Information sought in murder

LAKE MARY — A young Lake Mary man was gunned down as he was riding his bike on Lake Mary Boulevard and police are still without a suspect and without a motive.

David Huffstutler, 19, was riding his bicycle on the north side of Lake Mary Boulevard in the westbound lane about 7:10 p.m. on Jan. 18. Just as he was crossing West Ridge Drive, about one-half mile west of 17-92 near Bayhead Center, he was shot to death.

There were some people playing tennis nearby who heard gun shots and went to investigate. They found David staggering across Lake Mary Boulevard. As he reached the side of the road, he collapsed and for all practical purposes, died at the scene. An earlier suspect vehicle with Missouri tags was located and it was determined that they had nothing to do with the shooting.

If you know who did, call CRIMELINE at 423-TIPS or toll free at 1-800-423-TIPS. You'll be eligible for a reward of up to $1,000 and you won't have to give your name — all we want is information.

No lead on stabbing victim

WINTER SPRINGS — A 65-year old man was found murdered in his Winter Springs home on April 18, 1990. The autopsy revealed that the man had been stabbed more than 80 times.

Wilburn Castle, who lived alone at 7 North Edgemon Ave., was killed between 8 a.m. and noon that Wednesday, apparently by someone he knew since there were no signs of forced entry. The only known motive, at this time, is robbery since Mr. Castle's pants pockets were found turned inside out.

The victim, who was retired but worked part-time as a caretaker at the Highlands subdivision, was very well liked and had befriended many of the teenagers who lived in the area. In fact, it was two 17-year-old girls who found Castle's body when they came to check on him.

If you have any information about this crime or any unsolved crime, call CRIMELINE at 423-TIPS or toll free at 1-800-423-TIPS. You'll be eligible for a reward of up to $1,000, and you won't have to give your name—all we want is your information.

Drug dogs sniff schools

Students, officials comment on county plan

By VICKI DeSORMIER

SANFORD — The Seminole County school district wants students to know they are serious about keeping campuses drug free.

The school district's safety department has proposed that drug sniffing dogs be brought to each of the high schools on a random basis to see if there are drugs in lockers, cars or bookbags. "We are just in the early operational stages of

"We want to do maybe a bank of lockers and go. We're talking about being on campus five or 10 minutes."

doing this," said safety director George Proechel. "We haven't made the specific plans yet."

Seminole will be the second district in the state and the 16th in the nation to use dogs to discourage illegal drug activity, according to the National School Board Association in Virginia.

In Lee County on Florida's southwest coast, dogs have searched cars, lockers, classrooms and open areas on high school campuses for two years.

Zoo home to endangered small cats with ferocious reputation

By NICK PFREIFAU

SANFORD — Two new felines have moved to Sanford. The male and female Black-footed cats reside at the Central Florida Zoological Park.

Public Relations Manager Andrea Farmer said people shouldn't expect to come to the zoo and pet them. She said, "They are opportunistic predators consuming a variety of insects, rodents, birds and mammals. These small cats may be very ferocious and have been observed taking prey larger than they are."

She added that they weigh only three to seven pounds, and are only 14 to 16 inches in length.

The two animals actually arrived at the zoo several weeks ago, but have only now been put out for public viewing.

The female, born May 14, 1989, was provided to the zoo by the Lulac Foundation of Gainesville, an animal preservation organization. The male, born March 4, 1988, was supplied by the San Diego, California zoo.

"They are native to southern Africa," Farmer said. "They weigh less than an adult domestic cat. They

UPS, union battle over package weight limit

By SANDRA ELLIOTT

SANFORD — Talks are continuing between the Teamsters Union and United Parcel Service over the parcel delivery company's insistence that its drivers lift packages weighing as much as 150 pounds.

On Tuesday at an AFL-CIO executive council meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla., Teamsters officials said they would file a federal complaint over the new package weight limits which went into effect Feb. 7.

UPS spokesman Bob Kenney said from the company's Atlanta headquarters late Wednesday afternoon, a meeting between Teamsters and company officials, comprising a health and safety committee, did not take place as scheduled in Washington, D.C. Another meeting of the committee is scheduled today, Kenney said.

The Teamsters Union planned to file a complaint with the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA).

The action would be the latest turn in a bitter struggle between the union and UPS over the company's decision to more than double its package weight limit from 70 pounds. The company's move led the Teamsters to call a one-day strike on Feb. 7. UPS retaliated by filing a $50 million federal lawsuit

Grant would aid Crooms' job training

SANFORD — If a federal grant is approved, Crooms School of Choice may be involved in an expanded vocational planning curriculum. A grant of $600,000 has been requested for a Community Education Employment Center.

"This will be a school-to-work transition program," said school board grant writer Jeanne Moon. "It is designed to help students obtain gainful employment after school, especially those who don't plan to continue into college."

"While it would eventually apply to the ninth through 12th graders, we would start at the ninth grade level the first year," she added.

If the total amount of money is awarded, it would be used to pay the salary of a project manager, career counselor, and four teachers. "The school board would then have to add an additional four teachers for the program," Moon said.

"At the beginning, most of the special course work would deal with studying various types of professions, but we are looking at starting with possibly 120 students," Moon explained. "Eventually, it will be expanded to the LAKE MARY — Return this weekend to the past in order to help those in the present.

A unique fund-raising event on Saturday and Sunday will benefit organizations ranging from the AIDS Resource Alliance to the YMCA.

The Central Florida Renaissance Festival will bring the 14th and 15th centuries vividly to life among the trees and open fields of L&L Acres Ranch at the intersection of Interstate 4 and Lake Mary Boulevard in Heathrow.

"We wanted to create a festival that would make it easy for people to show how much they care for others while still having a good time," Shawn Smith, president of the board of directors of Central Florida Festivals said.

The idea for the festival evolved from a desire by the Altamonte-South Seminole Jaycees to raise money for the many community help and service organizations that group assists.

"It started from there and grew and grew," Smith said.

He said that once the project seemed too big to be confined to just the Jaycees, a group of organizers incorporated to put the event together. "The idea of a Renaissance festival sounded fun," Smith said.

Indeed, Renaissance festivals are popular diversions across the country, drawing thousands

Bomb threat hoax at elementary school

By SANDRA ELLIOTT
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Students arriving early this morning at Goldsboro Elementary School were kept outside while Sanford police and firemen searched the area after a bomb threat was telephoned to the school. No bombs were found after a total sweep of the school and classes opened on schedule.

George Proechel, chief of security for Seminole County schools, said a male caller with a "real quiet, whisper-type voice" telephoned about 8 a.m. and told a receptionist two bombs were planted at the school.

"We called 9-1-1 and cleared the school," Proechel said. "The police came. The fire department came. We've done a search of the school, and everything's back to normal."

Goldsboro classes begin at 8:40 a.m., but students sometimes begin arriving about 8:15 a.m. Students were singing a song which begins their day around 8:45 a.m.

"Nothing was found and we're trying to get things back to normal," Proechel commented. He said some parents dropping off students might have been turned away from the school during the early morning search, but classes opened on schedule.

