Koosman Wins Comeback Award

NEW YORK (UPI) — Jerry Koosman has proved you can indeed go home again. The 35-year-old lefthander, traded to the Minnesota Twins by the New York Mets last winter so he could be closer to his Victoria, Minn., home, responded by winning 20 games, after posting just three victories for New York last year.

was named the American League's Comeback Player of the Year by the United Press International. He received 31 votes from the 30 UPI baseball correspondents who participated in the balloting, to easily outdistance second baseman Bobby Grich of the California Angels.

Koosman, who posted a 20-13 record after going only 3-15 in 1978, credited his being close to home for turning him into a winning pitcher again. "I think the comfortment of playing with the Twins was the most satisfying aspect of last season," said Koosman, a 21-game winner for the Mets in 1978. "We had an excellent ballclub. Personally, one guy who was better than the next to be around and playing at home made my summer go by a lot faster and also certainly was more enjoyable than being away from home."

Gardening Ornamental Plants, Citrus Need Winter Protection

Cold weather in central Florida usually is not severe, but from time to time temperatures drop low enough to injure our tropical and tender ornamental plants.

There are several factors which influence the susceptibility of ornamental plants to cold injury: severity and duration of the cold; rate of their growth; species, age and vigor of the plant; amount of protection; and site factors such as soil drainage and amount of shade.

Try to follow these guidelines for protecting ornamental plants and citrus trees from cold damage: (1) Put potted plants inside or under the protection of a porch...

How new Watt-Wise Living homes save up to 25% on electricity.

EXAMPLE 3:

The Water Heater.

What makes a Watt-Wise™ home a Watt-Wise home? A properly insulated water heater, for one thing.

Because your water heater can account for 18 to 20% of your monthly electric bill, it is often the second largest user of energy in the home.

That's why you'll find properly insulated water heaters in new Watt-Wise homes, and Waste Heat Recovery Systems or Solar Water Heating in many of them.

With a Heat Recovery Unit (HRLU), the heat drawn out of your air conditioner is captured and fed into your water heater. This provides an annual savings of from 50 to 70% on water heating costs. A Solar Water Heater, using energy from the sun, can provide 50 to 70% of your hot water needs.

Our Watt-Wise standards recommend that the water heater be insulated to a value of at least R-8, (of course the higher the R value, the better the insulation).

But a properly insulated water heater is just one of the many features of a Watt-Wise home. Others can include a higher-efficiency air conditioner, proper insulation, treated glass and more efficient appliances.

Ask your builder to show you how a certified Watt-Wise home can save you up to 25% on electricity. Or pick up a Watt-Wise Living Guide at your RFL office.

Text and photos by Tom Netsel

'It's a hard craft. If you make a mistake, you have to start over. It's not like clay. A large piece can be very frustrating... and expensive.'

The Art Of Making Stained Glass

When stained glass is mentioned it usually brings to mind ornate cathedral windows created by artisans from a by-gone era, but — as the saying goes — it ain't necessarily so.

Some very modern people from various walks of life have taken up this art form as a hobby and are using the pieces they create to add a personal touch to their home or office decor.

"First you make a pattern," explained McNamara, an ex-funeral director who sold his business and decided to do something else in life. "You draw it out, then select the color of glass that best fits the design that you want: leaves green, trees brown."

With the glass on top of the pattern, a glass cutter is used to trace the outline, cutting the glass to shape.

"You cut it out like a puzzle," said McNamara, "then wrap the edges of each piece with copper foil that has an adhesive back like Scotch tape."

The foil-wrapped pieces of the glass puzzle are assembled on the pattern and soldered together. "This is called the copper foil technique."

Though simple in theory, McNamara explained it can be very frustrating. "It's a hard craft. If you make a mistake, you have to start over. It's not like clay. A large piece can be very frustrating... and expensive."

He said it costs about $7 a square foot for the materials, if the person knows what he is doing and does not make too many mistakes.

Rene Venable of Winter Park was making a crest with the family initial for her parents' door. Longwood's Roland Seidel was working on a sailing scene, and Sanford's Judy Schabacker was starting another piece used to decorate her husband's recording studio in Orlando.

Not a cathedral window in the bunch.

Herb Berke says he often winds up breaking more glass than it's worth.

Roland Seidel grinds the rough edge from a piece of glass used in sailing scene.

TV Writer Learned Trade On Streets

By DICK KLEINER

HOLLYWOOD — Tom Nembly is writing scripts these days. Scripts about crime for movies, for television. Chances are, however, that none of them will come close to being as exciting as his own life.

Nembly is an ex-con. He took part in the 1971 uprising at New York's Attica prison. It was called a "rebellion" but he objects to that terminology and says it happened more by accident than by planning.

He admits that he was a criminal.

"I grew up hustling," Nembly says. "I did what I had to do to stay alive, to survive. That's my thing — survival. I'm still a survivor. If for any reason this writing fell apart, I would go back to New York and start hustling again."

He says that in New York, beginning when he was very young, he was in loan sharking, worked the prostitution racket, shot people, stabbed people.

"I've done it all," he says. He says it in a flat tone, no bragging but no remorse either. It just happened because that was the way things were in that place at that time.

