The FBI Position

For more than half his life John Edgar Hoover has served as Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. His dedication to duty, his personal integrity and his keen understanding of the requirements and limits of his job have shaped that organization Into one of the proudest and most able arms of our government.

In a recent interview with Don Whitehead of the Associated Press he answered a number of questions about his experiences and about the philosophy of life which has served him in such good stead.

He has always insisted that the FBI be divorced from politics. Under his direction the bureau has attracted some of the country's finest men and they have been assigned and promoted strictly on their merits. He sees no danger that the FBI will ever adopt gentapo tactics as long as it is staffed with men of character, and public opinion remains alert and informed.

There has never been a scandal in which the FBI was involved. His insistence on the highest moral and ethical standards on the part of the men of the FBI has won the respect of the American people. He has refused to allow the great prestige the FBI enjoys to be used for political purposes.

There has been criticism of Hoover and the FBI. But the critics have never managed to dislodge him from the place he rightfully holds in the esteem of the country which owes him so great a debt. His career has served to define the position that a federal police organization can hold in a democracy.

Highways To Progress

President Eisenhower recently signed a bill which will provide $1,932,000,000 for use in building and maintaining state and federal highways. In signing the measure the President noted that large scale modernica-

You gotta believe! You gotta have faith! And that's what 11year-old Stevie Tsalickis of Tarpon Springs had one day back in 1940 when he was stricken with brain fever

The story is a familiar one along the Tarpon Springs waterfront, and leathery-faced sponge fishermen and divers will shake their heads and whisper "miracle" when they tell you about it. But there's a shrine on a little crooked street in Tarpon Springs today to prove that faith will perform the impossible—if you have it. Little Stevie, son of sponge fisherman Jim Tsalickis and his wife Maria, complained of a headache at school one day. He was sent home and when the pain persisted a doctor was called Little Stevie was rushed to a Tampa hospital where brain experts shook their heads dubiously. An open ation must be performed in the morning. There was pressure on the child's brain, they said.

Stevie's father was somewhere in the Gulf of Mexico fishing for sponges. The doctors advised Ma ria to get him at once, his son's condition was critical. The Coast Guard was called, but reported it would be next to impossible to locate the one boat on which Jim Tsalickis was diving for sponges Besides there were many fleets in the vast Gulf. They were eager to try, however, and in a matter of minutes a big scaplane was dispatched.

And as if a heavenly pilot guided he big plane, it streaked out across the Gulf in a straight line. In an hour it had sighted a fleet of boats. It set down on the water and a sanghy was launched and sent to the nearest boat in the fleet. It was Jim Tsalickis'

Meanwhile in the shaded light of the hospital room, Little Stevie was talking to his mother. "Mama," he said, "I just had a dream. A dream of St. Michael. He said I would be all right in the morning, Mama, but that I would have to build a church in

Maria brushed away a tear as she murmured a faint "Yes," and stroked her son's throbbing

Stevie woke up several times during the night and each time he told his mother of visions of St. Michael. "St. Michael said I would be all right, Mams, but I must build a church in his name."

Maria whispered vague agreement that a church had to be built for St. Michael.

When the doctors came for a last minute examination before the operation they were amazed? Little Stevie was sitting up in bed. His headache had gone! Examination showed the pressure on the brain had subsided. Nonplussed, they allowed Linde Stevic to go home that day. "See, Mama," said Stevie, "St. Michael said I would be all right."

A few days later Servic was playing in a vacant lot next door to his home and, as he explained to Maria, "had another talk with St. Michael.""He told he to build a church in his name, Mama." Maria explained that they were poor people, that they could not build a church. The sponges were not bringing much,

By DONALD R. BRANN

Regardless of when your next vacation starts officially, you can begin to enjoy it almost immediately by building this boat in your space time. The mystery usually associated with boat building has been completely eliminated if you follow the pattern method of construction offered below. On completion the boat will add many pleasant hours of week-end and vacation pleasure.

Being built of ply wood, the boat is light enough to handle easily with a pair of oars, yet its sturdy construction permits using 2 h.p. to 10 h.p. outboard motor.

To simplify building, the patterns list the exact size and length of material needed to cut each part. Full size patterns for nose block transom, frames and other vital parts eliminate the mystery one usually meets when working from blueprints or scale drawings. Each pattern not only provides a template for cutting the part needed, but also indicates the

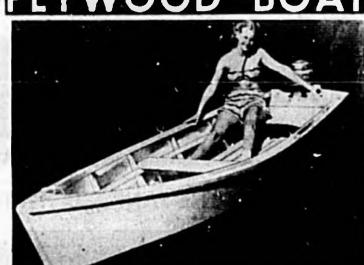

The next day Stevie was playing again in the varant lot when Se. Michael visited him again. Stevie tried to explain that he was poor, that his mother and father were poor. "Start the church," St. Michael told Servie, "and it shall be built."

So Little Stevie found some old bricks and began piling them on top one another in the vacant lot. His mother asked him what he was doing and Stevie told her what Se. Michael had said. Manatold neighbors. They brought more old bricks for Stevic to play

Then the movement began. People passing by saw the boy building a church "for St. MichaciD and heard the story. A newspaper reporter learned of it and wrote an article. People began sending money to "Little Stevie's Shrine." Masons and laborers volunneeded help. By Christmas the church was built. I was in the church the other day. It is small and tidy. There's a picture of Little Stevie, now a big strapping man of 25. And there are the sacred documents of the Greek religion. There are pews for about 30 people, and there are candles to light.

But there is something more in Little Stevie's Shrine to St. Michael. I felt it immediately as I entered the door. It's an unexplainable something -as uncuplanable as the whole St. Michael miracle. It makes you realize that certainly if an 11-year-old boy can "believe," you can "believe," too!

Soften plywood with hot water if bending trouble is encountered.

Plank sides, trimming evenly at chimes and transom. Glue and screw-fasten, as before. Use 1 4-inch screws along the clamp. Trim all joints evenly. Cover exposed plywood edges at the stem with 1%inch-by-H-inch plywood, screw-fastened.

Screw-fasten 1%-inch skeg to keel aft. Remove boat from frame, and insert ribs from keel to chine, using 14-inch galvanized shingle nails. Nail from outside, clinch inside

Form transom knees and breast hook. Screw-fasten into place. Remove moulded frames. Insert seat risers, screwing from the outside. Seats, cut from 4-inch-by-4-inch stock, are screwed into place. Cut seat knees and mouldings, fasten into place. Screw Winch plywood strips to ribs for flooring