"There may have been some fire department people turning cars away while everybody was here," Proechel said. "But school's in. As a matter of fact you can hear the kids doing their 'Good Morning' song."

Proechel said officials could not determine the age of the caller. "We don't feel it was an elementary school child," he added. "All he said was, 'There are two bombs in the school.'"

Burglary suspect nabbed

SANFORD — James Anthony Bradley, 30, appears to have confusing home addresses, but he is presently located in the John E. Polk Correctional Facility.

Bradley was located by sheriff's deputies early Tuesday, at the Central Florida Regional Hospital, where he was served a Seminole County writ of bodily attachment. He was then taken to jail.

Since he has been confined, deputies have charged him in connection with two separate burglaries.

On Jan. 29, Bradley reportedly removed an estimated $300 from a residence at 2444 Center Street. At the time, his home address was listed at 2450 21st Street.

On Feb. 6, Bradley allegedly removed a number of items from a residence at 2154 Center Street. Although his home address was listed in the deputy's report as 2154 Center Street, he was also identified as no longer living there.

In the Feb. 6 incident, items taken included a clog, a walkman, cassette tapes and hair clippers, with a total value of under $300.

For the Jan. 29th incident, Bradley was charged with burglary and grand theft.

For the Feb. 6th case, he was charged with residential burglary and petit theft.

Attempt to lure TV show to Florida

By ADAM YEOMANS
Associated Press Writer

TALLAHASSEE — Film industry promoters want to bring a big-budget, prime time TV series from California to Florida, and they want taxpayers to help pay for the move.

The Legislature will be asked to approve spending $500,000 to relocate the TV show "seaQuest DSV" from Los Angeles to Orlando in hopes of convincing producers to make the move, a lawmaker said Wednesday.

"We believe it will be good economic development," said Sen. Ron Silver, who plans to seek the money along with Sen. George Kirkpatrick, D-Gainesville, and chairman of the Senate Rules Committee.

"What a great boon," said Silver, D-North Miami Beach. "TV production is where things are really happening."

The producer of seaQuest is Amblin Entertainment, which is Steven Spielberg's production company. It decided to shoot the one-hour adventure series at Universal Studios in Hollywood last year after Florida made a serious push to attract the show.

The show is set in the early 21st century where a submarine travels the globe. It is one of the most expensive shows produced in Hollywood with each episode costing between $1.5 million and $1.8 million.

After a season of fluctuating ratings, the producers are waiting to hear whether NBC will renew the series for another 22-episode season.

David Burke, the show's executive producer, could not say whether the show would move until the network makes its decision, but he said it would be a financial boon to the state.

"You're dumping $20 million a year into the economy of Florida," Burke said.

If the series left Hollywood, it would move into Universal Studios in Orlando and take advantage of locations throughout the state, Burke said. The show is looking more outdoor locations that have been difficult to reach in California, he said.

If Florida spends $500,000 to defray the cost of moving the show, it wouldn't mean the state would pay the same expenses for any TV series that wanted to come to Florida, said John Reitzammer, executive director of the Florida Entertainment Commission.

"This is an unusual commitment," he said. "But this is a blue water, blue sky kind of show that fits with economic development and tourism."

Reitzammer said he took $500,000 in cash to the producers last year in Hollywood in a symbolic gesture to show the state was serious about luring the show to Florida. He said Gov. Lawton Chiles, who wants the state's film business to reach $1 billion by the next year, supports the financial incentive.

Rape suspect

The Seminole County Sheriff's Department Violent Crimes Section has released a sketch of the suspect in last Sunday's rape of a Deltona woman. The 24-year-old woman reported she was raped at about 11 p.m. Sunday in a wooded area behind The Station, a rock-n-roll nightclub in Fern Park. The suspect is described as a white male, 25 years-old, five feet nine inches tall, 140 pounds, with very long, straight blonde hair, a pock-marked face, very dirty hands, and a New England accent. Anyone with information regarding the identity and/or whereabouts of this suspect is urged to contact the Seminole County Sheriff's office at 330-6650, or the nearest law enforcement agency.

Government and cable TV rates

The government is, once again, ordering cable TV companies to lower their rates. They apparently believe the companies and people they serve are not intelligent enough to handle this problem by themselves.

The government ordered a price cut last year. As a result, some of the costs went down, but others climbed higher than they had been. The government says that there was a public outcry.

As in most situations, there are two sides to the problem. Cable companies may be able to lower their costs, but to do so requires cooperation from every broadcaster carried by the company.

The end result is that some stations asked for higher prices to be paid by the cable companies in order to carry their signals for re-broadcast. Some of those asking for too much money had to be dropped from the cable listings.

Others, which were extremely popular, were often carried, but at a higher cost.

Cablevision of Central Florida/Time Warner tried to reduce costs. They eliminated their monthly charge for remote control units, and made several other changes, including service calls. Yet they admit, prices were forced to go higher for many subscribers.

The other side of the matter concerns the cable TV subscribers. They naturally don't want prices to continue climbing. This holds true in almost every expenditure for the average household, whether it's rent, utility bills, or taxes.

Some people don't want to see their favorite channels dropped. Yet they would not want to pay an additional charge to see them retained.

It may sound like a stand-off. It is not, however.

Contrary to the requirement of paying taxes and other needs, there is an alternative. If a family objects to an increased cost, it can have the cable disconnected. If enough people do this, the cable company will either lower prices, or lose enough income that it must cease operations.

Each side must recognize the problems of the other. Cable TV, and especially the individual stations (network, public or independent) must realize that higher rates can lead to fewer customers and a drastic cut in income.

The people must realize that the local cable companies are trying to maintain their customers, but at the same time continue to earn a profit, as any business should.

It is unfortunate that the government sees fit to barge in and tell a business what it can or cannot charge. Government interference in this will only result in everyone being a loser.

Any merchandise priced too high will eventually not have any buyers. The cable companies know this. The people know it. Both must take appropriate actions, but consider the plight of the other side.

Garbage collection

Commissioner Larry Furlong's position on garbage and trash collection within the unincorporated portion of the county would get my vote in a referendum. Since the county commission decided to fix the former free enterprise system that was not broken, we have had nothing but problems. Why cannot unincorporated residents be trusted to deal directly with refuse collectors and let county commissioners deal with other more important matters?

Whither the information superhighway?

Because I attended a conference about it, I can comment about the much-vaunted "information superhighway." And ask: Is it hype or hope?

First off, I love the new language. Why, if you get on the wire, you'll have 500 channels, thanks to compression. They'll arrive digitally, fiber-based, via a user-friendly black box that combines a PC, an alpha-numeric keyboard, a mouse, a television set and a telephone. That's convergence. The pipe will give you interactive multimedia, with on- and off-ramps, road-kill and covert sticker-shock. In real time, virtually. Got it? The motto is "Click And You Shall Receive."

Many companies are betting that if more "information" is offered, you, the consumer, will pay real money for it, and they will make big profits.

