More roads or mass transit?

TALLAHASSEE — When the special Florida Legislative session on transportation opens next month, there will be virtually no end to debate.

The main topic of conversation and argument concerns dollars for roads vs. dollars for mass transit.

Mass transit advocates have left no mistake about their intention of lobbying for more money to move more people faster. The point they hope to make is that there's very little room left for road expansion in the state.

Hundreds mourn victim's death

BOSTON — Governor Michael Dukakis was among the hundreds of people who attended the funeral services Saturday for a 30-year-old pregnant woman who was gunned down in cold blood after being robbed in her own car.

The woman and her husband were leaving a city hospital following a birthing class when the gunman jumped into their vehicle, forced them to drive to a desolate area and shot them both after robbing them.

The woman's husband remains hospitalized with gunshot wounds to the stomach and was unable to attend the funeral.

Youth opens fire on bullies

TAMPA — An eleven-year-old boy had just about had it with the bullies who had been pushing him around at school.

So he took matters into his own hands. The next time the bullies showed up, the youth pulled a .32-caliber handgun out of his bookbag and opened fire.

Luckily, he missed all three of his targets as well as the seven other children who just happened to be in the area at the time.

117 'rocked' by cops

ALTAMONTE SPRINGS — Rock Pile-Part III, the third in a series of coordinated statewide crackdown on narcotics and vice-related crimes, has netted a total of 117 arrests in Seminole County.

The sweep was conducted Thursday and Friday and the arrest numbers are down slightly from the two previous such crackdowns.

Of the 117 taken into custody locally, 56 faces charges of attempting to buy cocaine and other narcotics at hard-core street dealing sites in rural Altamonte Springs. Earlier raids in that area produced arrest numbers of 60 and 91, respectively.

City County Investigative Bureau Commander Lt. Donald Ehlinger, whose squad enforces vice and narcotics laws on a day-to-day basis, said the reduced number of arrests indicates the dealers and buyers have changed tactics and have moved their operations inside homes or that dealers have become more mobile in delivering crack cocaine to users at other locations.

The main targets of the three sweeps this year have been suspected cocaine users, arrested in stings after undercover police have replaced arrested dealers and set up shop in the dealers' locations.

"We're not disappointed that the volume of outside traffic has decreased somewhat. We're optimistic," Ehlinger said.

Law enforcement agencies taking part in the third crackdown included 60 officers from CCIB, of-

Cop shooter facing life behind bars

By BRAD CHURCH

SANFORD — A 16-year-old Sanford youth faces life in prison after being convicted Friday of attempting to murder a Sanford police officer last May.

A Seminole Circuit Court jury convicted Gregory Taylor, 15 Cowan Moughton Court, Sanford, of attempted first-degree murder, shooting into an occupied vehicle, and use of a firearm to commit a felony.

Taylor was tried as an adult for the May 27 shooting of Sanford Police Officer Tim Welter, 37, while he was in his patrol car near Cowan Moughton Terrace.

A slug from a 30-30 rifle entered the rear window of Welter's patrol car, went through the plexiglass shield between the front and rear seats, the driver's side headrest and struck Welter in the head.

The bullet is believed to have lost most of its velocity by the time it contacted Welter's head and only caused a slight wound. He was treated at Central Florida Regional Hospital and returned to duty a short time later.

Police Chief Steven Harriett said after the shooting that it was thought to be in response to the department's high-pressure law enforcement approach to the drug problem in public housing areas.

The police department received a call before the shooting, reporting shots being fired at Lake Monroe Terrace, and investigators later speculated Police Chief Steven Harriett said Saturday that Terrance Kenneth Hill, the man charged with the Monday attack of Lola Glen, has been formally charged in another attack on an elderly Sanford woman.

On Friday, while being held without bond in Seminole County Jail, Hill was charged with false imprisonment, armed burglary and grand theft in connection with a Sept. 6 incident.

According to police reports, an unknown black male at approximately 2:30 a.m. burglarized the residence of Elsie Doss, 1501 E. 2nd Street. Hill is suspected of being that individual based on statements provided to police by Hill's girlfriend. The police report states that Hill allegedly woke Doss and threatened to kill her with a tire iron, then removed $100 from her dresser drawer.

He allegedly abducted Doss and forced her into her car, where she was told to lie down in the seat while he drove. Because she was "talking too

Pan Am hires Eastern to handle routes

MIAMI - Eastern Airlines will use its non-union workers to service Pan American World Airways' flights from New York to Fort Lauderdale, Fla., a Pan Am spokeswoman said Saturday.

Pan Am service between New York's John F. Kennedy International Airport and Fort Lauderdale begins Sunday with a 7:30 a.m. non-stop flight from Florida.

"Eastern is our handling agent in Fort Lauderdale," said Susan Timper, a spokeswoman for Pan Am in New York.

Pan Am's own support staff is not able to handle all of the new flights the airline is adding to its Florida service, which is expected to increase from 96 flights to 140 flights daily by 1990.

Spokesmen for the Transport Workers Union, which represents most of Pan Am's support staff, were not available for comment Saturday on Pan Am's use of non-union workers.

Poll: Floridians don't trust government

MIAMI - Most Floridians say they cannot trust government at any level to "do what is right" all or some of the time, but they say local government is fairly accessible to ordinary people, according to a new poll.

The poll, conducted by researchers at Florida International University, shows widespread doubts among Floridians about the reliability of local, state and federal governments.

Respondents were asked whether they felt they could trust each level of government to do the "right thing" just about always, some of the time, or none of the time.

Only 5 percent of those with an opinion said they trusted any level of government to act correctly all the time. Nearly one-third said they could rely on state or local government to do so most of the time.

About 26 percent said they would trust the federal government to do the right thing most of the time. About 55 percent said they could trust the federal government some of the time, and 10 percent said they could never trust the federal government.

The FIU/Florida Poll results are based on telephone interviews conducted Aug. 29 through Sept. 21 with 1,333 randomly selected adults. The margin of error for the statewide results is plus or minus three percentage points.

Gun toting fifth grader fires on bullies

United Press International

TAMPA - An 11-year-old Tampa boy was in custody Saturday after pulling a gun from his book bag at a school bus stop and firing twice on three schoolmates who reportedly had been harassing him for months.

Patrick Ferguson, the investigating officer for Tampa police, said the shots from the .38-caliber handgun missed all three of the intended victims as well as seven other children who were waiting at the bus stop about 10 feet away.

The 11-year-old boy told authorities he was tired of being bullied every morning by the three other youths who reportedly threw rocks at him.

"This particular kid is not a problem child. Apparently, he just had had enough and snapped."

-Tampa police officer Patrick Ferguson stole his comb and called his mother bad names, said Ferguson.

The shooting occurred at about 7 a.m. Thursday morning. All four boys boarded the bus after the incident. Though children were talking about the shooting, the bus driver did not believe the story.

Ferguson said parents contacted the school before the bus arrived and it was met by Miles Elementary School Principal Anthony Scolaro who found the weapon in the fifth grader's pencil box.

"It is very unusual to find a child this age with a gun," said Scolaro. "We get reports of knives, but nine times out of 10 we find no knife. The weapons we most usually see are rubber bands and paper clips."

A juvenile court hearing was held for the youth Friday, but details were not released because he is a minor. The boy, who has been suspended from school for 10 days, has been charged with aggravated assault and carrying a concealed weapon. He is being held in the W.T. Edwards Juvenile Detention Center.

Ferguson said the boy told him, "I'm tired of them teasing me and I was going to take care of it when the time came."

The officer added, "This particular kid is not a problem child. Apparently, he just had had enough and snapped."

Ferguson said the fifth grader had been squabbling and fighting with the other three boys, who were described as neighborhood bullies by other children at the bus stop, for months.

The 11-year-old said he had taken the handgun from his stepfather's closet and hid it in his bedroom.

While son is on trial for stabbing, mother is arrested for shooting

United Press International

GAINESVILLE - The mother of a 13-year-old boy who was charged recently with attempted murder for stabbing his baby-sitter has been arrested for shooting a 68-year-old woman in the head, authorities said.

Dawn Rowe was charged Friday with attempted murder for shooting Jennie Ulluru while they were sitting in a car parked outside a Sprint food store. Ulluru was listed in critical condition late Friday at North Florida Regional Medical Center.

Sheriff's Capt. Andy Hamilton said detectives were not sure why Rowe may have wanted to shoot Ulluru, whom she had just met moments before the shooting.

A witness to the shooting said Rowe was making statements about her son, David Rowe, who is in the Alachua County juvenile detention center on attempted murder charges.

"All she told me was, 'They have my 13-year-old son and they won't let me have him,'" said a witness who ran up to Dawn Rowe immediately after the shooting.

Hamilton said that a preliminary investigation showed that Ulluru had nothing to do with Rowe's son.

The two apparently began arguing around 11 a.m. in a car at the food store. A short time later, a bystander ran into the store, shouting, "Call 911. There's a lady in the parking lot with a gun."

