Boat check deemed successful

SANFORD — Florida Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission wildlife officers said the two-day boater's speed cheeks this weekend was a success. The checks were offered as a courtesy to boaters in preparation for possible permanent speed limits on the river as part of a state manatee protection effort.

The speeds of more than 650 boats were checked as they passed along the 5t; dohns River near the Interstate 4 bridge, said Lt. Vinard Hitt. Officers stationed in boats in the river found boaters "very, very cooperative,"

Hitt said officers found 75 percent of all boats had speedomoters. Virtually all of the speedometers were accurate to within 3 mph, he said. One boat was 5 mph off the electronically-measured speed and another boat was inaccurate by 7 mph.

But the explicit nature of the discussions, including condom-use demonstrations for fifth-graders, has made some educators and parents unessy. Such lessons on condoms usually don't begin until the seventh grade, if at all, in most school districts, officials say.

Rural elderly survey: Low computer use

MIAMI BEACH — A survey found less than 10 percent of the nation's social-service agencies serving the rural elderly use computers for their record keeping, but the figure came as no surprise to administrators.

Widespread worries that machines will add to regimentation and reduce the personal approach work against computers, two elderly agency officials told a recent seminar at the national convention of the National Council on the Aging.

"There is some resistance," said Pat Hawkins of the Oklahoma Health Department. "There is the fear it will remove the individuality in case management.

Fay Ebrite of the Area Agency on Aging in Lafayette, Ind., noted a state computer programmer has been "almost living at our agency since last fall" to introduce a computer program for client care management.

"I suspect there's a feeling of ambivalence and fear about uniformity of standards," she said.

But fear of computers may ease with the introduction of helpful tools. In New York State, client profiles are matched by computer with a laundry list of available services to make people aware of their options instantly.

NASA begins third countdown for Columbia

By MARCIA BURN AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL - NASA began the third countdown for space shuttle Columbia's biomedical research mission early today, after bad fuel sensors and malfunctioning nav-igational equipment halted two earlier efforts.

Shuttle managers are now aiming for a Wednesday morning liftoff. They resumed their countdown at 1 a.m.

NASA's second attempt to send Columbia on the 41st shuttle mission ended less than an hour before its scheduled Saturday morning launch. One of the shuttle's three navigational units failed to work properly and could not be fixed.

Workers installed a new unit Sunday. A fresh batch of labora-tory animals for the astronauts' research assignments — 30 white rate and 2.478 tiny to August 1980 by the Mission commander Bryan O'Connor and pilot Sidney Gutierrez flew to Edwards Air Force Base in California on Sunday to practice shuttle land-ings. The five other astronauts stayed behind at Kennedy Space Center and reviewed flight plans. Four of them — three physicians and one cell biologist — underwent further medical testing.

The four medical specialists were named in early 1964 to the nine-day research mission. which NASA hopes will improve what is known about human adaptation to space. The flight was delayed from the mid-1980s

Reputed mob boss buried

MIAMI BEACH - A funeral service was conducted at the weekend for reputed Cleveland mob boss John "Peanuts" Tronolone, who died of complications from a heart condition.

Tronolone, 80, free while appealing a racketeering conviction, died Wednesday at a Miami Beach hospital, and the funeral was held Saturday at St. Joseph's Catholic Church.

"He takes a lot of secrets to the grave with him." said Assistant Statewide Prosecutor James Lewis, who helped prosecute Tronolone last year. "It brings to an end a notorious era."

Peanuts, plus

A shortage of peanuts caused by drought and a peanut mold has driven up prices sharply, not only to the general public but to the Agriculture Department, which to control costs in its school lunch program, has had to shift from no-cholesterol peanut butter to high-cholesterol choese for the sandwiches it feeds to 34 million youngsters each day.

This is not just a cause for grief among the peanuts brigade. Since 1988, the United States has all but barred foreign peanut imports: currently it lets in only 1.7 million pounds a year, about two-tenths of 1 percent of domestic consumption. That, plus the fact tht only 30,000 government-issued licenses to sell peanuts exist, plus support prices well above production costs, make U.S. peanut growers one of the most envisibly affluent growers one of the most enviably affluent groups seated at the federal farm support table. This is free enterprise? No wonder those licenses are passed from one generation to the next like family jewels.