American companies — including phone, cable, computer and movie — love profits. That is one big reason America leads this mega-billion-buck global communications revolution. The other is that the information consumers want — particularly entertainment — is mostly American. The thing might as well be called The Adam Smith Memorial Information Toll Road for American Software, or, in cyber-acro, ASMITRAS.

There are clearly some potentially useful asmitratric products and services involved. A subscriber should get movies on demand, as opposed to going to the video store to rent a cassette. Subscribers should be able to do retail shopping from home, via the Home Shopping Network, but much more so. You may be able to buy your lottery ticket at home. (Your 6-year-old might buy 10,000 tickets!) Lots of games for the kiddies will be available. You will be able to retrieve previously aired television programs, including the steamy soaps.

If you have something to say, or show, you may communicate back to the people who are broadcasting at you. That could lead to telemedicine and make tele-commuting easier.

Will it turn us into a nation of couch potatoes?

Will it turn us into a nation of couch potatoes? Or couch potatoes interactivating?

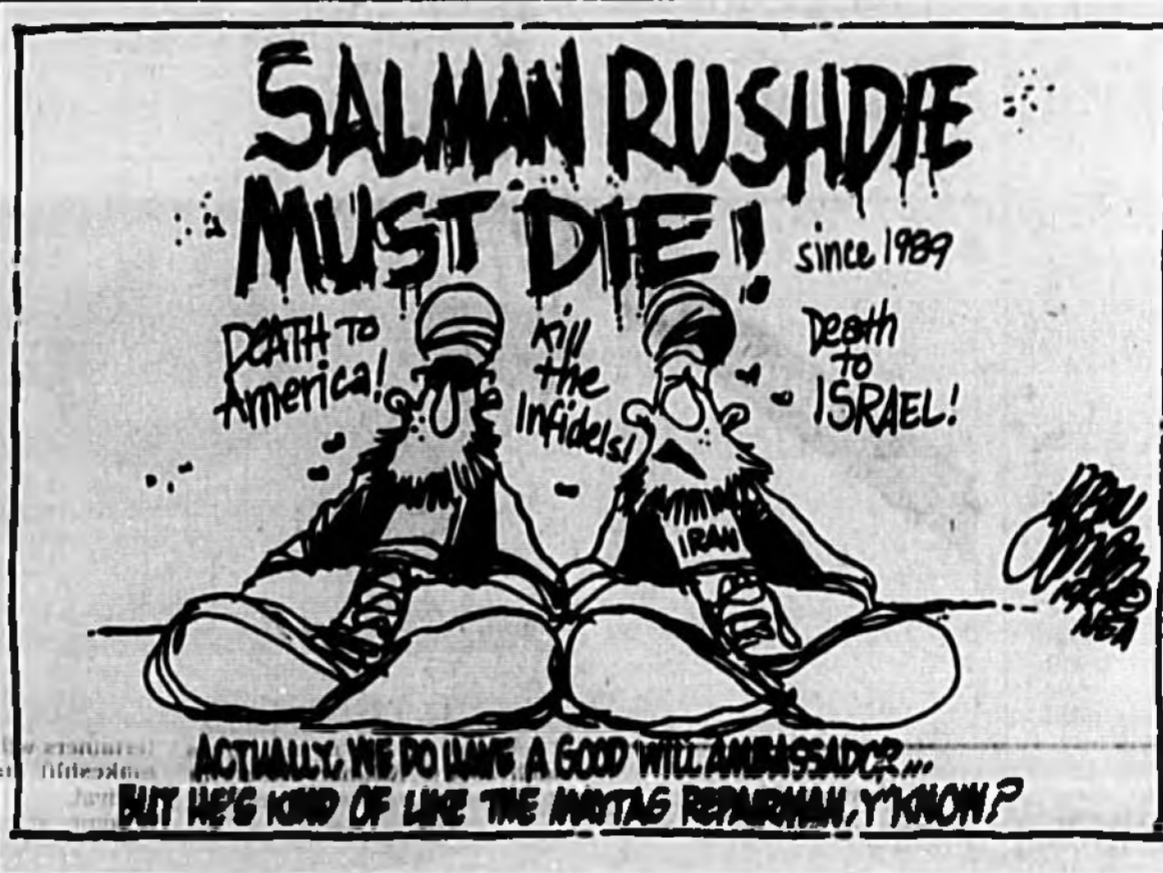

Well, maybe. But a person driving to a store to rent a videocassette is already a "windshield potato," belted into a car engaged in an inefficient form of bringing home some pre-arranged electrons and photons.

Is it important? Compared to what? The printing press? No. The telephone? No. Radio, television or movies? No. Computers? No. Faxes? Doubtful. The VCR? Doubtful. The modem? Doubtful.

After all, my late mother, as an adult but not as a child, could order goods from home from the Sears catalog by mail, or from the corner grocer by telephone. She could go to the movies, listen to the radio and watch television. She read books and newspapers. All this long before the "information superhighway."

I already use a computer and a modem to file my column, watch movies on a VCR, and have more cable channels than I can track. If I want to lose money, I can buy a lottery ticket. I can check the value of my pension-plan stocks on "America Online."

So the information superhighway doesn't seem to have much that is brand new.

Big picture emerges in Balkans

After months of dash-and-crash, vow-and-disavow, President Clinton and the myopic ministers of NATO finally steered their bumper-car Bosnia policy into a proper two-track course. It's the course they once insisted they could not see.

They have arrived at last at a policy of parallel commitments that makes sense: (1) a determined vow of air strikes against any Serbian gunners who continue to bombard Sarajevo; (2) a belated turnaround by Clinton in which he promises to pressure the Bosnians to negotiate a peace — something he used to say he'd never do.

Today, these Mister Magoo's of statecraft are all giving interviews explaining in great piety and propriety how they can see clearly that the West must act as one to end the "slaughter" and "strangulation" of Sarajevo. But let us be very clear about what moved them to act. They were moved by a global vision that extended not quite to the horizons of human misery — but just across their parlors to their television screens.

They saw the videotaped horrors of the carnage in the marketplace of Sarajevo, where a mortar shell, believed to have been fired by Serbs, killed 68 shoppers. Now it is fashionable for pundits to exclaim that policy is made by television pictures. Just telecast pictures of horrors — starvation in Somalia, slaughter in Sarajevo — and politicians will be moved to act.

That is a truth — but it is just a surface truth. For in the video-news age where policymaking is a CNN production, mere pictures of inhumanity do not guarantee a policy. It takes big numbers to make big news.

Consider each of these stories of slaughter in and around Sarajevo and ask, "What's wrong with this picture?"

- 16 killed standing in a bread line (May 27, 1992);
- 15 killed in a marketplace (Aug. 31, 1992);
- 15 killed at a soccer match (June 1, 1993);
- 12 killed in line at a water tap (July 12, 1993);
- 7 killed in the shelling of a school (Nov. 9, 1993);
- 15 killed in a random shelling (Jan. 3, 1994);
- 6 children killed while sledding (Jan. 22, 1994).

Answer: The pictures were newsworthy horror, but not big enough horror to be big news. Each tragedy was aired and forgotten, not shown again and again, with parts of bodies scattered everywhere, as were the dead 68 in the Sarajevo market. A total of 68 died in these seven tragedies; but they didn't burn so deeply into our consciences that we told our pollsters, who told our politicians.

