By R. J. SCOTT

NEW YORK-The big town had a few uneasy moments a couple of weeks ago. The word was out that Edward Condon, Esq., was fighting for his life in one of the city's hospitals-or 'one of those sawbones joints" as the great man himself would put it—and pretty nearly every-body held their breath. However, after a couple of days, the chart on the end of his bed began looking considerably less seggy and somewhat more siggy and it wasn't long before the great man was sitting up and calling for his customery quota of warm ale, which is what he drinks when he's on the wagon.

By this time, Eddie Condon is just about accepted as one of New York's landmarks. He is a saloon owner and a guitar player, a remarkable combination because there rarely is a tavern proprietor who has any feeling for the higher things in life and, paradoxically, rarely is there a musician who has any feeling for a

A real musician, I mean. Crooners and piano-playing band-leaders who put on funny hats, or, like Vaughan Monroe, football suits, are always reasonably sure of which side their bread is buttered on. But to men who play music with guts, as jazz musicians have labeled it somewhat indelicately, a bank is just a place to come when you want to use ink and a blotter.

A little over 25 years ago, give or take a few, Eddie began adult life as a banjo player with a bunch of fellow students from Chicago's Austin high school. He has detailed some of the more pertinent facts about that phase of his career, in his autobiography, We Called It Music, but actually it seems to have been a period lived in a haze of alcohol and hot jazz.

Musicians like Louis Armstrong and Earl Rines were the idols of the Austin high bunch, and they lived a thoroughly disreputable life while following in the footsteps of such as those. Late hours, had liquor, no sleep-and always the elusive, inexpressable, wonderfully irritating search for the good music. Men Re Gene Krupa, Peewee Russell, Benny Goodman and a dozen others, greeting the dawn by blowing up a storm of blues-Tin

EDDIE TURNED FROM BANJO TO GUITAR somewhere along the line and he Arst began to achieve a certain pleasant notoriety here in New York during the early Thirties when he led a band in Nick's restaurant on dewntown Seventh avenue. The owner, logically called Nick, used to fire Eddie regularly each week and then hire him back again. It seems that Slick, as Mr. Condon was known to the inner circle, would wander down the atreet to Julius' saloon for a beer between sets, and forget to

This infuriated Nick, for no reason at all, but Eddie would placate him by letting him ait in when the boys were belting out Dinah or Ida. Nick played very bad, if earnest, plano. The thing that set Blick apart from his fellow jazzmen was his determination to make the public like his particular kind of jazz, known to the trade as Dixieland. And, likely, to make himself a little money out of it, too. Re began running jaza concerts in Town and Carnegie Halls, he latched on to radio programs and he spread the gospel from the Village to Van Cortlandt Park. I remember sitting with him one affernoon in the kitchen of drummer George Wettling's spartment in midtown and arguing that he was on the wrong track, that he was beating his head against a stone wall.

7 As an old jazz afficionado, I long have been of the wistful and sed opinion that it is a kind of music without mass appeal. I still think I am dead right, but Eddle shook his head stubbornly, that in Wettling's kitches while he had a bottle of beer to his

ONE WAY, AT LEAST, he proved himself right. He Mick's a few years ago and started his own night club down in the Village under the name Eddle Condon's.

He surrounded himself with his Dixieland musicians and they played the old, gutsy music in their customary energetic style, which, while not exactly on the same shelf with Armstrong's and Mines', was of considerably higher stature than, say, Vaughan

The place caught on. Debutantes and men about town began dropping in there, and since they are the kind of people who have the kind of money to keep that kind of joint open, Eddie Condon's

A great many of them, true, are a little bewildered by the music for which you must acquire a taste, like pot cheese-but because It is the place to go, they go.

Now, Mr. Condon is on television and he has his club operating full blast and he is recovering from surgery. He could sak for little more—but we can ask one thing of him. For years, one school of thought has claimed that Eddie's reluctance to take guitar soloe when playing with his ensemble is merely a cover-up for the sold fact that the strings in his git-hox are rubber and do not make any sound. So we ask, say it isn't so, Blick.

Watkins of Utah would read something like this: The United States promises mothing, is bound by no agreement. If the Russians overrun any co-signer of the Atlantic pact, we shall consider what to do, and take our time about it. Before we render military aid, Senator Watkins would stipulate that we could extend no military sid to an invaded country without the specific authorisation of Congress delivered in advance.

So far comments of his colleagues on this method of killing the treaty have ranged from disapproval to dismay and disgust. If we ever adopt such a proposal, the other signing countries might as well withdraw from the treaty now and make what terms with Russia they could.

In 1919 the plan of killing a treaty by Senate reserva-tions worked perfectly. Fortunately this is 1949, when most of the United States has profited from experience.

King Without Capital

The Indochinese state of Viet-Nam now has an emperor, officially blessed by the French and granted by them a certain degree of discretion in internal affairs. But the emperor, Bao Dai, who once abdicated a similar throne, had to start his new reign outside his capital. The capital city of Hue, in Annam, has been in the hands of rebellious Nationalists who have installed a president, Ho Chi Minh, neither asking nor receiving the blessing of the French.

Why did not the French make a deal with the National-

Saving Windows

Window breakage is a problem for most schools and other public and private buildings located where children habitually play in large groups. Chicago offers no exception; there broken windows in the public school buildings have been counted in the thousands each month.

After years of preaching on the subject, school administrators got pupils interested in taking over the job of conservation. They devised their own protective organization and methods. They eliminated ball-playing within range of unprotected windows and cleared school grounds of loose stones which might prove tempting.

Over a five-month period taken for comparison, breakage was reduced by twenty percent. Sometimes it takes fire to fight fire, and it takes an active boy to stop another active boy from breaking a window.

$11 Millions To Be Invested At Miami's Airport

New Hotel, Shops And Runways To Be Constructed By 1952

MIAMI, July 7—(AP)—Miami's International Airport, already one of the biggest and busiest in the world, has embarked on an improvement and expansion program to cost $11,000,000.

The airport, second only to New Yerk's La Guardia field as an international port of entry, handles nearly a million passengers a year.

It covers 2,500 seres, includes 384 buildings and employs 18,221 persons. There are 12 regularly scheduled sir lines and 34 non-scheduled lines.

First step in the improvement program is removed of Seaboard Air Line Railroad tracks in the vicinity, at a cost of $5,000,000. A. B. Curry. director of the port authority, said other projects include a $3,000,000 terminal building and a $2,000,000 hetel, complete with swimming pool and shops for the convenience of air travelers.

These will be followed by another $3,000,000 to be spent on new runways, ramps and taxi ways by 1952.

The present installation is valued at $80,000,000. Air lines pour $60,000,000 yearly into the area in payrolls, plus $26,000,000 in purchases. Travelers stopping over leave another $20,000,000, Curry estimated.

Last year 958,598 passengers arrived or departed. Of these, 450,000 were international passengers, many of them top-ranking diplomats traveling between the Americas. While English is the prevailing language, Spanish is almost as common. Signs in restaurants, shops, rest rooms and other facilities appear in both languages. It is not unusual to