The U.S. International Trade Commission, an advisory government body, has recommended a temporary import surge, to roughly 20 percent of the domestic consumption of 1.5 billion pounds. That's what President (and Georgia peanut farmer) Jimmy Carter did in similar circumstances in 1980, and it's what George Bush ought to do now. Peanut farmers and their friends on Capitol Hill, needless to say, don't agree.

If the president allows temporary imports, it would do more than just give consumers of this all-American staple a break. It would make U.S. efforts to eliminate farm subsidies worldwide more credible, and would add legitimacy to persistent U.S. complaints about Japan's refusal to import American

It would also help third World peanutgrowing countries carn some badly needed foreign exchange. It might even cause policy-makers to reflect on why a De-pression-era law to help impoverished Ameri-cans survive should still be in place 56 years later, helping their grandchildren sustain an affluent lifestyle paid for largely by U.S. consumers and taxpayers.

Mixed blessing in Manila

Thanks to the personal intervention of Philippine President Corazon Aquino, the future of the two largest U.S. bases overseas is going to be saved, at least for now. A compromise is being put together on how, much the United States will pay for Subje-Naval Station and Clark Air Base and for how Let's hope we learned something from this negotiation, the most difficult in the 44-year history of the bases. Assuming this agreement is ratified by the Philippine Senate, it should be the last one. Since 1989, the Pentagon has recommended closure of 134 bases around the world to save money. Yet none of these has cost as much, or caused as much trouble, as Subic and Clark.

The position of the Philippines is closer to extortion than good faith negotiation. Apparently believing the United States has no choice but to pay what's demanded, Manila doubled its asking price for the bases — to $825 million a year — which is beyond reason. With the Philippine economy foundering. Aquino sees the agreement as an economic bailout.

Just as weapons procurement is not a jobs policy, base agreements are no economic-aid packages, neither for U.S. commnities nor for foreign countries. Bases, like weapons systems, must be judged on cost effectiveness and intrinsic military worth.

On both counts, Clark and Subic are worth less today than they were a decade ago. The United States simply doesn't need such huge force-projection facilities in Asia today.

Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney's stated rtionale for his latest list of 43 recommended base closures is: "The scenario that has driven our force levels for 40 years is gone. The Warsaw Pact disintegrated this year."

The value of Clark and Subic was in fighting the Cold War in the Pacific. If the Soviet Union is a diminished threat to Asia. the value of a huge U.S. presence in the Philippines also is diminished. Rather than paying $1 billion annually in direct and indirect costs to Manila, we should close the

"The hardest thing in politics," wrote Lord Salisbury a century ago, "is ridding yourself of the carcasses of dead policies."

Unlike a decade ago, the most pressing U.S. problems today are domestic, not foreign. Whether in Europe or in Asia, we should not go on paying the exorbitant costs of a war that is over.

Makeup flap makes airline look bad

People all over the country were seeing red when they learned that Teresa Pischette's un-red lips got her fired from her job at Continental Airlines.

Airlines.

You've probably heard of Terri by now: Her attractive face was plantered across newspapers all over the nation after Continental fired her from her job as a ticket agent in Boston. Her offense? She refused to comply with the airline's new appearance code, which required that all women employees who work with the public wear makeup, (You may remember Continental from the 1962 broushaha where the company came out with a weight chart that allowed male employees considerably more spare tires and audiebage than female employees.)

After Pischette threatened a lawsuit, Continental rehired her, but not until comediane and commentators had had a field day. Syndicated columnist Ellen Goodman quipped that Continental "wiped some egg off its face." Jay Leno parodied the case in a skit on "The Tonight Show" that had a Playboy-centerfoldish flight attendant replacing the masscar-less stewardess who'd saved a baby from a burning plane.

But what I'd really like to have seen is a parody of the meeting where Continental brass decided to implement the "makeup rule."

If it was like any corporate bigwig meeting I've ever attended, there were probably several men there with nose and ear hair that made them I o o k I i k e t h e

Wolfman starting to change, and with eyebrows that gave them a "weird scien-tiat" effect. There was also probably one middle-aged woman whose down into her wrinkles and caked, and she was only there to save the ensemble from ap-pearing to be a mafia of old men with errant nose hairs dictating grooming policy to women.

And if it's like any in an eminous tone, "that some of our le employees are not wearing makeup."