As a presidential candidate, Clinton called for air strikes against the Bosnian Serb gunners and supported a lifting of the United Nations arms embargo so Bosnian Muslims could defend themselves. As a president, Clinton sent Secretary of State Christopher to Europe to lobby our NATO allies. But Britain and France balked, fearing their peacekeeping forces in Bosnia would become endangered by a Serbian retaliation. Christopher reportedly meekly listened instead of pressing Clinton's case.

For months, Christopher and Clinton seemed to be solving their Bosnia problem mainly by ignoring it. But the video replays of the latest carnage in the marketplace prompted the French (of all people) to reconsider. That eventually led Clinton to reconsider his past refusal to pressure the Bosnians into negotiating an end to the war they cannot win.

There is nothing in the history of the region's wars that encourages optimism. And yet — there may finally be reason to be optimistic. For at last the world has seen the big picture, which shows the slaughter of the innocents of Sarajevo.

A decade after the world thrilled to the Winter Olympic games of Sarajevo, global diplomats are en garde, armed with their VCRs, by which they now pass judgment on permissible levels of horror. It is a pathetic way to make policy, but it is the one force that compels action. So let the VCRs be our monitors of morality and diplomacy. Let the video games begin.

They have arrived at last at a policy of parallel commitments that makes sense.

Spend what we have, no more

Between them, Bill Clinton and Bobby Byrd have conjured up 18 reasons why a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution is a bad idea. I will discuss them presently, but first I want to give you just one argument which refutes all of theirs:

This nation's financial health is impaired, the condition may be terminal and radical surgery may be our only salvation.

Nothing the president or the Democratic senator from West Virginia say can possibly rebut that one fundamental truth: If we don't get our financial house in order, we will perish.

Ah, but there are other ways to do it, they say. All we need is a little discipline, more lawmakers with the spine to make the hard decisions on taxing and spending.

Oh, baloney. Discipline? Most of the logrolling, pettifoggery, stentorian solons on Capitol Hill wouldn't recognize discipline if it ate a garlic sandwich and burped in their faces.

The federal budget has been balanced precisely eight times since 1930, not once since 1969. We are sitting on a $4.5 trillion national debt that is expected to soar another $1.5 trillion by the end of the decade. It is costing us $800 million a day just to service that debt, and all the polls do is keep piling it on.

And so a drastic solution has once again been offered: Amend the Constitution to require the president to submit a balanced budget and the Congress to pass one. Sounds simple enough, doesn't it? We spend what we've got, no more.

It's not so simple for Bill and Bobby. Bill, who once governed a state with a balanced budget requirement and should know better, says "It would promote political gridlock and would endanger our economic recovery." Bobby, who has been in one legislature or another for 48 years and is a living advertisement for term limits, says the proposal is a "cop-out" that would inspire "voodoo budget balancing." Here are some other things they and their allies say:

— With deficits going down, the debt crisis is over.

Fiddlesticks. Clinton has trimmed the deficit, but we are still going in the hole at the rate of half a billion dollars a day and there are no specific plans to balance the budget — ever.

A balanced budget amendment would be unenforceable and would therefore demean and cheapen the Constitution.

Bullstools. This argument was beautifully refuted by Yale Law School Professor Akhil Reed Amar in a 1992 interview with The New York Times: "Not every provision of the Constitution is fully enforceable. Even if (such an) amendment weren't a cleanly workable political rule or an easily enforceable judicial rule, it might give some moral status and strength to the fundamental idea that it is wrong for us to finance current benefits on the backs of our children and grandchildren."

— The amendment would involve the courts and judges would end up making fiscal decisions that should be made by Congress.

I think this is an argument born of desperation. Judges would most likely tell Congress what they sometimes tell juries — get the hell back in the room and don't come out until you've reached a verdict. In any case, this much we know for sure: Presidents lack the guts to balance budgets, as does Congress. Maybe judges could summon up more courage.

— A balanced budget amendment would bias congressional decisions against social spending.

You're catching on, guys.

Drugs

Seminole County have been briefed on the possibility of the dogs coming on campus. "They told us at a county wide student government meeting," said Elena Battista, a member of the Seminole High School student government. "I don't know why they want us to know they're going to do it. If they really wanted to catch the people who have drugs, I think they'd just come out and do it."

Battista said she thinks that anything that keeps students from bringing drugs on school property is a good idea.

Seminole assistant principal Lamarr Richardson said he agrees that it's a good idea to get drugs off campus. He hopes, however, that the drug sniffing dogs on campus is not "misinterpreted" by the students and by the community.

"Sometimes things that work in big cities don't work so well elsewhere," he said.

The drug problem exists at Seminole, he said, because it is everywhere. But he believes it is not as bad as it is elsewhere. He thinks the battle might be fought differently here, however.

"I'm just not quite sure of the positiveness it can result in," he noted.

Richardson said he will support whatever plan the district suggests because he is "all for whatever enhances the safety and well-being of the faculty and students."

Some students still believe the program is unnecessary.

"I think it would save them (the school district) money budget-wise if they just did the schools that have a major problem," said Anthony Sanders, a student at Seminole, who said there is not a "major drug problem" at Seminole.

"Personally, I don't see that our school has a problem with drugs," he said. "There's some marijuana and cigarettes and that's it."

He said, however, that he supported any program that would rid the schools of all drugs, because drugs bring violence, he said.

Another student, Belinda Morgan, said she thought the dogs might be a bit disruptive their first time on campus, but after that the students probably wouldn't notice them much.

"I think it would get everyone walking around talking about it and it would keep drugs off campus," she said.

School resource officer Charlie Reynolds thought that the mere mention of the possibility of drug sniffing dogs on campus might act as a deterrent to those students who might have drugs at school.

"Any amount of drugs in school is a problem we need to deal with," he said. "Anything we can do to make the high schools free of drugs and safer is in the best interest of all of us."

Prochel said the dogs may not appear on the campuses for some time as details are still being worked out. The district is looking for dogs with a passive style of searching for the controlled substances.

"We don't want a dog that is all worked up running through the halls," he explained. "Golden Retrievers, for example, will go and sit next to a locker or vehicle if there are drugs present."

Prochel said the district does not want dogs barking wildly in the halls if there are drugs in lockers. It is the district's hope that the process be as quiet and unobtrusive as possible.

"And when we go to a campus we want to do maybe a bank of lockers and go," he said. "We're talking about being on campus five or ten minutes."

Prochel said he does not foresee the drug sniffing dog program being a financial burden on the district.

"I don't think it will cost us anything," he said.

Where there's smoke... Sheriff's investigators say these marijuana pipes were being manufactured in an apartment at Spanish Trace, Altamonte Springs. Members of the City County Investigative Bureau raided the apartment Tuesday and confiscated approximately 150 of the marijuana pipes, believed to be headed for distribution on the west coast.

Haitian military moves to set up interim government

By Associated Press

MIAMI — Haitian military leaders are preparing legislation which would install an Army-backed interim government to replace ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, an anti-Aristide attorney said.