As he ran back outside the store, shots were fired. Sheriff's deputy Steve Etheridge happened to be in the area and saw the shooting. As he came closer, Rowe allegedly got out of the car with the gun and attempted to steal another car from Myrtle Armstrong, of Medway, Ohio. The bystander wrestled the gun from Rowe and held her as Etheridge arrived, a witness said.

Shuttle crew reviews emergency procedures

United Press International

CAPE CANAVERAL - The crew of the shuttle Discovery flew to the Kennedy Space Center Saturday for a practice countdown Sunday and Monday that sets the stage for launch Nov. 30 on a secret military mission.

Commander Frederick Gregory, 45, co-pilot John Blaha, 47 - both Air Force colonels - and Specialist Stanley Carter, 36, the civilian battery charger, and Specialist Barry Thornton, 37, and Specialist Margaret S. Smith, 34, trained at the Florida shuttleport early Saturday to review emergency procedures at the launch pad.

If all goes well, the astronauts will blast off Nov. 30 to carry a top-secret military cargo into orbit. While details about the flight are classified, sources have said launch is scheduled between 7:45 p.m. EDT and 8:45 p.m.

Gregory is the first black to serve as a shuttle commander and Thornton, who holds a Ph.D. in physics, is the first female astronaut to be assigned to a military space mission.

The dress-rehearsal countdown was scheduled to begin Sunday and end Monday at 11 a.m. with the simulated ignition of Discovery's three main engines. All five crew members plan to strap in aboard Discovery for the final hours of the mock countdown.

While the astronauts inspected Discovery Saturday, the shuttle Atlantis was in the air, booted atop a 747 jumbo jet for the first time in a two-day flight Jan. 28-29. Atlantis is being flown back to the Kennedy Space Center.

Citizens join search for restaurant owner believed kidnapped

United Press International

CRYSTAL SPRINGS - Sheriff's deputies and more than two dozen citizens searched the woods Saturday for a 55-year-old restaurant owner who was abducted from her restaurant during a burglary.

Authorities said Minerva Lou Connell, owner of Lou's Place, was kidnapped before dawn Friday after dialing 911 to report a burglary.

She apparently had slept on a cot in the back of the restaurant after closing for the night. Authorities believe the burglars abducted Connell when they saw her in the back room.

"The indications appear it was just a burglary," said Debbie Carter, a spokeswoman for the Hillsborough sheriff's office. "They could have possibly broken through the door and not seen her until they were inside."

Carter said investigators were still in the process of doing an inventory and had no estimate of what was stolen.

Hillsborough and Pasco county deputies searched by helicopter and by foot into the night Friday, and a Hillsborough sheriff's posse resumed the search on horseback Saturday.

Carter said 95 citizens came out Saturday by foot and four-wheel drive to volunteer searching the woods nearby.

"It's a great response from the private citizens in the area," Carter said.

At 5:15 a.m. Friday, the Hillsborough 911 dispatcher answered a call from a soft-voiced woman who said, "Help, I'm being robbed."

Authorities traced the call to Lou's Place, a neighborhood hangout for Crystal Springs and employees of a nearby phosphate mining operation.

A deputy arrived 14 minutes later and saw the front glass door smashed but Connell missing. Food and beer were missing from the stockroom, authorities said.

Investigators said they think Connell was sleeping behind the freezer when the burglars broke into her establishment. Deputies said the burglar probably parked in the back of the restaurant and did not expect to find Connell there.

"She stayed in the restaurant all night because sometimes she does not close until about 1 a.m. and she opens at 6," said Connell's father, Raymond Rothenberger.

Deputies found Connell's personal belongings in the building and her red Chevrolet Citation parked outside. Neighbors didn't report seeing anything unusual.

Connell has lived in Crystal Springs 33 years and has three children, 10 grandchildren and four great-grandchildren, her father said.

Inmates transferred from riot-damaged prison

United Press International

CAMP HILL, Pa. — More than a third of the inmates in a prison rocked by fires and consecutive nights of rioting will be transferred to other institutions in Pennsylvania, corrections officials said.

"It think it's miraculous, totally miraculous, that there have been no fatalities, no escapes," said Sherri Cadeaux, a spokeswoman for the State Correctional Institution at Camp Hill, where inmates staged disturbances that destroyed nearly half the prison's buildings.

About 960 of the 2,600 inmates normally housed at the prison were being transferred Friday night to state prisons in Pittsburgh, Huntingdon County, Montgomery County and Wayne County and a regional correctional facility in Mercer County, Pennsylvania corrections authorities said.

Cadeaux said prison officials planned to bed down the remaining inmates at the Camp Hill prison, where the ruins of 14 of the complex's buildings continued to smolder.

Between 500 and 900 state troopers remained on the scene, the spokeswoman said.

State and local police struggled for 14 1/2 hours before regaining control of the prison Friday morning, when the last of five hostages was freed. Corrections Department officials said all of the hostages were unharmed.

Inmates used keys obtained in a riot on Wednesday or took advantage of locking mechanisms damaged in that first uprising to flee their cells and release other inmates on Thursday.

At least 76 prison guards, staff members and inmates were injured in the uprising, said Iris Crumbly of the Corrections Department. Injuries include two inmates who were hospitalized for gunshot wounds. A guard was admitted with multiple stab wounds. Another 46 people were injured in violence Wednesday night that ended after seven hours when inmates released eight hostages unharmed.

Assistant Superintendent

John Palakovich said criminal and internal investigations were underway to identify riot leaders and determine what prompted both uprisings.

Palakovich said a large number of possible motivations were being studied, including inmates' apprehension about a policy on housing prisoners with acquired immune deficiency syndrome in the general prison population.

Hours before Thursday's uprising, Superintendent Robert Freeman had met with prisoners to discuss Wednesday's riot. Freeman said inmates apparently believed, incorrectly, that new policies would mean the cancellation of a popular family visitation day and reduced access to medical care.

Five more Phillips victims found

United Press International

PASADENA, Texas — Five more bodies were found late Friday and Saturday in the charred wreckage of the Phillips Petroleum Co. plant, bringing the total number of bodies recovered to 12 with 10 other workers missing and feared dead.

A series of explosions and fires ripped through the plastics plant Monday.

Rob Phillips, a company spokesman, said Saturday morning that five bodies had been recovered between 10 p.m. Friday and sunrise Saturday.

That raised to 12 the number of known victims. Ten other workers were missing and feared dead.

Of the 22 people victims found or feared dead, 19 were Phillips employees and three were employed by a contractor, Fish Inc.

A public memorial service for the victims is scheduled Monday night.

Company officials have said the recovery of all the victims could take two weeks, but the cleanup picked up speed Saturday as about 500 Phillips employees helped haul away rubble, said Phillips.

"We've got at least a dozen pieces of heavy equipment in there. ... We've got large dump trucks carrying debris ... clearing the area so the search team can get in and search for the bodies. Things are probably moving faster and better today than they have all week," he said.

Trans-Pacific 'bashing' is worrisome to officials

United Press International

WASHINGTON — U.S. officials expressed serious concern this week that "Japan-bashing" and its Asian counterpart, "U.S.-bashing," are becoming a destructive, permanent element in the U.S.-Japanese relationship.

The problem was raised as Australian Prime Minister Bob Hawke planned to convene a meeting of Pacific Rim nations and the United States to deal with trade, economics, development assistance — and the growing friction between the two largest economic powers, Japan and the United States.

and trying to ease the criticism.

But as one sign of how deep the feelings run, there have come to be two opposing camps within the State Department, according to officials dealing with Asian affairs.

One, generally known as the "bashers," have open contempt for the pro-Japanese group, whom they describe as "the Japan Club" or "the chrysanthemums" (a flower with important symbolism in Japan).

Richard Holbrooke, a former assistant Secretary of State for East Asia, said in an interview that "Japan-bashing" in the United States exists at two levels:

"One State Department 'basher' said recently that 'the Japan Club' members 'fail to see the trail from predatory Japanese trade policies, to lost markets, to destroyed industries, to large outflows of wealth in the form of trade deficits, and finally to the resultant decline of American power and influence.'"

The bitterness about Japan increased earlier this year with the extended negotiations over the rules governing Japan's purchase of American technology to build the FSX, the next generation of fighter aircraft that will be built on an F-16 air frame.

"There is the symbolic level where 'Japan' is a code-word for America's questioning itself and recognizing that it is falling behind economically. But there is a real level because Japan does play by different competitive rules, and we do very badly by those rules because of trade restrictions."

The American "bashers" accused the Japanese of trying to acquire American technology in order to steal U.S. overseas markets. The "Japan Club" accused the bashers of ignoring the possibility that the Japanese might build their own aircraft, repeating the decline of the American automobile industry.

Bush said if Ortega follows through with the suspension of the 19-month-old cease-fire, "that will change the equation 180 degrees." But the president declined to say how the United States would respond.

The bewildered Japanese defense officials were confused and then angry about what they considered to be a reversal of an American pledge to deliver the FSX technology, without strings.

One official pointed out that Japan, in terms of investment in the United States, rank third, behind Britain and Netherlands. "But because the Japanese look different, they raise a special kind of fear or resentment."

