over her and kept on going," Roubush said.

Hospitality Urged For Vets, Families

MIAMI, Expansion of a statewide "welcome mat" to include a series of hospitality stops for veterans and their families combining Florida vacations with the 1935 National Convention of the American Legion here in October was pushed today by Joe E. Adams.

"This is a great opportunity for the whole state to share in greeting more than 50 percent of the Legionnaires expected to drive to and from the meeting," he said.

Adams' complete plan for a hospitality stop in William E. Morris Post 34, Fort Lauderdale, according to Adams, who heads the Miami Convention Corporation, Thomas E. Kline, Adams' friend October revenue for post treasurers," he said.

A number of posts are cooperating with Chambers of Commerce and other groups on "Operation Florida Hospitality". All were urged to notify Convention Headquarters of their plans so the word may be sent up north before the conventionists start their trek south.

"With sufficient advance notice, we can publicize activities nationally among some 17,000 Legion posts," Adams said.

THE BOSS OF BROKEN SPUR

CHAPTER THIRTY-TWO

THE BLIGHT, hot noon was suddenly dark and dark to the old man. Ty and Chuck and Bill: Years of work, of fun and grief, of memories shared. Sandy lifted the re-loaded Colt in a hand that felt heavy as lead.

Something struck his chest. A blow that drove the breath from his lungs. He felt himself falling through blackness.

Panic lashed like a flame along the Broken Spur line when they saw the old foreman go down. There were nine of them left in the saddle, and of those, two were keeping themselves up by anger, force of will. Unhindered as they were, Rob or Sandy might still have held them together, but now they were men without a leader, and the heart had gone out of them. They fired one more ragged volley, and then reined their horses back, his head raised, palm up. "We want to gather up our dead."

Old Cullen, crouched on the ground with his dead son's head on his knee, raised his bearded head. "Let 'em. We got no war with dead men. Let 'em rest in peace."

It was that Rob, coming back to his kingdom, was met by a lumber avalanche, with six horses bearing dead men lashed across their saddles.

The news of the raid on Broken Spur was brought in Double Mountain that afternoon, by the round messenger. Cameron paid him off with his customary post and sent him away.

"Well, you're a cool one, Wayne," Calder declared, eyeing his partner with a mixture of admiration and resentment. "You got 'em hand in on you called the play, all right. But, can't you smile when you pull off as big a gamble as this?"

"We haven't raked in the pot yet, Lem," Cameron reminded him.

"This is just the first round."

"Well, it went off just like you wanted it to, didn't it?"

"Sure—your bettor's I hoped for. But I still like to count my chips before I start crowing over 'em."

"You're jumpy, cooped up in the house so long."

"You're right—I'm jumpy! Who wouldn't be? This waiting around with nothing to do but play solitaire is enough to send a man off his head. When do I earn my cut and clear out of this hole?"

"Soon, Lem, maybe tomorrow night."

"Why not tonight?" Calder demanded impatiently.

"Malloy's in town," Cory had started out, too soon to have heard word of Rob's return. "It would be risky to try anything there. It might not get blamed on the seeters. Wait till he gets home."

"It's always waiting with you," Calder grumbled. "Wait for the right time—and the right time's always tomorrow or next week."

"My waiting paid off, didn't it?" The gambler took another tack.

"Well, I'm not waiting in here any longer. Another game of solitaire and I'll start seeing spots in front of my eyes! I'm going in to town to look things over. What are you worried about?" he snapped, as Cameron opened his lips to object. "I'm just a stranger passing through town. The only two people who'd know me aren't going to give me any trouble, locked up in a cell!"

Cameron shrugged. After all, no harm seemed likely to come of Rob's riding in to town and having a few drinks in the saloon, and his engaged restlessness might drive him to do something really foolish if he weren't allowed to work it off.

"All right, Lem," he agreed. "But watch yourself. Don't get in trouble, an' don't do anything to make people remember you or ask questions."

"You take me for a fool?" Calder muttered. "I'm going in to town in a state of rolled-up emotion that would have made Cameron, could he have seen into his mind, doubtful of the wisdom of letting him go."

In that shifting mass of twinges, cravings and resentments that served Lem Calder by way of a soul, two things had remained constant for two years now. One was his frustrated desire for Margie, the other, the need of Rusty Baines. A long time he'd waited his chance at Rusty, with a patience that wasn't any part of his nature. It would have been easy enough to run him down in an alley somewhere, but that wouldn't have satisfied Calder's twisted hate. A bullet in the heart was the way a man like Rusty would have dealt with an enemy. He had to die in some way that would be a trigger-anger, but of his brain. So he'd waited, and at last had found his opportunity and his scheme—simple, yet deadly, cool-proof, he'd thought. He'd sprung his trap—and the redhead had slipped safely out of the jaws. And since then, the bitterness had grown and festered in him, till the simple direct violence he'd despised at first had to be a craving that haunted his day. He wanted to see Rusty's blood spurt, wanted him to know who'd done it.