"This country isn't being governed by anyone," said attorney Mireille Durocher Bertin, who is helping draft the new measure. "It's because of Mr. Aristide's intransigence and negative attitude. People in this country are thinking hard about how to get out of this situation."

The proposal calls for a three-person or a five-person interim government that would temporarily take control until a long-term solution to the crisis in Haiti is reached.

Lawrence Pezzullo, U.S. special envoy to Haiti, dismissed the proposal, saying he doubted it would be approved by the Haitian Parliament.

"But even if they were able to do so, it would still be a de facto situation. They would not have gained anything. It's a rise that nobody is going to take seriously," said Pezzullo, who attended a University of Miami seminar Wednesday.

Parliamentary approval of such legislation could cause problems for the Clinton administration's effort to put Haiti's military leaders out of power, said Ernest Pregel, former U.S. ambassador to Haiti.

"This obviously would undermine the latest U.S. effort to resolve the political impasse in Haiti," Pregel said. "It would really complicate things."

He said the proposal would delay Aristide's return and put further pressure on the United States to support a tougher embargo.

A U.N. Security Council vote to broaden the economic embargo could come as early as next week.

The proposed legislation comes a week after rejected a U.S.-backed plan to restore democracy in his country. He was ousted in a September 1991 coup.

The proposal came out of a conference held in Haiti this month and attended by about 200 representatives of various political factions.

Two options, which are legal under the Haitian Constitution, were to nominate a new prime minister or declare the presidential seat vacant and hold new elections. The current proposal goes outside the constitution.

"If we can't use one or the other, it has to be an extra-constitutional solution," Durocher said.

Still unresolved is who would lead the impoverished Caribbean nation; military leader Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras or Supreme Court Justice Emile Jonassaint have been mentioned as possibilities.

Cats

light brown to tan fur with bold dark spots on their back. Dark stripes also appear on their face, throat and legs. The fur on the bottom of the feet is black, hence the name Black-footed cats.

Zoo Director Ed Posey explained, "The presence of Black-footed cats in the zoo's expanding cat collection reinforces the Central Florida Zoological Park's commitment to the future of this endangered species through managed captive breeding programs."

Sanford has the only zoo in the entire southeast to place these animals on public exhibit.

Posey commented that for decades, captive breeding programs have focused on large cats like lions and tigers, overlooking small cats until recently. "The zoo is dedicating resources to help small to medium size cats, like the Black-footed Cat, Jaguarundi, and Clouded Leopard."

Although in their natural habitat, these cats are solitary animals, finding shelter in termite mounds or abandoned burrows of other mammals.

"They generally live in small family units with one or two adult males and a few females and their kittens," he said.

At the Central Florida zoo, the cats are being provided with a commercially prepared meat diet containing vitamin and mineral supplements.

Statistics indicate there are only 70 of these cats in North American zoos. The Sanford zoo is the only accredited American Zoo and Aquarium Association (AZA) member in Florida to have them on exhibit.

The Black-footed cats are now at the Central Florida zoo, 3755 N. Highway 17-92, just east of Interstate-4 exit 52.

over a single weekend.

Smith hopes this fair will be as successful.

He believes many of the same entertainers and vendors who make their way through the professional circuit of Renaissance festivals around the country will make Seminole County their home this weekend.

Plays, skits and musical entertainers will take to stages and makeshift arenas around the festival.

Some of the comedy groups will draw the audience into their improvisational pieces.

The event is designed to im-merge those who attend into the golden age of European culture and heritage.

"And to let them become a part of the fun," Smith said.

Patrons who bring a non-perishable food item to the ticket gate will receive a $1 certificate per ticket per food item.

The non-perishable food will be given to area food banks for redistribution. The donors will also be eligible for prize drawings throughout the day.

The festival will open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. each day.

Tickets are $5 for adults, children ages 12-16 are $3.50 and children under 12 and those over 60 are free.

against the union.

Kennedy said UPS began training programs for employees in January on the proper lifting procedures for the heavier packages. The company sued after the union called the one-day strike despite a temporary restraining order issued by a Washington, D.C. judge, Kennedy said. The strike caused the company to lose business and the confidence of customers, Kennedy said.

"I know there's a misconception out there," Kennedy said, "about the over 70 pound packages. To put things in perspective, we're talking about 18,000 packages in our system on a daily basis that would be over 70 pounds. Most of those over 70 pound packages are in the 70 to 80 pound range."

UPS handles 11 million packages daily. "We're talking a fraction of one percent," Kennedy said, of the packages exceeding 70 pounds. "That comes out to less than one package for every three delivery drivers." The company has over 60,000 drivers who are represented by the Teamsters.

Kennedy said UPS customers are being asked to notify the company if heavy packages are to be picked up so drivers can take hand-trucks, other lift equipment or a second driver to the site. In addition, he said, drivers who unexpectedly encounter the heavier packages can call for the equipment, backup or request assistance from the customers.

"The thing that should be understood," Kennedy explained, "is we are not requiring an employee to lift more than 70 pounds, if they are unable to do so."

Teamsters President Ron Carey said the union would file a complaint with the OSHA, although it was unclear what authority the federal agency has to intervene. He said the union also was exploring other legal options.

To settle the strike, UPS and the Teamsters agreed that no union member would be required to handle more than 70 pounds without help from another employee and lifting devices.

But Carey said the company "is not living up to the agreement they signed."

Two UPS drivers, Henry Gallett of Kansas City and David Bart of Riverside, Calif., said they were injured while lifting the heavier packages.

Kennedy said UPS continually audits its outlets to insure packages are properly weighed and labeled.

Carey was in Bal Harbour attending an AFL-CIO executive council meeting.

UPS instituted the heavier package service to remain competitive. Federal Express has handled packages up to 150 pounds for almost 10 years.

"We've seen no significant difference in injury frequency since UPS introduced its over 70 pound service compared to last year," Kennedy said.

Information from Associated Press was used in this report.

Grant

12th grade. It would become part of our apprenticeship program."

Moon said the counseling would not only involve the students but their immediate families as well.

"It isn't going to be easy to get this grant," she said. "We had to meet quite a number of qualifications including the requirement that the school must be located in a low income neighborhood."

Moon says she doesn't know if the grant will be awarded for this project. "It's the first time the federal government is offering this grant. They informed us only six to 10 applications from across the entire nation would be accepted," Moon said, "so we'll be involved in some very stiff competition."

She indicated that if the award was not approved, or a lesser amount of money was granted, the school board may still begin to implement some of the program.

The decisions on who will receive the awards are expected to be revealed in late April or May of this year. If the Crooms project is selected, Moon said the money should be transferred by the first of July.

The Hampton University
Dance Company.

"Terpsichorean" of Hampton, Va. is celebrating 60 years of dance in 1994. The Southern tour will include a concert and several lecture/demonstrations in the Seminole County area school district.