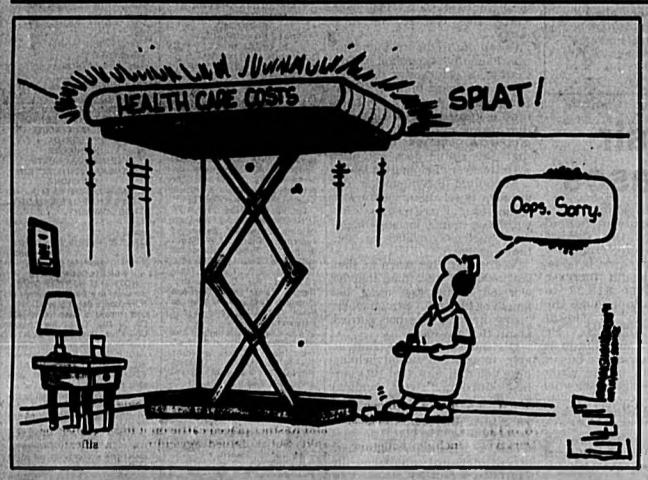

(Shocked gasps.)

"You don't mean ... enlarged pores and blond sychastic right in front of the customers?" another CEO saked. Then, as a horrstying thought dawned on him, he saked, "What about the women with acre?"

"Yes, I'm afraid that's right. Some of our poor assengers have been exposed to the insult of moovered pimples and pock marks on these person's faces!"

If the thought of that conversation isn't outlandish enough, a gase at Teresa Pischette's face makes what happened even siliter. She has dark eyelashes and eyebrows, the kind most of us need makeup to have. Her face is radiantly blemish-free, the way most of us hope to appear with makeup. What it all botls down to is that Continental fired Pischette even though she has naturally what they wanted her to wear makeup for in the first place.

When people who look like Teress Pischette obviously don't need makeup to look attractive, wearing makeup signifies something else to the CEOs: a willingness to try harder to look attractive to men, and a deference to the wishes of what they think men want women to look like.

Hot-line helps to fight waste

WASHINGTON - The military officer thought something was curious when the fellow who was summoned to fix the office copy machine worked on it for a minute or two, said that it needed a new part, which turned out to be a light bulb, wiped his hands, departed — and then promptly charged the Navy a whopping $250. A $250 light bulb?

So the officer picked up his phone and called 1-800-424-9098. And a Defense Department investigation was initiated. The probe determined that the repairman had submitted an outdated billing rate that was in effect when copy bulbs were hand frosted, and very expensive. The charge was therefore reduced. Case closed.

Welcome to a part of the government that works. It's a small part, perhaps, and all the more remarkable for it. The number the officer called is the toll-free connection to the Pentagon hot line, and it's maintained by federal law for anyone who wants to report fraud, mismanagement or duplicity in the Benjamin J. Simon directs the operation. He says business is always brisk: "The phone is open from 8 a.m. to 4:30, every working day, and it's manned by three people at a time. The Defense Department is a big organization. where many things can go wrong. We get between 10,000 and 12,000 complaints a year."

And Simon says there's nothing new about it. The hot line has been steaming for more than a decade. The service was started in the 1970s, when Congress decided to provide an easy and worry-free way for Americans to blow the whistle on federal corruption: the hot line was then incorporated in a Civil Service Reform Act.

The General Accounting Office was originally charged with the hot line responsibility. But the congressional bureau eventually concluded that there were too many calls for it to handle alone. So, in 1980, the service was cloned throughout the federal government, and hot lines are installed today at some two dozen

The Pentagon line is the largest and most productive of the lot. Simon has a staff of 15 and an annual budget of $1.5 million. He says the people who take the military calls are upper-level government employees (GS-13 or higher), and they are fully trained investigators or auditors with a minimum of five years

Simon says the way it works is that the investigators classify the calls by category swindling, iniquity or whatever - and assign case numbers. The cases are thereupon evaluated for validity. If the cases seem valid they are [1.] given to appropriate DOD offices for inquiry, or (2.) explored by the hot line

Simon says many of the cases concern simple human errors. That outdated light bulb charge, for example. But other calls lead to more serious matters; Simon says his office has been informed of a company placing stainless steel rather than armor on a battleship, and a firm that falsified data affecting parachute safety.

Then there's the matter of money. The team at the Pentagon hot line spends a good deal of time on its recovery. Simon tells of an informer who called one day to say that he knew of an insurance premium scam, and the resulting review led to a $27 million payback, plus 85 million in extras. for a total of 632 million.