AMA's chief operating officer quits

UPI report

CHICAGO — A top official of the American Medical Association has resigned and agreed to repay $425,000 for an "inappropriate" reimbursement he received for personal pension fund losses in the 1987 stock market crash, a published report said Saturday.

Whalen M. Strobhar, 57, quit his post at the AMA's chief operating officer Friday following an inquiry into the bailout of his losses suffered on Black Monday — Oct. 19, 1987, the Chicago Sun-Times said.

Ironically, Strobhar was a 25-year AMA employee credited with working with Chief Executive Dr. James H. Sammons to rescue the group from potential bankruptcy in the 1970s.

Birthday party shooting spree leaves 15 partygoers wounded

United Press International

NEW YORK — Gunfire erupted at a crowded birthday bash in a Brooklyn dance hall early Saturday, leaving 15 partygoers wounded, two of them seriously, authorities said.

The shots rang out in a room full of about 100 people who were dancing at a private party in the Flatbush section of the borough, said police spokesman Sgt. Ed Burns.

Burns said the gunfire erupted about 6:15 a.m. when an argument broke out between the early morning revelers and eventually spilled out into the street.

"We have no idea what precipitated the argument," the sergeant said.

Some 15 people were wounded during the shooting, he said.

Five females and nine males were rushed to Kings County Hospital Center, including two victims with serious abdominal wounds, said hospital spokesman Vernon Washington.

The other 12 victims suffered wounds to the hands, legs and buttocks. Five of them required surgery, but several others have been released, Washington said.

Bush blasts Ortega for cease-fire comment

United Press International

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica — President Bush blasted Nicaraguan leader Daniel Ortega Saturday for threatening to end a cease-fire with the Contra rebels but refused to say if he would resume military aid to the U.S.-backed troops.

At a news conference winding up a two-day summit of leaders of the Western Hemisphere, Bush sharply derided Ortega while urging him to maintain the cease-fire.

"It's a shameful blow to democracy," Bush said of Ortega's bombshell announcement late Friday at the summit held to celebrate 100 years of Costa Rican democracy.

