Did LEANDER SWIM the Hellespont?

RADITION and archaeology indicate that sports were introduced by the old Hellenes.

Early Greek statuary includes discus hurlers and javelin throwers—museum vases are decorated with sprinting matches—there are figures of boxers and wrestlers among the Elgin marbles. And horse racing is prominently featured on the Parthenon friezes.

Myth insists that Milo of Crotonaancestor of all Corbetts, Dempseys and Tunneys—slew oxen with a single blow of the fist.

And we're equally assured that Leander made a nightly practice of swimming the Hellespont.

However, there is no circumstantial evidence to verify his claim.

Leander might have used a raft or pulled a "Captain Cook" for all that posterity is certain.

Legend takes his word for it—but legend is a notoriously careless and credulous reposter.

We're save that Certude Edecle swam the English Channel, because the dragged on International News Service calls into the water with her.

There's no record-breaking novedays or anywhere, without the corroborating I. N. S. testimony.

I. M. S. men are present from stagt to finish; the camera cross-checks their despatches and investigation regularly substantiates their statements.

The I. N. S. correspondent attends as accredited representative of public opinion and fair play—as guarantor of impartial verdicts and clean scores at ball park, prize ring, track, gridiron and tennis court.

When he attests that Leander swims the Helicspont it is so.

I. N. S. sporting news is caught in a world-flung net—a mesh of veteran specialists, notable amateurs and certified champions.

Their accounts are the accepted yardsticks of sporting reputation.