The man who reported the insurance fraud identified himself as a DOD auditor. Simon says most of his calls are from military employees, since they are close to the action. Yet civilian calls are likewise solicited, and, in any event, the informers are not required to divulge their names, addresses or telephone numbers.

Welcome to a

Simon says about half the calls are anonymous. And he adds that some of them are not related to DOD: "We get calls from cranks. We get calls from wives who are angry at their husbands. We also get calls from people who are being physically abused, or otherwise threatened, and, at those times, we may notify the police."

The director says most of the complaints are on target, however. Which is to say they are related to military misconduct, even if they can't be verified. Simon says that, on average, one out of 10 calls merit an investigation; and, of those, 10 percent are substantiated, while another 17 percent are substantiated in part.

The bojtom line is this: Tax money is saved. The Pentagon hot line office is not just a police department but a collection agency. Simon notes that the call-ins recovered or prevented the expenditure of $138 million between 1982 and the current flacal year, and that only counts the savings in-hand and documented.

Besides this, the hot line may be saving face for some of its civilian associates. Because people who do business with the Pentagon do not want to have to explain $250 light bulbs.

U.S. stalling on Antarctic Treaty

WASHINGTON - When it comes to protecting the environment in Antarctica, the United States may be days away from supporting a position that could lead to the pillage of the world's last pristine environ-mental laboratory. The outcome will turn on how two warring offices within the State Department settle their differences.

In April, representatives from 26 countries. all signatories of the Antarctic Treaty, attended a meeting in Madrid, Spain, to negotiate a proposed ban on mineral exploitation in Antarctica. After nine days of grueling talks, a compromise was worked out wherein the representatives agreed to a draft protocol calling for a mining ban lasting a half-century. Even then, the ban could be lifted if all the current 26 signatories to the protocol agreed.

The protocol was breakthrough, since Japan, Germany and recently Great Britain reversed their previous positions to endorse a 50-year ben. But, today as the representatives are working out the details at home before returning to Madrid to sign the final draft on June 23, it appears that the United States is having second thoughts about the Madrid protocol. Despite solid support for the protocol

by all other nations

ministration.

■ Resistance within the State Department poses the present in Madrid, the Bush administration has yet to endorse the pact. Congressional sources argue that resistance within the State Department poses the primary threat to the protocol, since the decision will weigh heavily with the ad-

Although environmentalist factions within the State Department are said to be behind the protocol, heated opposition continues to emanate from the Economics Bureau, which environmental groups, including Greenpeace, cite as the strongest pro-development faction within the agency. The reasoning behind their stance is that by giving each of the 26 nations a veto power over lifting of the 50-year ban, friendly or unfriendly signatories to the protocol could in the future seriously limit U.S. options in Antarctica.

But, the tenuous stance taken by factions of the State Department has many congressional leaders perplexed and even angry. For one, the mining industry appears to have little interest in Antarctica. Congressional investigators my they have not been lobbled or even contacted by U.S. petroleum or mining companies. That may have something to do with a report by the Office of Technology Assessment arguing that "there are no known oil, gas, or mineral deposits in Antarctica of commercial value, and furthermore, the technology does not presently exist to recover minerals in the harsh environment of Antarctica."

Moreover, since last October, two laws have been passed declaring that it is U.S. policy to pursue an indefinite or permanent ban on commercial mineral development activities in Antarctica. Both enjoyed widespread bipartisan support as well as the backing of major environmental groups.

Confidential State Department instructions obtained by our associate Dean Boyd show that, in going to the April meeting. U.S. negotiators had little intention of complying with the congressional mandate. In a May 13 hearing, Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., accused the State Department representative at the Madrid meeting of ignoring "the clear intent of Congress and the president" by urging his counterparts at Madrid to support a fixed 20to 40-year mining ban, instead of the indefinite ban called for by Congress.

"We used to have the high school dances right here in this building starting about the time of my senior year," he said. Raborn played in a band called the Bananna Boys through the 1940s and into the early 1950s. The band often played for Celery Fed dances.