He went to prison, first for kidnap him from Attica. He says it in a flat tone, no bragging but no remorse either. It just happened because that was the way things were in that place at that time.

Later, others reviewing his case realized there were discrepancies and he was freed. By that time, he had begun writing.

Tom Nembly had never gone to school long enough to learn how to read or write. But one day in prison the library truck came through and dropped off a book at his cell, a book called "Wisdom and Fructose."

"I picked it up," he says, "and I could read it."

Later, when he had some minimal freedom, he sat down one day at a prison typewriter and found that he knew how to type, too. As an experiment, he wrote a long letter to his family, a letter in which he told about his life.

Eventually, one of his lawyers read the letter, asked to see more of his writings, encouraged him. He had to undergo more in prison, however, before he was freed to write. There were two years in solitary, two years he survived when his subconscious mind created an out-of-body experience so vivid that it became his reality while prison became only a bad dream.

After his release, he began writing seriously. Today, he writes for such TV shows as "60 Minutes." He has written a book based on his life, "The Longest Night," which his agent is trying to sell. He has written a screenplay based on that book in which Lee Remick will star.

He is writing the true story of Attica, a story he says has not been told. And he has been the Attica Foundation to help convicts make the transition to civilian life.

He lives in a $25,000 home. He drives a Jaguar. He says his business agent is taking all his business away from him.

He would like to see "The Streets of L.A."

High-Fidelity Sound Ahead For Tube

By NORMAN NADEL

NEW YORK — Over the past 30 years the television picture has improved dramatically, but television sound has remained appallingly, distantly, depressingly bad.

Now, finally, the situation is about to improve. So if you'll just keep your fingers crossed — for five years, estimates Joe Schwartz, chief supervisor of television operations for New York station WNYC, or for 10, figures William Anderson, editor of Stereo Review, you'll hear a new, bright, accurate, truly high-fidelity sound.

Listeners to Public Broadcasting Service stations don't have to wait. Already PBS is distributing selected programs in high-fidelity stereo for local simulcasts with cooperating FM radio stations. The service (called DATE, for digital audio for television), permits PBS to transmit four-channel TV sound to over 70 public TV stations equipped with special DATE decoders.

At present, stations with DATE decoders cover 61 percent of U.S. TV households, or about 40 million homes.

By contrast, commercial television hasn't shown the slightest interest in upgrading TV sound. Not, at least, until very recently. The reason, though it sounds like a harsh judgment, is simply that the average person has a tin ear.

Most people sing or whistle off-key. They accept the human voice over their TV sets as accurate, although it is almost invariably distorted in any of several ways. Even those who spend a lot of money on very good stereo recording equipment, let's say with a frequency range of from 30 to 18,000 hertz (cycles per second) keep it adjusted to a top wall under 5,000 hertz — because the muted sound interferes less with conversation, or they just can't hear the difference.

Of course, there are those with superior hearing; they support the stereo industry, the concert, the quality recording. But they've not been interested in television.

Surprisingly, the technical capability for high-fidelity TV sound has been around for years, but lacking the demand, the equipment manufacturers have ignored it. Of the 600 TV sets per more than $25, if that, has gone into the sound system. Not only are the speakers small — about 3 or 4 inches — but they are cheaply made.

To upgrade TV sound in the conventional way would mean better equipment not just in home sets but in studio and transmission equipment. Most TV programs are sent over telephone cables with a top capability of 5,000 hertz, which isn't high fidelity. Cables with 15,000 hertz capability, which is hi-fi, are available, but they're expensive, and besides, there isn't the public demand.

Anderson of Stereo Review is easier on the public. "Only one of our senses can be involved at a time," he says. "If you have the picture, you don't pay much attention to the sound. But once we get high-fidelity TV sound, there will be a demand, because people will become used to it. There will be an excuse for upgrading: of cultural programming, especially."

Of course, with most TV programming, the sound quality isn't important; news, situation comedies, game shows, disasters, sports events, commercials. But add opera, stage and screen musicals, recitals, cabaret acts, ballet, the fine arts — even if these appeal at present to only a minority audience — and the sound becomes vitally important. The outlook is good, primarily due to digital recording, which can and applied to both sound and picture image. For example, to send out a note — a wave length — of 10,000 hertz, requires a transmission cable and other equipment of at least 10,000 hertz capability.

Digital recording changes that sound to code, a series of impulses or numerical values which stand for a certain pitch, loudness, set of overtones, tonal colors, etc. This code can be sent on any cable; it doesn't have to be stereo or high-fidelity.

Then, at the receiving end, the code signal is decoded back into the original sound, with no distortion or static. That's what is coming, and in some applications, is already here.

Meanwhile the manufacturers are getting a new message. A survey sponsored by General Telephone and Electronics reported that 87 percent of the interviewees said they would buy TV sets with stereo sound regardless of price.

The Japanese have experimentally marketed some stereo TVs in Japan, and might test them here. GTE, Magnavox and RCA all are offering models with improved though less than ideal systems, at the top of their lines.

Meanwhile, the best bet is to listen to simulcast on PBS stations, with the TV sound turned off but the picture on, and the stereo sound over the companion FM station. It's makeshift, but it's a good beginning.
