Such was the jolly Yuletide "greetings" old Braves' fans received Wednesday from National League President Warren Glies and Commissioner Ford Frick in a disposition in connection with the State of wisconsin's anti-trust suit against the Braves and the National League.

Kasavubus have fallen, one name has remained constant and almost unnoticed in the chaotic five years of Congo independence.

The name is that of Gen. Joseph Mobutu, who at one time or another has been associated with each of the three named above.

As a member of the national movement prior to independence he worked long and faithfully with Lumumbs, who was to become the Congo's first premier.

Later he broke with the constant and Kasavubu underestimated him in their own developing power struggle.

At any rate, both suddenly found themselves on the outside looking in on a Mobutu direction of a Mobutu direction of presidential authority in the Congo.

Mobutu did it by the simple process of announcing that he had deposed Kasavubu, had cancelled next spring's unscheduled election and would himself serve as president for the next five years.

But Assavubu underestimated him in their own developing power struggle.

Kasavubu, apparently fear-ful of Tshombe's power in the coming elections, had fired Tshombe as premier in October. Thereafter, in a show of political strength in parliament, Tshombe successfully had blocked Kasavubu's efforts to name a new premier. Vote buying freely was charged by both sides.

The quarrel did little to enthance Congolese prestige.