But Rusty was behind bars now, where he couldn't get at him. His mind played briefly with the idea of breaking into the jail, but a vestige of common-sense, and even more, a deep-rooted fear of Wayne Cameron and his cold anger when his plans were crossed, held him back.

So he rode into town and swung off at the Last Chance for a drink. The saloon was crowded with men in blue shirts and overalls, with a sprinkling of town-dwellers—the loafers and drifters who were to be found around the saloon during most of their waking hours.

Mellowed by the warmth of his first drink, Calder took the second more leisurely, and began to give an indifferent attention to the scraps of conversation that drifted to him. The neaters, he soon perceived, were divided into two groups—those who had taken part in the attack on Broken Spur and were celebrating their victory and those who'd cautiously stayed out of action, and now it had proved successful, were itching to identify themselves with it. The townsmen were hovering at their elbows, volubly congratulatory in hope of free drinks.

Deadline Extended For Disabled Vets To Apply For Grant

The deadline for eligible disabled veterans to apply for a Government grant toward the purchase of an automobile or other conveyance has been extended for two years under a new law signed by the President.

Eligible veterans now have until October 29, 1956 or five years after discharge or separation, whichever was later.

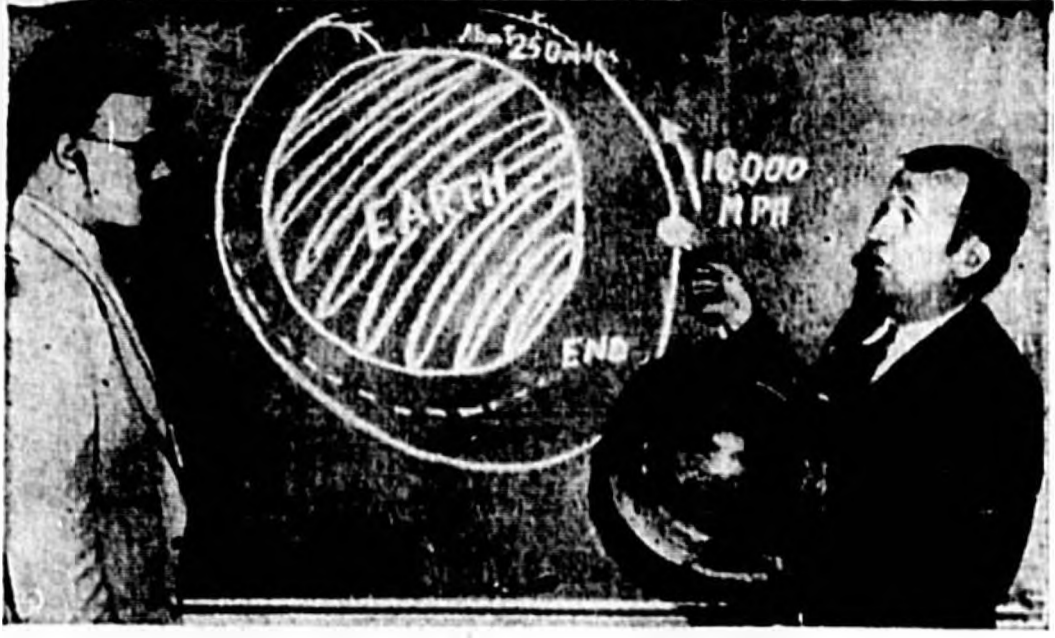

1. Those whose qualifying disability occurs subsequent to discharge or separation. This group of veterans has three years after the disability occurs in which to apply.

2. Those whose qualifying disability was not adjudicated to be service-connected until long after discharge or perhaps after the basic time for filing. This group of veterans has one year after the disability has been declared service-connected in which to file.

VA is authorized by law to make a payment not to exceed $1,500 toward the price of an automobile or other conveyance, including special appliances, to World War II and Korean conflict veterans entitled to compensation for three types of disabilities:

1. Loss or permanent loss of use of one or both feet.
2. Loss or permanent loss of use of one or both hands.

Coming To U. S. Worth Hardship

MIDLAND, Tex., (AP)—Outside the motel office the sun beat down. Inside, a little girl bounced a ball and picked up jacks. Her mother sat nearby in a wicker chair.

"Was it worth the loss of my leg to come to America?" The mother said, echoing a question. "Of course it was. Of course."

She was Mrs. Gesa Kapus, a pleasant dark-haired woman of 34. Two years ago, she and her husband and daughter fled across a Communist border in Europe. They escaped a fusillade of bullets, but a land mine tore off the mother's leg.

Her husband, an attorney, said: "We left misery behind. In this country, people can look forward to tomorrow."

On the floor, eight-year-old Eva Maria, with dancing brown eyes, sang "Davy Crockett."

"We live with my sister who operates this motel," Mrs. Kapus said. "When the doorbell rings at midnight, it isn't the secret police—it's just somebody wanting to room."