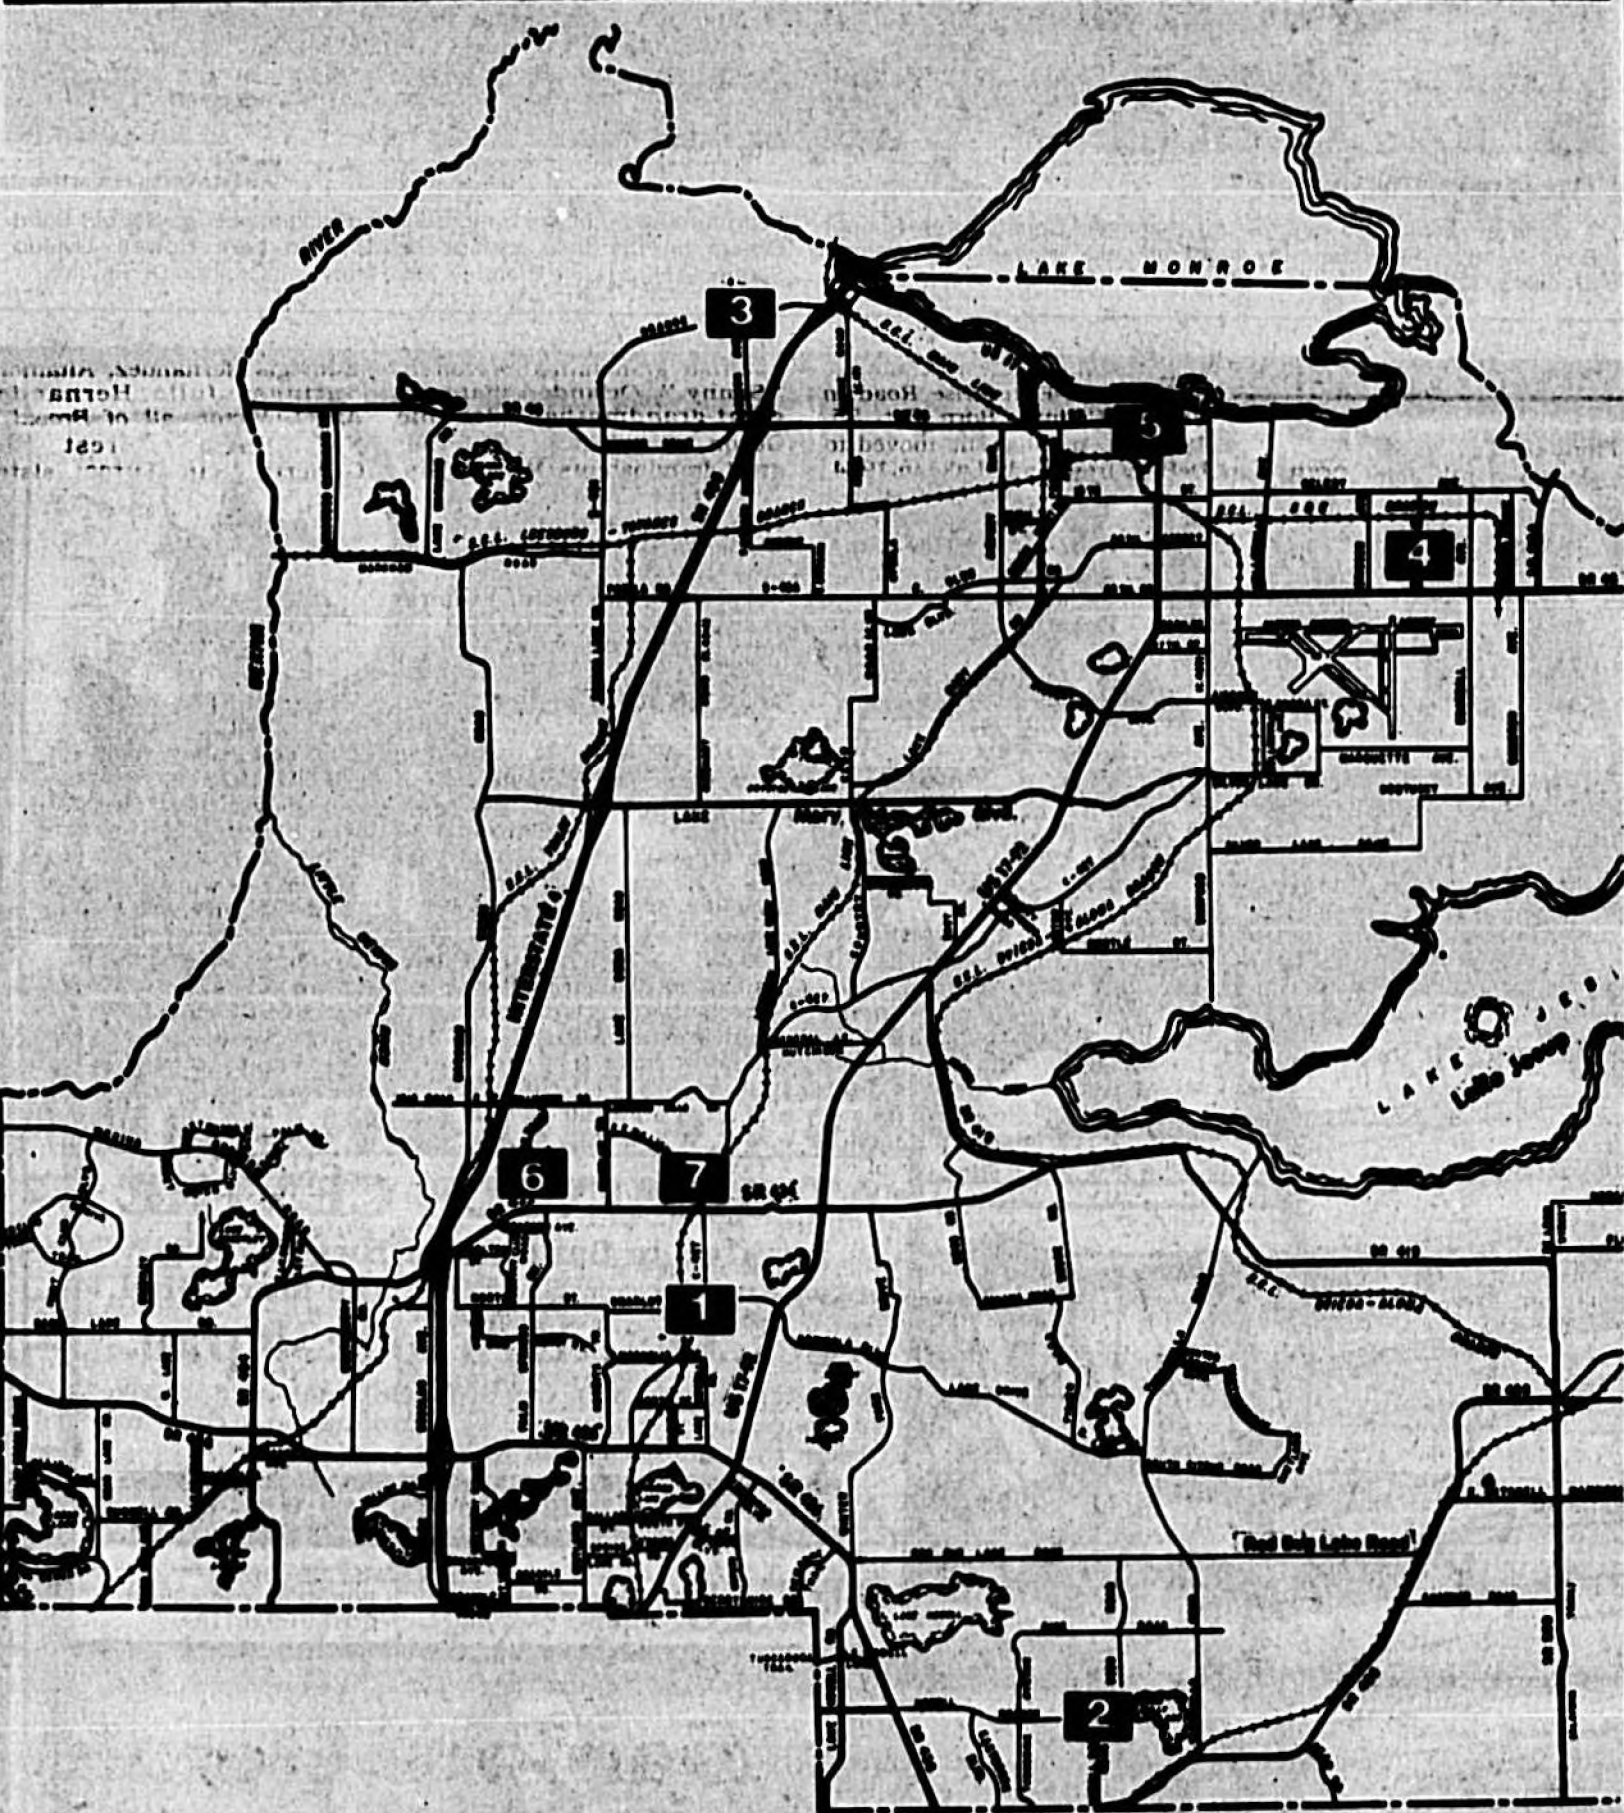

Bush called Ortega "one little man out of whack with the rest of the hemisphere" and insisted he was "not going to judge a salute to democracy ... by the fact that Ortega looks like an unwanted animal at a garden party."

But Ortega's announcement that he planned to end the cease-fire dominated the summit, which had been called to combat drugs, eliminate debt and promote the spread of democracy in the region.

Bush said if Ortega follows through with the suspension of the 19-month-old cease-fire, "that will change the equation 180 degrees." But the president declined to say how the United States would respond.

SANFORD — The Seminole County School Board and Seminole Community College will sponsor a Science Fun Day Oct. 28 from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Students from elementary school through college will have exhibits, demonstrations, presentations and "hands-on" activities in buildings on the SCC campus in Sanford.

Demonstrations and exhibits from private industries will include lasers and holograms, space beams, crime lab, hydroponics (water-grown vegetation), dinosaur models, and fire department equipment.

Students will be dressed as scientists. Prizes will be available for all, and refreshments will be sold.

The event, open to the public, is made possible by a grant from the American Chemical Society.

Reclaimed water system moves forward

SANFORD — Installation of reclaimed water irrigation lines at Pinehurst Park off 24th Street has been completed.

Irrigation is now being installed at the city cemetery off 25th Street, Mayfair Golf Course off County Road 46-A and Speer Park off Melonville Avenue.

The reclaimed water system is one of the alternatives the city has chosen to dumping treated sewage into Lake Monroe.

Recreation program begun after school

SANFORD — The city cultural affairs department has begun daily after school programs at Pinecrest, Goldboro and Hamilton elementary schools.

Three recreation leaders at each site run daily organized activities for students from 3 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. Students from grades two through five may participate in the program.

Court validates city certificates

SANFORD — About $3.9 million in certificates of participation were validated in circuit court Thursday for the city of Sanford's purchase of various equipment.

The certificates, which are similar to bonds, will allow the city to make payments over the lives of the various equipment purchased.

SANFORD — Contractors may now request building inspections 24 hours a day.

The city building department has installed a recording system for contractors needing inspections. Requests for inspections must be made 24 hours before the time requested.

The preceding day, Hill had been charged with burglary, charged in connection with the kidnapping of another elderly Sanford woman.

Attacks

Neighbors said they have been asking management for bars on the windows and doors, more protection and better lighting.

Eddie Mae Dixon, 72, said three years ago, someone removed the glass pane from her door to gain entry into her home. Dixon said she is "very scared" since last week's attack. To protect herself, she has put some safety devices on her windows but she is not satisfied with security at the dormitory-style quarters. The apartments are subsidized by the Sanford Housing Authority.

"We really don't have the right protection here. They (Sanford Housing Authority) promised us bars," she said. But none of the promises have been kept, she added.

"They say one thing and turn around and do the other," Dixon help Glen when the man who attacked her allegedly cracked her bathroom window and entered her home. The beating left her seriously injured and required hospitalization.

Police crime scene tape looped around a streetlamp post and a tree trunk is the only eerie reminder of the brutality committed against Glen. Mildred Carver, an elderly woman who was beaten and murdered this summer at her residence on Lake View Avenue, wasn't so lucky.

Residents fear there is more to come.

"I think we should have more protection," said Ethel Campbell, 81, who said she's had her front door screen cut. "I'm afraid to walk at night."

And Gladys Thornton, who was robbed of her pocketbook when someone broke in her apartment, said the trouble hasn't stopped.

"I remember sitting watching TV and looked up to see a man peeping in my window," she said.

Lawrence blames it on the fact that young people are allowed to live in the complex. She said she hasn't seen this much violence in the 17 years she has lived there.

"It's a gang of them. At night time when they feel like everyone is gone to bed, they come out again," she said.

Lawrence was a friend of Glen. The two women used to walk to the mailbox together, then Glen would go directly home where she stayed most of the time.

Lawrence said she didn't see anything the night her friend was attacked. Now she is scared for her own life.

"They could do the same to me. There's no protection out here. I don't think I had sleep all night. I listen every minute," she said.

Jury indicts parents of boy who shot friend

United Press International

PALATKA — A grand jury has indicted on misdemeanor charges the parents of a 9-year-old boy who shot and killed a 10-year-old playmate, bypassing possible felony charges under a new state gun law.

The Putnam County grand jury also issued Friday an opinion that the new law making parents potentially liable for shootings committed by their children is not broad enough.

The jurors wrote that the parents, Calvin R. Bell and Heather C. Bell of San Mateo, Fla., were negligent because the son had complete control of the gun and access to ammunition.

But the jurors decided the parents could not be charged under the new law because they did not load the gun involved in the shooting.

The Bells were each charged with one second-degree misdemeanor count of allowing a child under the age of 18 to possess a firearm while unsupervised. They each face a maximum penalty of 60 days in jail and a $500 fine.

"We believe the present language ... is inadequate to offer the protection to children intended by the law," the opinion said. "We believe though, that the Legislature should revisit this entire section of the law and make it illegal for parents to let their minor children have complete access and control of firearms, loaded or unloaded."

The gun law, which went into effect Oct. 1, specifies that parents of children under 15 keep loaded weapons out of the hands of children. The parent of a child who shoots someone with a carelessly stored weapon could face felony charges punishable by up to five years in prison and a $5,000 fine.

Brendan Flowe, 9, took a loaded firearm from a rack on his bedroom wall Oct. 8 and accidentally shot Scott Carlton, 10, in the abdomen. Carlton died after being flown to University Medical Center in Jacksonville, Fla.

Carlton's mother, Cindy Murray, said she was upset by the grand jury decision.

"I'm outraged, to start with," she said. "I think a stiffer penalty should apply because of the high level of negligence involved."

The Bells were released on an unsecured bond.

FBI nabs 'most-wanted' fugitive

United Press International

LAKE WALES — A fugitive on the FBI's 10 Most Wanted list who was charged with crimes in five states, including rape and attempted murder in Florida, was arrested without incident Saturday at a motel, officials said.

The FBI and local officials arrested Bobbie G. Dennis, 39, of Falmouth, Ky., about 12:30 a.m. and charged him with federal unlawful flight, said Robert W. Butler, special agent in charge of the Tampa FBI office.

Metro-Dade County officials have charged Dennis, also known as Daniel Geno DeAngelo, with armed burglary, rape and attempted murder.

Dennis, who has been on the FBI's Top 10 list since February, was featured in September on the NBC television series "Unsolved Mysteries," Butler said.

A comparison of photos on the TV show with a driver's license photo that Dade County officials had led to the identification of DeAngelo as Dennis, the FBI said.