As a part of the Black History Month activities, the dance company will perform at the following schools: Lake Mary High School, Sunday, Feb. 27, 7:30 p.m. The community is invited. Milwee Middle School, Monday, Feb. 28, 9:45 a.m. Midway Elementary School, Tuesday, March 1, 9 a.m. Goldsboro Elementary School, Wednesday, Mar. 2, 9 a.m. Crooms School of Choice, Wednesday, Mar. 2, 11:30 a.m. Pinecrest Elementary School, Thursday, Mar. 3, 9 a.m.

Appearing with the Hampton Dance Company will be Sanford's own local well-known dancer, Demetria Petty, who is a 1992 graduate of Seminole High School where she was active as a cheerleader, and on the dance team. She was choreographer for Tajiri Arts International, Inc. Demetria is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Petty, Sanford, and she is presently a second year student at Hampton University in electrical engineering.

"Terpsichorean," Greek for a group of dancers, was founded in 1934. It was the first organized dance company among the historically black colleges and universities. The group was founded on the belief that African and African-American dances were marvelous examples of pure bodily expressions of emotion. The main objective was and still is to instill a new pride in their African heritage.

"Terpsichorean" has had outstanding leadership throughout its 60 years. The present director, Mrs. E. Nina Butts, continues this tradition. Mrs. Butts is a graduate of Hampton Institute and Kent State University and is, herself, a dancer, choreographer and a dance consultant.

Hampton University Dance Company. "Terpsichorean," is celebrating 60 years of dance this year.

Obese woman sues theater

By Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Deborah Birdwell just wanted to see the movie "Jurassic Park," but she was too large to fit into the seats and the theater wouldn't let her bring her own chair.

So, in a test of the Americans with Disabilities Act, the Tennessee woman is going to court today to try to force theaters to accommodate obesity.

"We're sort of the last group of people that society has said, 'Well, it's OK to hurt these people,'" said Ms. Birdwell, who at 5-foot-4 weighs 260 pounds. "That has to stop."

In November, the government declared that people who are morbidly obese are protected from discrimination under the disabilities act regardless of whether the weight was caused by disease or poor diet.

Morbid obesity is a medical term that means 100 percent over normal weight.

Previously, only people whose weight stemmed from disease were protected. But in a brief filed in an employment lawsuit in Rhode Island, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission said morbid obesity from any cause qualified.

Now, Ms. Birdwell will become the first person to test that ruling under another provision of the disabilities act — that public places must accommodate the disabled. For her, that means a big enough theater seat.

In a lawsuit to be filed today in U.S. District Court of Middle Tennessee, Ms. Birdwell is asking that Carmike Cinemas immediately be forced to accommodate obese patrons. She also seeks unspecified damages, which her lawyer hopes will total $1.5 million.

Touching a power line can be a once-in-a-lifetime experience.

It only takes a little electricity—about what's needed to power a night light—to give you a fatal shock.

And the power lines in your neighborhood carry many, many times that amount.

So when you're working in the yard with a ladder, antenna or pruning tool, give power lines a wide berth.

Even if the object you're holding isn't metal, it can conduct enough electricity to stop you in your tracks, if it touches a wire.

Using common sense can help you stay safe around electricity. And FPL's free brochure, "Don't Contact the Electric Company by

It suggests ways to operate appliances without mishap. Tells how to prevent electrical fire hazards. Gives techniques for trimming trees safely. And even lists special cautions to give children.

Surgeon general: Most smokers hooked as teens

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Most smokers are hooked by the time they are 20, and quitting can be just as hard for teen-agers as it is for adults, the surgeon general said today.

Dr. Joycelyn Elders, in a 314-page report to Congress, said "young people face enormous pressures to smoke," with some of that pressure applied by the nearly $4 billion the tobacco industry spends to promote it wares.

The 23rd surgeon general's report was devoted entirely to the topic of adolescent smoking and how to prevent it.

"Clearly, young people are being indoctrinated with tobacco promotion at a susceptible time in their lives," Elders wrote in a preface to the study, "Preventing Tobacco Use Among Young People."

She called for higher taxes on cigarettes, strict enforcement of laws against selling tobacco to minors and other steps to discourage teen-agers from trying their first cigarette.

The report prepared by the Office on Smoking and Health concluded that "most adolescent smokers are addicted to nicotine and report that they want to quit but are unable to do so." They experience relapse rates and withdrawal symptoms similar to those of adults.

"Early addiction is the chief mechanism for renewing the pool of smokers. Most people who are going to smoke are hooked by the time they are 20," Elders said.

Thomas Lauria, a spokesman for the Tobacco Institute, said the industry "agrees with many points in the current surgeon general's report. We have worked hard to prevent tobacco use among young people."

But "there's little in this report that would substantiate the allegation that we're trying to hook kids," Lauria added. Cigarette ads are "aimed at the 46 million to 50 million American adults who smoke."

The government's own data indicates "that almost 60 percent of smokers start after they are age 18," said Lauria.

Among the report's major conclusions: —Tobacco is often the first drug used by those young people who use alcohol, marijuana and other drugs.

—Adolescents are more likely to smoke if they do poorly in school, have friends who use tobacco and have lower self-images.

—Cigarette advertising appears to increase young people's risk of smoking by creating the perception that more people smoke than actually do and by making it, in Elders' words, "look cool."

The report could fuel demands for new restrictions on tobacco advertisements, including the "Joe Camel" cartoon ads that Elders' predecessor, Antonia Novello, inveighed against. Camel, buoyed by a sales rise, has just added a Josephine Camel to its cast of characters.

The first surgeon general's report in 1964 opened an ongoing war against smoking. Millions of Americans have quit and smoking is now forbidden in many offices and public places. Just Wednesday, McDonald's announced a ban on smoking in its 1,400 company-owned U.S. restaurants.

The report said one out of three adolescents (ages 12-18) uses tobacco by age 18.

At least 3.1 million adolescents — one in eight — are considered current smokers, meaning they had smoked within 30 days of being surveyed in 1991. By that same definition, one in four high school seniors were current smokers.

Seven percent of all adolescents and 10 percent of the seniors were heavy smokers — at least half a pack a day. White adolescents were more likely than black or Hispanic teens to smoke.

The report said young people remain "a strategically important market for the tobacco industry."

"Cigarette advertising frequently uses human models or human-like cartoon characters to display images of youthful activities, independence, healthfulness and adventure-seeking," it said.

Information superhighway strikes fear in some hearts

By DAVID FOSTER
Associated Press Writer

You can spot the computer helpless in any office. Their curses cloud the air as they fumble with their keyboards. Their wastebaskets are dented from frustrated kicks.

It's been 10 years since personal computers invaded the workplace. But while most of corporate America zooms down the information superhighway, some professionals are stalled on the entrance ramp.

Their computer incompetence is more than just an office joke. Careers are stagnating and productivity is suffering — all due to workers who can't tell their RAM from their ROM, who wouldn't know a byte if it bit them.

The computer-impaired once could count on a bemused tolerance from colleagues and bosses, but now it appears patience is wearing thin.

"A few years ago, we assumed nobody over 40 was computer literate," said Mark Minas of Arlington, Va., author of nine computer books. "Whoever's left ... these are people hanging on tooth and claw not to work with computers."

