The State Auditor General's audit of the 18th Judicial Circuit which criticized billing procedures in the circuit court reporter's office also gave low marks to then Public Defender Frank Kelley's office for record-keeping practices. Kelley serves as an assistant public defender.

Postal Service

Transfusion_

Despite increasing intrusions by the federal government into our daily lives, the Postal Service remains the most intimate contact we have with Washington.

Of course, this is not an altogether felicitous relationship.

Postal service seems to decline in direct proportion to rising postal rates. The inefficiency, and sometimes the insolence, that we encounter in mail service is said to be the most persuasive national argument against any form of socialism. Widespread citizen dissatisfaction with the U.S. Post Office finally prompted Congress in 1970 to reorganize the mails.

The reform took the shape of a quasi-independent Postal Service, which removed postmasters from political patronage; Congress and the White House abdicated direct control to a nine-member Board of Governors appointed by the president, which in turn named the postmaster general.

Purged of politics, the new Postal Service was supposed to be more efficient and theoretically, self-sufficient. Still, Congress agreed to bail it out of financial trouble if necessary.

The grand experiment has been a grand flop. In practice, the U.S. Postal Service became a quasiofficial hybrid - neither government nor private enterprise, and in fact, it exhibited the worst features of both without the offsetting advantages of either.

Removal from politics made it unresponsive to public needs, let alone complaints; letters to congressmen have meant nothing because Congress is out of the picture, except at bail-out time. Meanwhile, mail service has become increasingly inefficient and costly.

The new Postal Service may, have been foredoomed from the beginning because the Postal Reorganization Act granted postal workers the right of collective bargaining.

After initial strikes and walkouts, the Postal Service has brought peace with its unions through a series of too-generous pay hikes; U.S. postal workers, on the average, are paid one-third more than comparable workers in the private sector.

The amount by which postal wage rates exceed general pay levels in the private sector total $2 billion a year, according to Douglas Adie, Ohio University economist and an authority on this

It is worth noting that this excessive salary igure accounts for all and more of the annual $1.5 billion postal deficit that the taxpayers must make

The Postal Service's reponse to its huge deficit is not to tighten its belt; its announced policy is to increase the cost of a first-class stamp from 13 to 15 cents and to reduce service - specifically to cut out mail delivery on Saturdays.

No one was surprised, therefore, when a bill sailed through the House of Representatives the other day that would dismantle major provisions of the 1970 law and give Congress veto power over any service cutbacks, including post office closings.

The effect of this would be to make the Postal Service more sensitive to public and congressional Obviously, this would mean the virtual end of whatever independence the Board of Governors has been able to claim since 1970.

But, even if the Senate buys the House's postal overhaul, it may face a presidential veto as the White House has already signified its opposition. In any event, the Congress and the president clearly need to come to grips with the nation's growing postal problems.

The 1970 reorganization is a costly failure that defies piecemeal congressional tinkering. Ultimately, there would seem to be two alter-

Whether the mails should revert again to complete government control and greater public accountability, or be challenged by private mailcarrying enterprise, which would give the people a choice of service.

Considering the condition of our Postal Service, one wonders what we could lose by giving our mails a little transfusion of private enterprise.

In politics, you win some and you lose some. But one thing is for sure, politicians never forget. Well, that isn't quite true. Politicians often forget those who have done them a good turn. They never forget, nowever, those who have made remarks publicly that insulted or embarrassed and those who have worked against them on a project or in an election.

It seems that Sen. Dan Scarborough of Jacksonville submitted legislation to permit the conversion of the Seminale Harness Raceway in Camelberry into a greyhound racing track. At that same meeting, Mayor Norman Floyd of Altamonte Springs suggested to French that he try to get his colleagues to deposit in the Council's account the $30,000 earmarked for retaining a consultant to study garbage disposal

"Do you have an alternative suggestion if that doesn't fly?" asked French. Meanwhile a beleaguered French pointed out that he was elected by the people in both the cities and the unincorporated areas. A city delegate told him he was glad to know that French realized he is supposed to represent city residents.

Premier Aldo Moro was found in a car outside

Police said the body of Moro, kidnapped 55 days ago by Red Brigades terrorists, was found in a red Renault R4 automobile just off the Street of the Dark Shops, site of Communist headquarters.

Detectives said the body was noted by passersby on the back seat of the car wrapped in several blankets.

The site where the body of the 61-year-old political leader was found is one block from the headquarters of Moro's ruling Christian

A Red Brigades commando team kidnapped More and killed his five bodyguards in a daring daylight attack March 16. The kidnapping sparked the biggest manhunt in Italian history.

On April 15, the gang announced that its "people's court" had found More guilty of "crimes against the proletariat" and had sentenced him to death.

Three days later a communique, apparently from the gang, announced that Moro had been executed and his body dumped in tiny Duchess Lake in the snowbound moun tains northeast of Rome. Hundreds of police, frogmen and alpine roops searched the frusen lake for two days before the Red Brigades themselves called off the searching, terming the "body in the lake communique a "government fake."

The gang, in its first ultimatum, gave the overnment until April 22 to release 13 jailed comrades in exchange for Moro. The government refused, adopting a hardline, no deals attitude despite repeated ap-

Television newscasters wept as they announced Moro's death in a special broadcast. A soft-spoken man, Moro served five times as Italy's prime minister, five times as foreign minister and once as Christian Democratic Party leader. He was considered the prime candidate to replace Italian President Giovanni Leone when his term ends next December. Born in Lecce, Sept. 23, 1916, Moro studied and taught criminal law. He was elected to the constituent assembly in 1946 and was one of the 75 men who wrote Italy's present constitution Elected to Partiament in 1948, Moro quickly rose through the ranks of the Christian Democratic Party as justice minister, education minister and, in 1959, party secretary.

By 1963, the party was firmly under his control and he had won his first premiership bringing the Socialists into power with his Christian Democrats for the start of a long experiment with the Center-Left Formula He stayed in power until 1968, heading three

'Crash, Bang'--3 Killed, 58 Saved As Jet Goes Down

PENSACOLA, Fla. (UPI) - A National Airlines 727 etliner crash-landed in Escambia Bay Monday night sending tile 61 persons aboard screaming and hollering into murky waters shrouded by rolling patches of fog. knew: crash, bang, the lights went out," said passenger Tom Holmes, 37, a private pilot from Pensacola. The cause of the crash could not be determined immediately. National Transportation Safety Board inspectors were flown to the scene to open an investigation. The plane, National's flight 193 from Miami to New Orleans to Pensacola, crashed at 9:21 p.m. (CDT) while preparing to land. It hit the water about three miles off Garcon Point and six miles short of the airport runway. The craft sank slowly in 13-feet deep water and at daylight most of the top of the plane, nose up, was visible. At the time of the crash, the Federal Aviation Administration listed a 466-foot overcast with visibility at our miles and a light fog. FAA spokesman Jack Barker of Atlanta said the plane was making a radar surveillance screen as it smacked into the bay. However, dense banks of fog rolling intermittently across the bay hampered rescue efforts and the search for Five Coast Guard boats and dozens of private craft converged on the scene, lighted by searchlight-carrying helicopters, for the rescue. But it was a nearby tugbon and barge which probably accounted for the low loss of life. They wedged alongside the sinking plane and partially held it affoat so those aboard could get out. "I couldn't believe it when I looked up and just a couple of hundred feet away was a barge," said passenger Dale Dubois, 44, of Clearwater, Fla. "The men on the barge See JET CRASH, Page 24