Officials said they identified Dennis by a tattooed "Sandy" on his left arm.

Crackdown

Officers and members of the Florida Highway Patrol and Orange County Sheriff's Department.

"What we're seeing here are hard-core addicts, no casual users are here tonight," Kellinger said during Friday night's roundup in Altamonte Springs. Kellinger is intelligence coordinator of Zone Four of the state task force, which includes seven other Central Florida Counties in addition to Seminole County.

In at least one case, a suspected buyer was not deterred from making his own drug deal as he watched agents take down another suspect about 20 feet away in Altamonte Springs. The lawmen nabbed him too. In another instance, two men who brought their small children along were charged with child abuse in addition to narcotics violations.

Another man made a deal with an undercover decoy while a OCIB agent was parked just four feet away with an emergency police light mounted on the dashboard of his car. That same man had the misfortune of losing his hairpiece in a struggle with police.

In Rock Pile crackdowns in June and August more arrests were made both locally and statewide.

In the first crackdown here, 96 persons, including 60 accused drug buyers, were arrested in one night. In the second operation, 117 arrests, including 91 suspected buyers, were made in two nights. Statewide totals in previous sweeps were more than 2,000 each time. This time, statewide arrest totals as of midnight Saturday were 1,340, with 1,760 pieces of crack cocaine, 124 vehicles, almost $200,000 in cash and 62 firearms confiscated.

Three firearms were seized here, along with 17 pieces of crack cocaine valued at $340, Kellinger said.

During the crackdown, 25 kilos of powder cocaine bearing Spanish markings washed ashore in Flagler County and were confiscated, Kellinger said.

In the Central Florida Zone, 473 arrests were made, including 150 for sale and delivery of cocaine, 10 for possession of cocaine, three for trafficking in cocaine, 23 for simple possession of cocaine and 206 for purchasing or attempting to purchase controlled substances. There were 63 other related vice arrests and 90 vehicles were among almost $278,000 worth of property seized in Central Florida.

A two-month, joint CCIB and Sanford police investigation targeting suspected street dealers of crack cocaine in the city, culminated in the identification of 11 suspected dealers, who were either arrested in the sweep or have warrants pending, Kellinger said.

The U.S. Coast Guard and Customs Agents joined the state raid and boarded 33 vessels in Volusia County. Twelve aircraft at Daytona Beach Regional Airport were also targeted in the sweep and 7,000 pieces of luggage were searched at that site. Vehicular stops were made by state troopers and Volusia and Osceola county sheriff's deputies working Florida's turnpike and interstates. But no contraband was found in these investigations, Kellinger said.

The 117 Seminole County arrests are broken down as follows: 23 for sale and delivery of cocaine, four for possession of cocaine to distribute, one simple possession, 56 for purchasing or attempting to purchase controlled substances, and 33 others including two arrests made by Casselberry police in which the suspects were charged with issuing fake prescriptions, and 15 men accused of soliciting for sex from a female police decoy. The Florida Highway Patrol, in advance this week and during the operation arrested 11 men for allegedly soliciting for sex from undercover male troopers working an interstate rest stop near Longwood.

Walther was driving in the area of Fifth and Olive streets when he was shot.

Assistant State Attorney Tom Hastings played a tape recording of the police communications around the time of the shooting. Jurors heard the call reporting shots fired at Lake Monroe Terrace, and later heard Welter call in "I've been hit."

Investigators found spent casings from 30-30 cartridges near Apartment 25, Cowan Moughton Terrace.

Taylor and Leah N. Fields, 19, 157 Bethune Circle, were arrested about a week after the shootings. The State Attorney's Office reported a charge of use of a firearm while on probation was filed against Fields Friday.

Mavericks' Tarpley shows up

DALLAS — Dallas Mavericks forward Roy Tarpley, a twice-institutionalized cocaine user who disappeared for several hours Friday, appeared as promised at practice Saturday.

Tarpley attended a morning workout, but it was not clear if he would be able to remain with the team.

If he fails a drug test or refuses to take one, he would be suspended for life from the NBA.

The NBA drug policy, despite the lifetime ban, allows for a player's reinstatement after two years.

Tarpley telephoned General Manager Norm Sonju at 7:15 p.m. Friday, apologizing for his absence and saying he would be at Saturday's practice.

The Mavericks, in a tersely-worded statement, did not say where Tarpley had been or why he missed practice.

The team fined him $250. Coach John MacLeod said he expected Tarpley to play Sunday against Indiana in the Mavericks' final preseason game.

Berardi pulls out Budweiser

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — Joe Berardi rolled a pair of clutch strikes in the last two frames of the title game Saturday afternoon to win the Budweiser Challenge with a 210-209 triumph over Marshall Holman.

The top-seeded Holman, from Medford, Ore., opened the championship game with the first of three splits he would suffer, failing to convert any of them. However, Holman's seven strikes came in an eight-frame period and kept him in the match until Berardi got up in the 10th. Holman's third missed split in the final frame allowed Berardi the chance to strike twice and add an eight count to grab the title.

Berardi, from Wellington, Fla., got his first strike in the 10th frame by crossing in front of the headpin and hitting it on the left instead of the right side. His second strike was perfect.

"I tried to get the ball (to the) right. My nerves took over and I just couldn't calm down," Berardi said.

Levi leads Nabisco

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. — Wayne Levi, winless since 1985 and unable to break 70 in 14 previous rounds at Harbour Town, tied the course record with a 63 Saturday to pass a faltering Tom Kite and take a one-stroke lead after three rounds of the $2.5 million Nabisco Championships.

Levi opened with a front-side 30 and added birdies at 15 and 17 to stand at 7-under-par 206. First-round leader Donnie Hammond led Levi by one shot before bogeys on the final two holes left him at 69 and 6-under 207.

Kite, whose second-round 65 gave him a four-shot advantage midway through the Tour's richest event, opened with a double bogey-6 and added three bogeys in a self-destructing 74 that left him two shots behind. Greg Norman (68), Fred Couples (74) and Mark O'Meara (71) are three back while defending Nabisco champion Curtis Strange crept within five strokes with a 68.

Barrasso out with broken wrist

PITTSBURGH — Pittsburgh Penguins goaltender Tom Barrasso has a broken bone in his right wrist and surgery has been recommended, which would sideline him for about six weeks.

Barrasso suffered what originally was thought to be a bruised hand while catching a shot against Montreal on Oct. 14 and X-rays at that time were negative.

Barrasso missed three games then played two games but the wrist continued to bother him. The break was discovered Friday.

Barrasso had a 1-3-1 record and 4.09 goals-against average.

Wendell Young and Frank Pietrangelo will play goal for the Penguins in Barrasso's absence.

UCF upsets Liberty

By MARK BLYTHE
Herald Sports Writer

ORLANDO — Quarterback Ron Johnson capped an 14-play, 80-yard drive with a 1-yard touchdown run to lift the University of Central Florida Knights to a 33-30 upset of Division I-AA's ninth-ranked Liberty University Flames Saturday night at the Orlando Citrus Bowl.

Johnson, who also passed for 94 yards in his first collegiate start, scored the game-winning touchdown with 2:40 left in the contest, which also happened to be UCF's homecoming game.

UCF, 5-3, racked up 318 yards on the ground thanks largely to the efforts of Mark Giacone, Willie English and Paul Ballsis, who combined for 293 of those yards.

"We would have thrown only if we had to on the final drive," said UCF coach Gene McDowell. "We split our tailbacks, using them two plays each because they were getting tired late in the game. I think Giacone and English did a good job on that final drive."

Giacone and English rushed for 67 of the 80 yards on the game-winning drive.

On the kickoff following Johnson's touchdown, the Knights' Jesse Brown sealed the victory by recovering a bloop kickoff and racing to the Flames' 31. UCF then picked up two first crucial first downs, running out the clock and keeping the ball away from the dangerous Liberty offense.

The Knights looked as if they would take command of the game early in the second half as they jumped out to a 26-10 lead. Leading 13-10 at halftime, English and Giacone scored touchdowns less than a minute apart midway through the third quarter.

UCF's explosion was kindled by Kevin Butler, who intercepted a pass on Liberty's first play after the touchdown by English. Giacone then rushed 20 yards to give the Knights a 16-point advantage.

But Liberty came back by exploiting UCF's secondary, passing for touchdowns on three consecutive possessions. The final one came on an 8-yard reception by Greg White with 9:13 to play.

The Knights took the ensuing kickoff and ran 6:33 off the clock with 14 consecutive running plays on their game-winning drive.

Quarterback Ron Johnson (No. 15) scored on a 1-yard run with 2:40 to play to give the University of Central Florida a 33-30 upset over Liberty.

Somewhere in this mass of humanity, Lyman's Cedric Bouey is scoring a touchdown on a 1-yard dive to give the Greyhounds a 6-0 lead. But the advantage

DeLand comes home to beat Lyman

By PHIL SMITH

DeLAND — Homecoming can be very nice, especially when one hasn't been home for four weeks.