Their likely fate? "History will pass them by," he said.

It's happening already, according to a 1992 study by Princeton University economist Alan B. Krueger. He compared workers in a range of job classes who were similar except that some used computers and some did not. The computer users, he found, earned an average 10 percent to 15 percent more than their computerless counterparts.

Knowing that doesn't necessarily make it easier to get with the computer program. When Heidi Ondrasik's office installed a network of PCs last year, she was terrified.

"I had nightmares about it. I did not even know how to turn the computer on," said Ondrasik, 49, a financial analyst in Seattle for the New York-based Continental Guaranty Corp.

She had been with the company 25 years, reading financial statements and crunching numbers by hand and calculator.

"I would have loved to keep on doing what I had been doing," she said. But that was not an option. "Everyone is computerized. You can't go back."

Ondrasik compared her fear by attending classes, paid for by her employer. It was slow going at first, but now she's a regular computer geek. She's even thinking of buying a computer for use at home.

"I'm really enthusiastic now," Ondrasik said. "It's a joy to come to work, a joy to use the computer."

Not everyone is so easily converted. For some professionals, a studied ignorance of computers remains a point of pride.

"You get me a lawyer who uses computers extensively and take him to court with me, and you see who comes out ahead," said Jim Cowles, 59, senior partner in a Dallas law firm where few of the 100 attorneys use PCs.

"It's very easy for computers to become a crutch and take the place of reason," Cowles said. "We had one tax attorney who couldn't practice law because of his dedication to the computer. He was on it constantly. He forgot one thing, and that was to practice law."

A more common reason for avoiding computers is fear, experts say. Fear of breaking the machine. Fear of losing important files. Fear of appearing ignorant.

"You can see some combative students," said Robert K. Brown, an instructor for Executrain, an Atlanta-based company that helps businesses introduce new computer systems to employees.

The typical computer-phobe is an intelligent, otherwise competent worker, Brown said.

"They've been doing their job very well for years," he said. "Now they're being forced to go into something they don't want to. They can't take their anger out on their bosses, so they take it out on me."

Their objections are legion. They have more important things to do than attend a silly class. They are right-brained. They are efficient enough without a computer. The monitor gives them headaches.

Brown recalls one woman in a recent class. She was in her 30s, a middle manager for a banking company, and on her ID card she had scrawled, "I don't want to be here."

When Brown asked about it, she replied that using a computer keyboard was beneath a professional woman like her. "As a feminist, she could not bring herself to type," Brown said.

Her attitude — secretaries type and managers manage — is fading as professionals realize the penalties of being out of the computer loop.

Computer illiterates miss the company picnic because they don't know how to read their electronic mail. They are passed over for promotion or are laid off when the boss chooses a computer-savvy coworker instead.

Discomfort with computers often is portrayed as a function of age, and there is some truth to the old-dog stereotype. Young employees who grew up with computers often have an edge over older workers.

But the young will have their comeuppance. The level of computer knowledge required to keep up with the competition increases daily. There are new databases to access, new networks with which to interact, new software programs to try — each with an instruction manual the size of a phone book.

In the brave new world of computers, everyone will have a chance to feel stupid.

"Many companies, especially in high-tech areas, are continually building more intelligence into their systems, and that requires a lot higher skill from workers," said Brent Andrew, personnel manager for a San Francisco-based communications company.

"The people who can keep up are the people who say, 'I'm really confused by this, but I'll take the company's training or I'll go out and take night courses in computers at my community college.' For the people who can't do this, there are fewer and fewer jobs."

Rams on the rebound

Lake Mary bounces back into Invitational final

By TONY DeSORMIER Herald Sports Editor

LONGWOOD — Showing impressive resolve for so early in the season, the Lake Mary Rams came back twice Wednesday night before finally overtaking the Lyman Greyhounds 9-7 in the losers' bracket final of the Lyman Invitational baseball tournament.

Lake Mary (3-1) advances to play Winter Park in the finals this evening at 7 p.m. at Lyman High School. If the Rams win tonight, the two teams will meet again Friday at 7 p.m. in the "if necessary" contest.

Lyman (1-3) will play again next Tuesday in the Ramnole Invitational tournament at Lake Mary High School.

Trailing 1-0 after one inning Wednesday night, Lake Mary rallied to take a short-lived 2-1 lead in the second inning. Later, the Rams came back from a 6-2 deficit to tie the score 6-6 in the fifth inning.

Jim Razurti started Lake Mary's game-winning rally when, with one out, he was hit by a pitch for the second time in the game. Jay Reynolds, who tied the game at 6-6 with a bases-loaded triple in the fifth, singled Razurti to third. But Reynolds was cut down at second trying to advance on a bobbie by the outfield.

Mike Buky then hit a ball that skipped when it should have bounced and eluded the Lyman infield, allowing Razurti to score the tie-breaking run. After a walk to Bryan Schumaker and a wild pitch put runners at second and third, Nick Sosa singled to score Buky and Schumaker with two insurance runs.

Lyman got a run back in the bottom of the seventh when Kyle Gaines walked and scored on a double by Tommy Dixon.

Lake Mary coach Allen Tuttle was pleased with the way the Rams kept battling back, especially in light of the fact that he's still doing some experimenting with players and positions.

"Right now, we're trying to let everybody play," said Tuttle. "We're looking at different people in different spots to see what they can do and how they react. Tonight, for example, I ran out of pitchers and had to throw a third baseman (Chris Kleibl) in there. And he did an outstanding job."

Kleibl was pressed into service in the second inning when Carlos Colon, who was hit on his pitching hand by a ball Tuesday, had trouble finding the plate.

After allowing the two runners he inherited from Colon to score and giving up two other runs during the Greyhounds' five-run outburst, Kleibl settled down and didn't allow another run until Gaines scored in the seventh.

It wasn't all smooth sailing for Kleibl (1-0), who retired the side in order just once. In his six

She's 19, a virgin and proud of it

DEAR ABBY: I applaud your response to "17 and Well-Informed." You said that abstinence is the only foolproof protection against venereal disease and unwanted pregnancies.

In an era and in a society where it is assumed that adolescents and young adults are having sex anyway, your statement bears repeating. If all sexually active young people would be motivated to cease their sexual activity outside of a committed, monogamous relationship, a host of national crises such as teenage pregnancies, abortions, and unwanted and abused children could be virtually eliminated.

Today's youth needs to realize that sexual activity does not need to preclude finding an identity and proving maturity. It can, in fact inhibit both. I challenge my peers to take offense at the assumption of our educators that we do not have control over our own bodies.

I am not writing from a nursing home or a monastery. I am a 19-year-old college girl who recently met a wonderful man whom I hope to marry someday. And when we do marry, we will consummate our marriage in complete confidence that neither of us is infected with a venereal disease nor will we have to struggle with guilt feelings from past sexual encounters. He is 20, and also a virgin.

19 AND PROUD TO BE A VIRGIN.

LEBANON, PA.

DEAR "19 AND PROUD": Thank you for helping to convince sexually active young people that the only safe sex is no sex. And although condoms reduce accidental pregnancies and venereal disease, they are not foolproof.