"We don't dream any more of the secret police, either. Instead we dream of luxuries like air conditioning, washing machines and refrigeration."

The escape of the Kapus family from Communist Hungary became a celebrated case. The three came to the United States July 20, 1954, and the next month they called on President Eisenhower at the White House and appeared before the U. S. Senate.

And after that?

"We have settled in Midland with a most secure feeling," Mrs. Kapus said. "We have a car and we will own it in another few months and hope to have a home some day, a small one we can take care of ourselves."

After six operations, Mrs. Kapus is learning to walk again, with an artificial leg.

Kapus was commercial manager in Budapest of an aluminum and filing company. But in 1951, in a period of only two months, the Reds moved some 80,000 persons out of Budapest to make room for "loyal" members of the Communist Party.

The Kapus family was deported to Vámos Györök, a remote village in east Hungary and ordered never to leave the city limits.

Kapus turned to manual labor to support his family. His wages amounted to 15 cents per day.

"It was a terrible starvation existence," Mrs. Kapus remembers. "The farm people of the village were miserable; they never had anything of their own. They had to work for nothing because they were forced to sell everything to the Communist government.

"We were living from day to day," her husband explained. "It was a terrible feeling, a feeling of no future—no future for us or Eva Maria. We decided to risk escape from the country. We knew the terrible dangers but we were convinced death was more attractive than life under Communist rule."

The forbidden frontier for those who live under Europe's Communist regimes is 3,000 miles long, stretching from the Baltic to the Black Sea. Restricted zones at least five miles deep run grimly along this frontier, heavily guarded and patrolled by Communist mobile border police.

Then comes a narrower, even more hazardous strip. It is about two miles deep, immediately adjoining the border. This territory is dotted with watchtowers. Trained dogs accompany guards who patrol the two-mile zones. The guards have orders to shoot on sight.

The borders themselves are blocked off with electrically charged barbed wire equipped with signal devices which set off alarms if trigger devices land mines. In some places the Reds have dug pits 20 to 30 feet deep, camouflaged by overgrowth.

The Kapus family knew all this. But on the night of July 13, 1953 they made their break.

No bullets hit the three, but a mine exploded, horribly mangled Mrs. Kapus' leg. Kapus can remember hurling his little daughter over the barbed wire. Then he dragged his wife the few remaining yards. She lay bleeding in a cornfield and the husband desperately attempted medical aid.

It was 26 hours after the explosion before a cart carried Mrs. Kapus into the American sector of Vienna and to a hospital.

"She was more dead than alive by that time," Kapus said. "It is indeed a miracle she is still with us."

She was in the hospital a year. For a time 40-year-old Kapus worked as a truck driver, until a bout with pneumonia last winter. Then he found employment at the Midland Air Terminal and made extra money as a part-time fireman. Now he's an accountant with an oil company.

HOPE FOR RECORD

COLUMBUS, Ky. (AP)—Antonin Abernolds, 37-year-old Argentine swimmer, hopes to set a Mississippi River endurance record late today.

Abernolds last was reported at this Kentucky town not far south of Cairo, Ill., yesterday. He had covered some 200 miles.

He left St. Louis at 9:45 a.m. Saturday and planned to complete the swim to Cottonwood Point, Mo., a distance of 300 miles, by late today.

In the past year, about a million people have received certificates in the American Red Cross water safety program.

Screen Actors Set Strike By Those In Filmed Video

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—The Screen Actors Guild has set Friday for the start of a strike by all actors in filmed television shows.

A spokesman for the guild said that 40 weekly TV series are now shooting in New York and Hollywood. John L. Daley, the group's executive secretary, said that 95.3 per cent of the membership authorized the strike.

"The principal issue . . ." he said yesterday, "is the refusal of the producers of filmed television programs to agree to make any residual payments whatsoever to actors for the second run of a video film."

The three-year contract which expired last week gives actors payment on the third to sixth runs, inclusive, in addition to the original showing.

LORETTA YOUNG SOBER

OJAL, Calif. (AP)—Actress Loretta Young was resting at home today after a 24-month stay at a nearby Oxnard Hospital, where she underwent surgery for peritonitis and abdominal adhesions.

Her husband Tom Lewis said they plan a long rest in Hawaii when she is strong enough to travel. She will not resume her television career until after the first of the year, he said.

Falls Come Naturally

It takes a river and a rock to make a waterfall—a mighty river, and a mighty shelving of rock. If it is to be such as Niagara. There is a third element—time.

At rare moments over the centuries, the river takes a huge bite of the rock and sends it thundering into the gorge. That happened at Niagara a few months ago, altering the way the plunging waters had looked to generations of honeymooners.

BRONX MARY DANN, 2, of the Bronx, N. Y., appears to have taken another "bath" as she stands in a drinking fountain in Central Park in an effort to keep cool in the second heat wave.
