

Issuing Clothes Is Comparable To Assembly Line

CAMP BANDING—(Special)—An Army adaptation of industrial assembly line methods clothes hundreds of Florida soldiers here daily in the record time of 45 minutes per man.

Operated under the direction of Capt. L. H. Lachiotte, the clothing assembly line is both a speedy and accurate method of clothing the large number of men who pass through the Reception Center. Out of a total of 14 items received by each man, an average of only 1 per soldier requires alteration. And according to Capt. Lachiotte, "there is no reason for a poor fit."

The warehouse which provides a roof for this rapid method of giving the new soldier his wardrobe is situated on "B" road in Blanding, close to the huts used by soldiers returning from 7-day furloughs. Daily it receives from the Quartermaster rush shipments of shoes and shirts, socks and ties, field jackets and overcoats to be fed to the assembly line where new soldiers are gradually being clothed as they pass by.

The soldier about to receive his Army outfit plunges into the camphor-scented air of the warehouse from a platform which is on the other side of the building and parallel with the one where the military habiliments are received and stored. First he passes a desk where he is checked off on a roster. Then he gets two big barracks bags, filled with 19 items such as handkerchiefs, neckties, towels—things which will not have to be fitted to him. He also puts all his civilian clothes except his shorts and socks in one of the bags.

As he passes along the line, the novice is gradually dressed in Army apparel. He tries on the clothes he is going to wear. He dons an O. D. Shirt, puts one away in his bag, and so on down the line in 45 minutes or less, including his visit to the shoe man. Contrary to popular opinion, the fitting of shoes in the Army is an exact business. Measuring machines are used, and no man is sent away with shoes which do not fit him. "After a week," says Capt. Lachiotte, "he'll be telling his buddies they're the most comfortable he has ever worn. That's because they give his ankles support."

Second Teddy Roosevelt Bounces Into Battle Leading U. S. Troops In Africa

(With the American forces on the central Tunisian front), Mar. 15.—There's another Teddy Roosevelt bouncing into battle at the head of American troops this time in a jeep called "Tough Rider."

Showing the same dash which carried his illustrious father at San Juan Hill, Brigadier General "Boss" Roosevelt Jr., his bull-frog voice ringing out greetings to privates and officers alike, is almost everywhere at the front in Tunisia acting as a combination and cheer leader. The men love this sprightly figure clad in combat jacket and G. I. khaki trousers topped by a steel helmet slightly askew.

In the first world war, two of his noted brothers served with him. Now one of his sons, Captain Quentin Roosevelt, is serving under him in North Africa, while two others sons, Theodore the third, and Cornelius, are ensigns in Navy aviation. Quentin, field artillery officer, almost died from wounds received from a strafing enemy plane in the battle of Kasarine Pass, but he now is recovering and should be back on active duty in about a month.

"Thank God for that," said his father fervently. "I thought sure for a while we were going to lose him."

Like the Teddy of the Rough Riders, General Roosevelt thrives on the aerial snarl of burning gun power and seems to be happiest when, standing in a topless jeep, he is driving from company to company inspecting positions or climbing to the most forward observation posts where he can see the enemy at close range.

Roosevelt always is on the move, rarely passing more than a day at a division headquarters, jostling along the muddy, bumpy, dusty roads, he recites poems reeling off verses by the yard, or bums snatches of tunes. When some of his men approach in a truck, he stands up in the front seat and yells:

"You going to give it to them, boys? The grinning soldiers, salute and shout back.

The general makes it a practice to visit each unit two or three times a week, if possible. He knows the mess sergeants by name and always inquires if the boys are eating all right. He usually winds up by having a cup of black coffee from the company mess.

There's one thing out of which Roosevelt gets a particular kick, and that's handling out decorations. He tells those men who receive the Order of the Purple Heart after being wounded in action that they are receiving one of the country's proudest honors. He knows what the men have gone through, for he was wounded twice during his eighteen months overseas in the last war.

"Sure, Americans like decorations as much as anybody else," he told a group recently. "We like to pin them on and walk up and down in front of our women folk to show them what a hell of a kind of men they married."

The general is a man who loves action. As one of his subordinates put it:

"He doesn't sit back waiting, but goes out and bumps up a battle. He gets into every bit of action possible."

He commanded the first combat team which attacked Gran from the west last Nov. 8, and was with the first infantry platoon to reach its objective.