While most of the original band members. Raborn included, have stopped playing music, a band with one of the original members at the drums was performing to delighted dancers on Saturday evening. The reunion dance was attended mostly by members of the classes of the 1930s through the early 1950s, though the invitation was open to all who graduated from 1927 through 1960. Some in attendance speculated that the later classes just didn't like the same kind of music. None-the-less, those who were there enjoyed the opportu-nity to dance to the old songs.

"We haven't forgotten how to dance," called one woman from the dance floor to her friends sitting at a table to the side.

The lively music lent itself well to the cheery atmosphere.

"We're not mourning the loss of the old school here tonight," sald one man on his way around the dance floor. "We're just here having a good time."

Martha Yancey, a graduate of Seminole High School in 1946, said she was thrilled by the support of the party by the alumni.

Moms mend relationships behind bars

By LIGA PERLIMAN Associated Press Writer

COLDWATER — Serena Jones Gordon has touched her two daughters for the first time in 14 years since she was sentenced to life in prison for murder.

The girls live in Kalamazoo, just 70 miles northwest of their mother's prison, but lack transportation and have visited only about once a year.

And even when they did see each other in the prison's sterile visitation room, there were strict rules: No touching allowed.

On Saturday, Gordon and eight other female prisoners got together with their 16 children at the Florence Crane Women's Facility.

It was the first day of a pilot program called Kida Need Moms. designed to mend families broken by prison bars.

For Gordon, whose daughters grew up with her mother and now are 16 and 17, there was a bonus - two granddaughters, the children of her oldest.

"I've never, ever had a chance to play with my kids - even touch them while I've been in here," said Gordon, 36, while she sat on the carpeted floor and finger-painted with her granddaughters, ages 2 and 10 months. "Seeing your kids and not being able to hold them is the hardest thing in the world."

Prison officials on duty Sunday did not know when Gordon would be eligible for parole.

in contrast to the stark visitation room, the women met with their children in a playroom in the prison's administration building. Steel screens on the windows were affect by cartoon characters painted on the walls.

They sat on the floor on green padded mats and played with puzzles, read books and ate pizza — all donated.

Besides those donations, the program is fully funded by the prisoners themselves, making it unique among similar programs in Michigan and other states. The inmates earn money in prison jobs and through fundraisers such as T-shirt sales.

The biggest obstacle is getting the children, many of whom live 150 miles away in Detroit and Grand Rapids, to the prison just north of the Indiana line.

Organizers are seeking volunteer drivers. The three-hour visits will be held with rotating groups every Saturday; organizers hope to have children visit their mothers once a month.

"We estimate that at least 80 percent of the women here have children," said Terri Huffman, assistant deputy warden. "Thinking about their children can be a great source of depression for them or a prime motivator for rehabilitation.

"We're hoping that by establishing or re-establishing a bond between them, when these women get out they can be better parents and that the renewed responsibility they feel toward the children will help keep them away from drugs, or stealing, or whatever got them into trouble in the first place."

To be eligible for the program. mothers first must complete an eight-week parenting class. which teaches such things as how to cope with stress and improve their own and their children's self-esteem.

Protect garden from hungry insects

If your vegetable garden is reducing the "fruits of your above" now, you may be intermeted in some the reporting most control. There is nothing more frustrating than petting to the wonderful time of harvest only to find that insects have otten there first.

in regard to managing the insects in your parden, the most important advice that I can give you is to spend time in your garden occuting for insects. Randomly select plants each week if your garden is large. Give the entire plant a thorough inspection from the buil or new growth all the way to the soil inc. He sure to check both the upper and lower leaf surfaces.

By monitoring for insects frequently, you may spot them frequently, you mity spot them before they do extreme damage and often you can simply remove them by hand without the use of pesticides. Loarn to identify the beneficial insects like praying mantie, spiders, assessin bugs, lady bugs, and wasps. Pesticides can be used in error against beneficial insects.