That was the case for the DeLand Bulldogs Friday night as they ended a three-game losing streak by defeating the Lyman Greyhounds 28-12 before 5,000 fans at Spec Martin Stadium in their first home game since September.

The Bulldogs, now 3-4 overall, 3-3 in 5A-District 4 and 1-3 in the Seminole Athletic Conference, were led by Robert Baldwin, who rushed for 142 yards on 26 carries and two touchdowns.

Lyman's Greyhounds now 4-4 overall, 2-4 in 5A-District 4 and 1-3 in the SAC, were paced by Cedric Bouey's 153 yards on 18 carries and two touchdowns. The Greyhounds jumped out of the blocks quickly as they took the opening kickoff and marched 75 yards on eight plays, Bouey scoring from the 1-yard line.

But the Bulldogs would not be denied. DeLand took the ensuing kickoff and controlled the ball for 7:20, driving 74 yards on six plays and three Lyman touchdowns. See Bulldogs, Page 3B

DAYTONA BEACH — Cortez Graves can't believe how lucky he is.

A senior fullback for the undefeated Lake Howell football team, Graves scored a pair of touchdowns Friday night in the Silver Hawks' 77-8 win over the Spruce Creek Hawks, spoiling Spruce Creek's homecoming festivities at the Daytona Beach Municipal Stadium.

Now 8-0 and ranked No. 4 in Class 5A, Lake Howell is two games away from a perfect season and a berth in the Region II playoff game. And Graves, who moved to Florida as a junior from Detroit, occasionally wonders what he did to deserve to be a part of it all.

"I remember playing at 3:30 in the afternoon before 20 people as a sophomore in Detroit," said Graves. "My first game at Lake Howell, we played Apopka in front of 9,000 people. I was really nervous, forgetting plays."

But Graves' personal growth as the dangerous counterpart to All-Everything teammate Marquette Smith somewhat parallels that of the Silver Hawks. Last year, Lake Howell started the season 2-3. They haven't lost a game since.

SAN FRANCISCO — The Oakland Athletics won a Title Without Champagne Saturday night, holding off the San Francisco Giants 9-6 and completing a World Series sweep that was torn by the Earthquake of '89.

Rickey Henderson opened the game with a homer, Mike Moore notched his second victory of this World Series and Dennis Eckersley recorded a save, clinching the first sweep since the 1976 Cincinnati

Reds downed the New York Yankees.

Moore doubled home two runs with the first World Series hit by an American League pitcher in this decade and Terry Steinbach drove in three runs, two with a triple. With 62,032 watching, the A's completed a quest that began with last year's five-game loss to the Dodgers.

Kevin Mitchell and Greg Litton hit two-run homers to lead a Giants comeback. In fact, if a Mitchell shot had not died on the warning track to end a four-run seventh inning, San Francisco would have tied the score.

All this came too late to help sore-kneed Don Robinson. He lasted just 1 2/3 innings, giving Giant starters a total of 17 earned runs in 13 innings.

Not since 1976 had any team swept the Fall Classic, and seldom had any club won with such style. Oakland outscored its Bay Area rival 37-14, with only the last one close at the end.

Even so, Oakland's title came while the Bay Area was recovering from an earthquake.

Patriots blanked by Lake Weir

By MARK BLYTHE
Herald sports writer

CANDLER — Lake Weir capitalized on penalty-riddled Lake Brantley to record their sixth win in a row, 28-0, Friday night in a 5A-District 4 meeting at Lake Weir High School.

The Golden Hurricanes improved to 6-2 overall, 5-2 in the district, and will have a week off before hosting Spruce Creek. The Patriots fell to 4-4 overall, 4-3 in the district, and will travel to Seminole this Friday.

"I'm very pleased with our defense," Lake Weir coach Joe Register said. "They played an outstanding ballgame. Our coaches did a great job preparing them and they went out and executed the game plan."

That game plan worked to perfection as the Patriots could never find a way to effectively move the ball. Lake Brantley's powerful running game was totally shut down and it was forced to go to the pass early.

"They (Lake Weir) gave us some screwy looks," Lake Brantley coach Fred Almon said. "They kept lining up differently and not allowing us to run wide or up the middle. We just didn't run our offense and that really hurt us."

When the Patriots did manage to get good field position, or started moving the football, they were hurt by penalties. Lake Brantley was flagged for 16 penalties on the night for a total of 162 yards.

The penalties gave Lake Weir the early momentum, as two 15 yard infractions were called on the opening drive of the game. The first was a roughing the kicker call, followed by a late hit which moved the ball down to the Brantley 20-yard line.

After a 1-yard loss, Hurricane quarterback Vernon Buck hooked up with Gordon Lightsey on a 15-yard pass play to move the ball to the 6-yard line. After moving inside the 1-yard line Buck went over the top for the game's first score.

Lake Brantley came right back and moved the ball 44 yards on its opening drive before a procedure call and a sack stalled the drive.

Lake Weir capitalized quickly as Buck found Lightsey for an 18-yard TD strike early in the second period. The point after attempt failed and the Canes led 13-0 with 9:16 to

Commission trying to improve boating safety

Editor's note: Recently, the Florida Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission issued a press release describing what steps they are taking to reverse the alarming trend in boating accidents and resulting deaths. Because this information is important to all sportsmen who venture out on Florida's waters, here is this information released by the Commission verbatim.

The Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission has placed eight new powerboats in service to reverse Florida's unenviable record as the No. 1 state for boating deaths.

Using federal funding, the Commission has purchased the specially-designed, 20-foot boats. They will join the Commission's 24-foot powerboat to form a high-profile, state-of-the-art law enforcement fleet that will see duty on Florida's larger lakes and rivers.

"These boats are part of our efforts to make Florida's waterways safer for the increasing number of people who use them," said Capt. Bob Poole, the Commission's boating safety coordinator. "The 24-foot powerboat already has had a positive effect on our boating safety program, and the addition of eight more boats will enhance that."

The Sailfish model boats feature a center console, T-top, 225-horsepower motor and other special equipment.

Poole said the boats will be used for search and rescue operations as well as boating safety enforcement patrol.

In addition to obtaining new boats, Commission efforts to promote safe boating include safety inspections of boats by wildlife officers and reservations. Off the water, the Commission is promoting boating safety through public service announcements, posters and a float plan program.

If boaters fill out a float plan before an excursion, it will speed up search and rescue operations, saving time and lives," Poole said.

The Commission plans to supplement its boating safety efforts in the future with education campaigns aimed at both adults and students, boating safety handbooks and additional safety and rescue training for its officers.

Lendl, Mecir to meet in ECU tourney finals

United Press International

ANTWERP, Belgium - Top seed Ivan Lendl defeated Michael Chang 6-2, 6-3, Saturday to reach the final of the $1 million European Community Championships for the fifth time in as many tournament appearances.

Lendl, who has won all his previous finals at Antwerp, will meet fellow Czechoslovakian Miloslav Mecir, a 6-4, 7-5 winner over Brad Gilbert.

Lendl put pressure on Chang's speedy game and hit six aces in the first set to rebuff any challenge from the teenager who had upset Lendl in the French Open this year.

"I hit the ball hard when Chang came on second service, which I know is his weakest point," Lendl said. "He is very fast though and can run many balls down."

In the second set, Lendl broke Chang twice in the first and third game to take a 3-0 lead but Chang broke Lendl in the fourth game to draw within 3-1.

Lendl remained in perfect control for the remainder of the match, checking Chang's speed with powerful returns to take the second set and the match.

Lendl, awaited the winner of the match between Miloslav Mecir and Brad Gilbert.

Mecir started well with a breakpoint in the fourth game, but Gilbert broke back in the seventh game. Mecir again broke Gilbert to take the first set 6-4.

In the second set, Mecir rallied to tie 5-5 with consecutive service breaks. He won the next two games to clinch the match.

Struggling Graf gets into indoor title match

United Press International

BRIGHTON, England - Steffi Graf, finding fault with her performance right up to the final of the $250,000 Women's Indoor Tournament, Saturday termed her 4-6, 6-3, 6-3 semifinal triumph over Jana Novotna one of her hardest matches this year.

"I know I can play much better, and I know Sunday's going to be totally different," said Graf after the top seed from West Germany beat the fourth-seeded Jana Novotna of Czechoslovakia.

"I may not have played very well, but I won and that's what matters."

Graf will face 15-year-old Yugoslavian Monica Seles in the final. Seles, the third seed and ranked seventh in the world, eliminated Bulgarian Manuela Maleeva 6-3, 6-2.

During the French Open, Seles took Graf to three sets in the semifinals. Graf won 6-3, 3-6, 6-3 and lost to Arantxa Sanchez in the final.

Novotna dominated Graf in the first set. She served five aces, including two in the sixth game. The next two times Novotna served, the world's No. 1 player could not win a point.

"I had my chances today," Novotna said. "I started quite well, I didn't give her the chance, but I just couldn't hold her."

Novotna lost some strength in the last two sets and the West German was able to take advantage of her opponent's predicament.