After serving through the last war, he wound up at the armistice as a colonel. He remained in the reserves during the ensuing years doing active duty from time to time. Except for a two-month period late in 1940 he has been in active service since Aug. 1940. He was made a brigadier general in December, 1941, and headed a division which went to England, and then became assistant commanding general under Major General Terry Allen.

Bread And Eggs

This bread-aling problem grows serious. The government at Washington, for reasons which seemed sound to the experts, forbade the slicing of war-time bread and decreed that Americans must do their own slicing.

Canada, however, which seems to hold itself a little steadier in such world-shaking matters, goes right on making the buyer slice his own bread.

Serious trouble between neighbors might come from willful divergence. There is the classic record, for example, of the woe which came to two neighboring countries described by Dean Swift in his famous "Gulliver's Travels."

Madam Chiang Has Received 20,000 Letters In US

NEW YORK, Mar. 17, (AP)—Since Madam Chiang Kai-shek, wife of China's generalissimo, arrived in the United States last November to undergo medical treatment in a New York hospital, she has received more than 20,000 telegrams and letters, containing expressions of admiration and miscellaneous requests from Americans in all sections of the country, it was revealed yesterday.

Madam Chiang is passing the week end resting in her suite in the Waldorf Astoria Towers preparatory to the resumption of her nationwide tour next Thursday. According to present plans, China's First Lady and the members of her entourage will reach Chicago next Friday. Visits to Los Angeles and San Francisco are included in Madam Chiang's itinerary.

The messages Madam Chiang has received are typical of the outpouring of Americans who have expressed their sympathy for her. Madam Chiang began her public appearances on her arrival in Washington on Feb. 15, as the guest of President and Mrs. Roosevelt. Hundreds of letters have been daily making it necessary for the members of Madam Chiang's secretariat to set aside a separate table for each day's batch.

States Consider Plans To Construct Express Highways

WASHINGTON, March 17, (AP)—Federal States already have the money, says a report from the Federal Highway Administration, to build express highways to build the nation's highway system.

These future highways were described as limited access roads designed to serve through traffic rather than "stopping" property. The Pennsylvania Turnpike and the Merritt Parkway in Connecticut are early examples. Traffic is permitted to enter and leave through only at certain selected points. These particular highways are toll roads but limited access is contemplated for the future.

Many States cannot now build these advanced motorways," Mr. MacDonell pointed out, "because of the fact that they will enact enabling legislation so that advance planning can begin. He added: "States building road systems, including toll roads, are being urged to take advantage of the present opportunity of advance planning of road systems." Limited access facilities are also unobtainable without special legislation because of the "stop and go" nature of a highway property owned by a local highway. Even when a highway

LAST December producer Carl Laemmle sent for the sound effects men to the Hollywood Studios. Among the sound effects men in which a Russian box 12 years old goes to New York headquarters on pretext to consulting in the German command. Studio people, seeing a rough cut of the picture, feared the scene would be incredible. They were relieved to reap a recent magazine account in which the role of a certain Russian box was fully explained. The same account with the same result.

Germans Speed Up Recent Offensive In Kharkov Sector

In Central Russia, Russians Advance To Site 40 Miles Nearer Smolensk

Soviet dispatches reported a gigantic tank battle fought under skies alive with planes was raging in the Donets River valley below Kharkov as the Germans stepped up the fury of their comeback offensive. Soviet headquarters claimed the Red armies were stubbornly holding their lines.

On the central front, a Russian communique reported the capture of 22 more towns south of Bely as Red armies drove roughshod over German defenses with Russian vanguards reported only 40 miles from Smolensk.

Driving ahead, apparently from a bridgehead near Chuguyev, which itself is on the German side of the new Russian Donets river line, the Russians won a series of favorable positions. At times, the midnight communique said, the Germans hurled their men against the Russians holding the captured ground, and each time they were thrown back.

Northwest of Kursk, where, in the area west of Sevsk, the Germans had threatened the main Bryansk-Kiev railroad, the Red army command threw cavalrymen into action to meet a fierce attack by superior German tanks and infantry forces.

In addition, the Russians advanced through slush and mud, striking first at Yartsevo and the railroad station to the east in order to gain a line for a later attack on Smolensk, were now spearheaded by heavy gunners and light machine gunners operating far ahead of the main forces and cooperating with the guerrillas.