Also learn to identify real garden pests and use the correct pesticides when a real threat to our garden exists. Most plants that produce fruits, pods, ears, etc. can stand a 10% to 15% foliage loss without a major harvest lost. So don't panic and start a pesticide program as soon as you spot a sign of leaf feeding. This rule doesn't always apply to vegeta-bles where we cat the leaves like

If you do spot a pest and want to apray, insecticides should be carefully selected to specifically control the pest problem or significantly reduce the numbers insects. Den't expect an in-cticide to kill 100% of the sects and do not add more an the recommended amount insecticide in hopes that more of insecticide in hopes that more is better. ALWAYS READ THE LABEL AND CAREFULLY POLLOW THE DIRECTIONS ON IT. When tusing a insecticide, be sure to spray the plant surface thoroughly so to contact all tissue, undersides and oversides. For the safety of bees and other politonions, sprays are best applied in the late afternoon and early evening hours. Also, many garden posts are night feeders so by spraying before they become active will possibly increase their contact with the pesticide. In general, sprays give better control than dusts. Dusts have a tendency to drift, and can easily tendency to drift, and can easily be washed off by rain and brightion. In addition, it is dif-Bruit to get dusts on the underaides of leaves. A compressed air sprayer reaches this spot. Harvest fruits, seeds and leaves as soon as they are ripe. Allowing over-meture fruits on the plants is an invitation for insects to invade. As soon as the plant is past production, remove it from the garden. Be careful about adding it to your compost pile. Certain insects, diseases decompositin process and become a problem next year. When the garden is over, cut down the remaining plants and plow them into the soil. And begin to plan and prepare for your fall garden.

thank-you letter for something you printed in your column several years ago.

I lost my father suddenly last year. As difficult as his death was, I had peace of mind knowing that I had left nothing uneaid. Because of a Father's Day column you wrote, I sent my father a three-page letter instead of a necktie. It was a diffciult letter to write because I had never verbalized my feelings about him, but once I started to tell him how important he had been in my life, and how much I owed him for raising me to be a caring, responsible, productive person, it was easy. I will never forget the expression on his face as he read my letter. When he finished, he told me that he had never before received such a precious gift.

My father died knowing how much I loved and appreciated him. Abby, please make that

DEAR DOCTOR: I received several letters from psychologists, such as you, who had certain technical objections to the column in question, in which I reasoured a reader that schizophrenia, a psychiatric thought disorder, is a treatable disease and that, for one reason or another, achtsophrenics often draw attention to themselves.

I believe I was quite moderate and fair in my response.

With respect to the points you raise, I think you and other professionals must realize that I have to condense my answer to some health questions. The average reader is not impressed by technical jargon; he or she is interested in understandable information. For example, I doubt that most reader will less sleep. that most readers will lose sleep agonizing over whether Multiple Personality Disorder should be categorized as a dissociative disorder or a thought disorder. Similarly, does the average person really care about the difference between moodaltering drugs and major tran-quilizers (which certainly alter mood)? Give me a break, doctor.

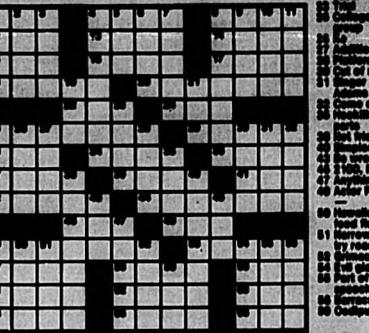

To give you more information, I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "Mental and Emotional Illness." Other readers who would like a copy should send $1.25 with their names and addresses to P.O. Box 91369, Cleveland, OH 44101-3369. Be sure to mention the

By Phillip Alder One of the bridge world's most famous figures. Charles Goren, died on April 3 at the age of 90. He might never have become a bridge authority if it hadn't been for a hostess who laughed at his student at McGill University. He resolved that she wouldn't laugh again.

In 1933 he became a syndicated bridge columnist, and in 1937 he won his first national title, the Board-a-Match Teams. Eventually he amassed 30 national titles and was a runner-up 21 times. And eight times (a record) he received the McKenney Trophy for the most masterpoints collected in a year. In 1950 he was part of the victorious American team in the inaugural World Team Championship for the Bermuda Bowl.

But arguably Goren's best move was to adopt the point-count method of hand evaluation proposed by Milton Work. Goren realized this was much casier to comprehend than Ely Culbertson's honor-trick approach.

Sitting East in today's deal. defense. West's bidding was wild, but at least he found the best lead — the jack of hearts, covered by the king and ace. Goren returned the seven of diamonds, declarer finessing the 10. West led his second heart. the nine. When South called for dummy's three, Goren saw the need to lead diamonds a second time. He overtook the nine with his queen, even though this established three heart winners in the dummy, and fired back his second diamond. Declarer could cash only eight tricks (four spades, three hearts and one dlamond) and went one down. (C)1991, NEWSPAPER EN-TERPRISE ASSN.