The ace advantage shifted as Graf dialed out two in the second game and one in the third, and Novotna did not win a point on Graf's serves in the last game of the second set.

"I knew it was going to be a harder match, but I was ready," Graf said. "I let her run quite a bit in the second set."

Novotna won the first two games in the third set but Graf took over until the sixth game when they played deuce three times.

NFL PREVIEW: WEEK 8

Tampa Bay (3-4) at Cincinnati (4-3)

Favorites — Cincinnati by 6 1/2.
Turf — Artificial.

Buccaneers coach Ray Perkins — "We're getting an education as far as playing against really fine football teams. We're finding out against by constant what it takes to win in this league."
 Bengals coach Sam Wyche — "We blow everybody away on offense last season and they've spent the off-season studying us. Teams are finding some answers and now it's our turn to find some."
 Buccaneers offense — Despite passing coach Vinny Testaverde, Bucs are third-worst offensive team in NFL.

Miami (4-3) at Buffalo (5-2)

Favorites — Bills by 4.
Turf — Artificial.

Dolphins coach Dan Staley — "We haven't done well in the AFC East — one of the real disappointments was not winning the opener against Buffalo."
 Bills coach Marv Levy — "I'm very pleased with what Frank (Reich) has done. I'm on the brink of thrilled."
 Bills offense — QB Frank Reich has thrown for five TDs in two games, since Jim Kelly was sidelined with a fractured left shoulder. Ground game has been found in last two wins, with FB Larry Kinnebrew playing big role in last week's victory over New York Jets.

San Diego (2-5) at Seattle (3-4)

Favorites — Seattle by 6 1/2.
Turf — Artificial.

Chargers coach Dan Henning — "Billy (Joe Telfer) had a good preseason and we want to see if he's ready. We need a WR. He is replacing a quarterback (Jim McMahon) who's banged up, laid down, has taken a lot of hits and is not playing as well as he did earlier. If Telfer doesn't come up to the level we want to see, we'll go back to McHaleen."
 Seahawks coach Chuck Knox — "Will he (Telfer) go deep on us? Everybody takes some deep shots in a game. We just haven't defended the long pass very well. We've made too many mistakes on coverage."

Detroit (1-6) at Green Bay (3-4)

Favorites — Packers by 6.
Turf — Natural.

Lions coach Wayne Ferris — "The thing that's bugging us obviously is laying the ball on the ground. We have too many turnovers to be consistent. If anyone thinks I'm going to junk this offense, no. There'll be some changes, but don't expect any wholesale changes."
 Packers coach Lindy Infante — "This football team's got a lot of fight in it. We've been in locker rooms almost every week, it seems, where we're down (at halftime) and make it a football game — in most cases. And we've won our share of them."

Washington (4-3) at LA Raiders (3-4)

Favorites — Washington by 1.
Turf — Natural.

Redskins coach Joe Gibbs — "Nothing has changed. It's still a hard fight every week."
 Raiders coach Art Shell — "We have worked our butts off and we're going to get better."
 Redskins offense — QB Mark Rypien continues to be inconsistent, but had five efforts in last week's 20-20 victory over Tampa Bay, completing 34 of 50 passes for 281 yards; RB Gerald Riggs had 27 carries for 99 yards last week; WRs Art Monk, Ricky Sanders and Gary Clark may be NFL's best receiving corps.

Houston (4-3) at Cleveland (4-3)

Favorites — Cleveland by 2 1/2.
Turf — Natural.

Oilers coach Jerry Glavine — Mike Raster's return from injury "was a big loss last week. Everybody says we have good backs and know we do, but Raster is a little bit different... He brings a defensive temperament, both him and Alonzo (Highsmith) do, to an offensive team. These guys are like linebackers. They would rather hit you than try to miss you."
 Browns coach Bud Carson — "I know the Browns have struggled a little on offense against the Oilers, but so has everybody else. They rush the passer as well as anybody and they have a strong, aggressive secondary."

LA Rams (5-2) at Chicago (4-3)

Favorites — Bears by 2 1/2.
Turf — Grass.

Los Angeles coach John Robinson — "Last week we played horrible football — the worst performance we've had. You have one or two of those a year. We just put two back-to-back."
 Chicago coach Mike Ditka — "A couple wins in a row would be good medicine right now to this football team."
 Rams offense — QB Jim Everett was 34 of 48 for 383 yards and a TD with two interceptions in last week's 49-21 loss to the Saints. His favorite target, WR Henry Ellard, caught seven passes for 75 yards and a TD. RB Greg Bell carried 14 times for 55 yards, giving him 659 yards rushing for the season.

San Francisco (6-1) at NY Jets (1-6)

Favorites — 49ers by 6 1/2.
Turf — Artificial.

49ers coach George Seftor — "This is a different club than the one that won the championship a year ago. Every week there's something else that comes up to challenge the strength of the club. We haven't seen the type of club to go out there and dominate anyone."
 Jets coach Joe Walton — "Steve Young's an excellent runner. Joe Montana's not a bad scrambler, but he doesn't run as much as Young. Young runs out a little more. Our defense is improving. Some of the young guys are getting better."
 49ers offense — Steve Young starts for injured QB Joe Montana.

New England (2-5) at Indianapolis (4-3)

Favorites — Colts by 4.
Turf — Artificial.

Colts coach Tom Meyer — "We're playing a tough team, one that is probably struggling a little bit road-wise but has explosive talent."

Kansas City (3-4) at Pittsburgh (3-4)

Favorites — Pittsburgh by 2 1/2.
Turf — Artificial.

Chiefs coach Marty Schottenheimer — "We want to recapture the 1985. There is an excellent tradition of winning here and we can build on that."

Atlanta (2-5) at New Orleans (3-4)

Favorites — New Orleans by 7.
Turf — Artificial.

Atlanta coach Marion Campbell — "I'm angry (about the loss to Phoenix), and I hope everybody else is too. Better yet, I hope they are ready to do something about it."

Minnesota (5-2) at NY Giants (6-1)

Favorites — Giants by 2 1/2.
Turf — Artificial.

Vikings coach Jerry Burns — "This year, realistically, maybe we can approach our goal."

Phoenix (3-4) at Dallas (6-7)

Turf — Artificial.

Cardinals coach Gene Stallings — "There is no way for us to play anybody and expect to win unless we have all the respect in the world for that opponent."
 Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson — "It is hard when you are having to struggle every day to look down the road and do the things you have to do to make for a better team in the future."
 Cowboys offense — Running QB in the NFL, Franco had his second-best rushing day of the season last Sunday against Atlanta (158 yards).

Philadelphia (5-2) at Denver (6-1)

Favorites — Denver by 2.
Turf — Natural.

Eagles coach Buddy Ryan — "They're not having to depend on Elway as much as they used to, and that's kind of what we're trying to do with Marshall. We don't want to have to make him the guy that does it all."
 Broncos coach Dan Reeves — "It's a matchup of two solid defensive teams and two offensive teams with great quarterbacks, so it should be a great football game."

'Dream Bowl' riles players, coaches, fans

United Press International

NEW YORK — The greatest football game never played will be televised Sunday night when ESPN broadcasts "The Dream Bowl" between the 1972 Miami Dolphins and 1978 Pittsburgh Steelers.

The "Dream Bowl" is the culmination of an eight-week series on the cable network. The six-week regular season included 20 of the greatest NFL teams in history, with four advancing to the playoffs. The results came from a computer and were brought to life by some fancy editing by Steve Sabol of NFL Films.

Although Sabol conceived the "Dream Season" as a fun project, he found it taken seriously by fans, coaches and players from the teams involved.

"I'll never do this again," Sabol said, promising there will be no "Dream Bowl II."

"I've lost lifelong friends. We made it so realistic, a lot of former players and coaches took it seriously. Hank Stram told me I cut his guts out when the '69 Chiefs lost. Jim Turner called and said he would've never missed a 40-yard game-winning field goal like he did in one of the games, old Packers called up complaining they didn't make the playoffs and I heard from the 49ers fan club, saying they never would've lost to the Lombardi Packers."

"Of course, Fred Biletnikoff and Al Davis thought it was great when the '76 Raiders beat the '85 Bears to make the playoffs. Gene Upshaw told me that's exactly what would've happened if they played."

Sabol has yet to hear from Biletnikoff, Upshaw and Davis since the Raiders were defeated by the '72 Dolphins in the playoffs, however.

No matter what happens in the "Dream Bowl," Sabol is certain to hear from the losing team.

"It would be tough to accept if we lost," said Franco Harris, the leading rusher from the Steelers' 1970s dynasty that won four Super Bowls. "I look at our team over a 10-year span. When you look at it that way, it's hard to find a team better. They could've taken any of our teams from our more mature years, after '74. We had some of the greatest players ever assembled."

The '78 Steelers included Hall of Famers Terry Bradshaw at quarterback, Joe Greene at defensive tackle, Jack Ham at linebacker and Mel Blount at cornerback, plus Harris and wide receivers Lynn Swann and John Stallworth. They were coached by Chuck Noll, who still coaches Pittsburgh and is the second winningest active coach.