DEAR ABBY: Here is what happened to me: I sat down one morning and wrote out Christmas cards. When I got to the W's in my address book, my fingers were numb. (I have the start of carpal tunnel syndrome.)

I sent my brother and his wife a Christmas card, but on the envelope, I addressed it using his first and last name. On the inside of the card, I addressed it to all the family and sent a gift certificate, and wished them a happy trip, as they were going away.

Two weeks went by, and I got the card back marked "refused." I checked the address, and it was right, so I phoned my sister-in-law who said she rejected it because it had only my brother's name on the envelope!

Was I wrong to have addressed it that way? I addressed it like that on several other holiday cards and no one complained. (They were happy to get a card.) Is my sister-in-law hung up on manners and protocol?

PATTY H., BONITA, CALIF.

DEAR PATTY: You should have addressed the card to both your brother and his wife: Mr.

and Mrs. (). However, your sister-in-law was petty and rude to have returned it marked "refused."

DEAR ABBY: I am writing in response to Patricia Murchek's letter regarding the abortion issue. I don't understand how, after editing five years worth of videos and writings concerning abortion, she could have come to a conclusion about the pro-life movement that is so completely wrong.

Pro-life does encourage information on birth control (not just abstinence) and sex education. It also promotes the fact that all children, born and unborn, are precious — and all human life should be afforded the respect and dignity that it deserves.

MARY MASSINPOLE, COLUMBUS, OHIO

DEAR ABBY: Your annual Valentine's Day column in the Hartford Courant has inspired so much love for my sister and me that I must share our feelings with you.

After reading your column, we took your suggestion and called loved ones to express the "I love you" theme. By the time we had put through eight calls, we felt boundless joy! And judging from the reaction we received from our relatives, we also spread a lot of happiness. They all remarked that it was such a sweet gesture, they wished they had thought of it first.

Before hanging up, we asked that they, too, make a few calls to friends or relatives to simply say, "I love you" and lift their spirits.

Thank you, Dear Abby, for sharing that wonderful Valentine thought — it made for the happiest St. Valentine's Day in our memory. You may use my name.

BERNICE E. ALT, NEW CANAAN, CONN.

DEAR BERNICE: Isn't that what St. Valentine's Day is all about? Love and warm feelings should be expressed. They're contagious — be courageous.

Easy bruising may call for blood tests

DEAR DR. GOTT: I bruise extremely easily and wonder why. I'm healthy, eat properly, take vitamin supplements and exercise.

DEAR READER: To a large extent, the significance of easy bruising depends on how extensive the bruising is and under what circumstances it occurs.

For example, the elderly bruise more easily than the young. Because of thinner skin and more fragile blood vessels, older people will often discover strange bruises on their skin that may appear following trivial trauma, such as banging a shin. In the main, such bruises are a common consequence of aging.

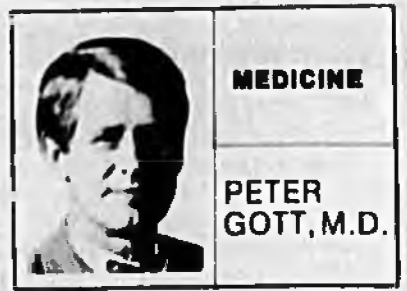

In contrast, extensive bruising -- especially in a young person in the absence of injury -- may indicate a serious medical problem with the blood-clotting mechanism. An inadequate diet (with too little protein) or a vitamin deficiency (particularly vitamin C) can lead to easy bruising. So can a number of blood disorders, including leukemia and a reduction in platelets, the tiny blood cells necessary for normal coagulation.

DEAR DR. GOTT: Recently my physician advised me to take 1,500 mg of niacin for lowering my cholesterol. What are the health risks in taking that amount daily? Can liver damage result?

DEAR READER: Niacin can, indeed, lower blood cholesterol. However, it must be given in large quantities (in the range that you mention), which can also cause marked flushing of the skin and diarrhea. Also, because niacin comes in a 50 mg pill, this is a lot of pills to take.

To overcome this inconvenience, some drug companies marketed a larger dose, sustained-release niacin pill. Although this caused less flushing and intestinal upset, it was found to be associated with liver inflammation. Thus, it is no longer generally used.

There are no health risks associated with 1,500 mg of regular niacin. However, stay away from the timed-release variety.

WIN AT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder

West led the heart king. Seeing two losing hearts in the dummy, East thoughtlessly encouraged with the seven. South happily ruffed West's heart continuation, drew trumps and ran the diamond jack. In desperation, East ducked. Suitably duped, declarer finessed his diamond eight. But after East produced the king, South claimed the rest of the tricks.

Knowing West has six hearts, East should realize there is only one heart trick for the defense. And that diamond suit in the dummy is threatening. Rather than hoping partner will switch to a club at trick two, East should overtake with the heart ace and switch to the club queen himself. One down instead of one over.

Always keep track of your target: the number of tricks needed to defeat the contract.

West led the heart king. Seeing two losing hearts in the dummy, East thoughtlessly encouraged with the seven. South happily ruffed West's heart continuation, drew trumps and ran the diamond jack. HOROSCOPE

By Bernice Bode Osol
YOUR BIRTHDAY
Feb. 25, 1994

New partnership arrangements may play key roles in your affairs in the year ahead. It looks like you'll make some good choices that could produce mutual benefits.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Persons with whom you'll be involved today will be taking their eyes from you and if you treat them in an uncooperative manner, don't be surprised if they treat you similarly. Get a jump on life by understanding the influences which are governing you in the year ahead.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) In all money related matters today, be sure to set up accurate records with appropriate receipts. Later on your numbers and someone else's might be in conflict.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Guard against inclinations today to fight windmills or go against odds that are stacked against you. Before attacking, wait until you have a more leveled playing field.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) An assignment you tried to slip manage.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) If you inadvertently offend a friend today, make a quick apology and let the matter drop. If it is rehearsed, the pal who forgave you might get angry again.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Don't throw your weight around today when functioning in a managerial capacity. Your control over subordinates may be only marginal to begin with.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your ability to articulate your position might be severely restricted today, not necessarily by others, but by you. If you have something to say, say it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) In all money related matters today, be sure to set up accurate records with appropriate receipts. Later on your numbers and someone else's might be in conflict.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Guard against inclinations today to fight windmills or go against odds that are stacked against you. Before attacking, wait until you have a more leveled playing field.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) An assignment you tried to slip through as completed might have to be done all over again today. If you don't do it right this time, you'll just have to do it again a third time.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Strive to be diplomatic and tactful in social situations today. If not, there is a possibility you may bring up issues that's very divisive.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) This is one of those days when it might be best not to volunteer. For example, you could do something for another and if it doesn't live up to his/her expectations, be severely criticized for your efforts.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Today if you're required to do any mental work that deals with facts and figures, you'd better have someone reliable check your accomplishments.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) A need for instant gratification might lead you into a position today where you take on a long term obligation that could turn out to be extremely burdensome. Copyright 1994 NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.