Alabama again frustrates Penn State

United Press International

The ghosts of the 1978 Sugar Bowl arose Saturday to frustrate No. 13 Penn State again.

Thomas Rayam blocked an 18-yard field-goal attempt with 13 seconds remaining, preserving No. 5 Alabama's 17-16 victory over the Nittany Lions and keeping the Crimson Tide unbeaten.

The play brought back memories of that Sugar Bowl 11 years ago, when Alabama stuffed Penn State four times from inside the 1-yard line to emerge with a 14-7 victory over the Nittany Lions. Alabama finished the season ranked second in the nation behind Southern Cal.

"To have an outstanding season, you have to win games like this," said Alabama coach Bill Curry, whose team improved to 7-0 on the season.

The Nittany Lions faced third-and-goal from inside the 1 with 15 seconds to play Saturday and no time-out remaining. Penn State Coach Joe Paterno then sent Tarasol onto the field to attempt his fourth field goal of the day.

But the snap by Mark Lawn was high and Rayam blocked the kick.

"We had a shot at winning it and we didn't make it," Paterno said. "We had the bad snap. If the snap was good, it was going to be fine."

Rayam said the Crimson Tide "ran a desperation block."

"My job was to open up a hole and let Mike Ramil get in, but I managed to get enough penetration and blocked the kick with my right hand," he said. "We just pulled together. We weren't going to give up. We weren't going to give them anything."

Rich Schonewolf had intercepted a Gary Hollingsworth pass to give Penn State the ball at its own 31 with 6:37 to play and Blair Thomas carried 11 straight plays. Thomas went into the end zone on his last attempt, but the officials ruled he was down short of the goal line.

"I was jumping up at the time," said Thomas, who finished with 160 yards on 35 carries. "I knew I was in."

But the officials said he wasn't and Penn State went for the field goal Paterno had been anticipating.

"I didn't want to take any silly chances," Paterno said. "I told Blair, 'If you can get it in, get it in. But whatever you do, keep it in the middle of the goalposts and hang on to the ball.'"

Alabama scored on a 12-yard run by Brian Stacy, a 6-yard pass from Hollingsworth to Lamond Russell and a 32-yard field goal by Phillip Doyle.

Penn State, 5-2, scored on a 18-yard pass from Tony Bacca to O.J. McDuffie and on field goals of 28, 23 and 46 yards by Tarasol.

Elsewhere in the Top 20, No. 3 Colorado upended Oklahoma 20-3. No. 4 Nebraska rolled past Iowa State 40-17. No. 6 Michigan blasted Indiana 38-10. No. 9 Illinois pummeled Wisconsin 33-9. No. 12 Tennessee outlasted Louisiana State 45-30. No. 14 West Virginia held off Boston College 44-30. No. 17 North Carolina State defeated South Carolina 20-10 and No. 19 Clemson thumped Wake Forest 44-10.

In late games, No. 1 Notre Dame was at home against No. 7 Pittsburgh. No. 10 Southern Cal played host to Stanford. No. 11

SPORTS FANS!

I BET YOU DIDN'T KNOW

Brought to you by Ken Rummel

Ever wonder why quarterbacks in football are called quarterbacks? Although most quarterbacks today stand either right under center, or back deep in the shotgun formation, in the early days of football, quarterbacks lined up a QUARTER of the way back between the line and the fullback... In those days, halfbacks stood half way back and fullbacks lined up in the deepest position... But with the coming of the T-formation, quarterbacks moved from their "quarter back" position... However, we still call them quarterbacks.

Of all the field goal kickers in National Football League history, which one kicked the most field goals in one season? The record is held by Al Hall-Grubb who kicked 68 for the Giants in 1953.

The fastest-growing sport in America today, according to several marketing reports, is golf... They say the number of golfers in the U.S. rose from about 17 million in 1986 to more than 22 million last year, an increase of about 40%. Some 2,000 new golf courses are expected to be built in the nation in the next 10 years.

The screening consists of a simple kidney x-ray and a urinalysis. Both tests can determine the presence of calcium stones and other possible urinary tract disorders. The results of the tests will be reported to the participant.

Anyone with abnormal findings will be encouraged to see his or her family physician. The tests will not be administered to pregnant women.

For more information and to register for the free screening, call Linda Weinberg at 767-1200, extension 265, between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Skin cancer rates skyrocket

United Press International

BOSTON — The skin cancer rate may be rising faster than previously estimated, providing more evidence for people to reduce the amount of time they spend in the sun unprotected, researchers said.

The incidence of two forms of skin cancer increased by up to four times between 1980 and 1986 among members of a health maintenance organization in the Portland, Ore., and Vancouver, Wash., area, a new study found.

Dr. Andrew Glass, a researcher at Kaiser Permanente who conducted the study, said the increase is much higher than previous estimates and probably more accurate because it includes every case in the group studied.

"The order of magnitude of these rises in skin cancer hadn't been appreciated," Glass said in an interview. The findings indicate people "really have to limit their sun exposure," he said. "Having a beautiful tan is not the most important thing in this world."

Alarmed by the increase in skin cancer, health officials have been urging the public to avoid direct exposure to harmful ultraviolet light in sunlight and use sunblock or clothing to protect themselves when they are in the sun.

To obtain a better estimate of skin cancer rates, Glass and his colleagues studied the incidence of squamous cell cancer and malignant melanoma among members of the Kaiser Permanente HMO during the 27-year period.

The incidence of squamous cell cancer about tripled for both men and women while the incidence of malignant melanoma more than tripled for men and more than quadrupled for women, the researchers reported.

The rates were about double what had been previously reported for melanoma.

Possible insulin substitute discovered

United Press International

OTTAWA — A group of Canadian scientists has discovered a compound that acts like insulin and may someday prove effective for treating diabetes without bothersome injections.

Dr. John McNeill, dean of pharmaceutical sciences at the University of British Columbia, said scientists found vanadium, a silvery-white metallic element used in alloy steels, acted much like insulin when given orally to diabetic rats.

"Vanadium, in one form or another, can be a substitute for insulin and could greatly improve treatment for diabetes," McNeill said in an interview.

Scientists at the University of British Columbia and a second group at the University of Montpellier in France, are now conducting longer range toxicity tests before testing the substance on human diabetics in a couple of years.

"We're really excited," McNeill said, adding that work on the project began in 1984 after he read reports in medical journals of how mixing vanadium with fat and muscle cells increased the amount of sugar or glucose that moved inside the cell.

"We took that information and decided to test it in the whole animal," said McNeill. "We were fortunate in finding the right amount fairly quickly. We found it worked in the whole animal and again in the test tube."

The vanadium, mixed with oxygen to produce an inorganic compound called vanadyl, could prove a superior treatment to insulin, according to McNeill, because it can be taken orally and in lower doses.

"You don't have to worry about sterilized equipment, injections or infections as a result of injection," McNeill said.

Diabetics suffer from insulin deficiency and cannot metabolize sugars and other food materials efficiently. As a result, sugar accumulates in the blood and is excreted in the urine.

About 11 million Americans currently suffer from diabetes. They are two to six times more likely than other people to have strokes, and one in five diabetics develop cataracts or glaucoma.

The common treatment for diabetes is insulin, which is injected to reduce the concentration of sugar in the blood to that of a normal person.

Some diabetics develop a resistance to insulin. But McNeill said diabetic rats who were treated for six months with vanadyl indicated no such resistance. "Six months is about one-third of their life span and they were doing just fine," he said.

Another problem associated with insulin is regulating the dosage. Too little insulin causes low blood sugar and death, while too much causes high blood sugar and possible kidney and heart problems.

McNeill said vanadyl does not appear to produce marked falls in blood sugar.

Scientists are now testing to determine why the substance other compounds using produces an insulin-like effect. vanadium and are trying to

So many skills, so little time

His aptitudes keep his time occupied

By DAVINA BURCH

A new name should be added to the list of Renaissance men. In the ranks of Leonardo da Vinci and Benjamin Franklin—men who were versatile and accomplished in many areas—could stand Bill Vincent.

Vincent, 50, of Osteen is a photographer, painter, mechanic, cook, fisherman, explorer, plumber, horticulturist and carpenter. This 6-foot gentle giant, who grew up in Sanford, said he owes his know-how to the city.

"Most people along when I was growing up didn't go to college," he said. "My family couldn't put me through college and, of course, I didn't expect them to. I got my education through growing up here in this town. I doubt people could do it like that today, but I learned a lot."

Vincent began working when he was about 12 years old. He would work in the morning before school at a boarding house, helping to clean and cook. After school, Vincent said he would hurry to his job as a press room assistant at the Sanford Herald, where he stacked and bundled papers as they came off the press.

"I began working on the payroll at the Herald when I was 16 making $12.50 a week, and I worked there for 20 years," Vincent said.

Vincent

He moved on to being a photographer, working as an apprentice, getting no pay for his photographs, and spent hours in the evenings working on correspondence courses. His photography skills developed to the point where, at age 36, he was the Herald's chief photographer.

"The newspaper business, to me, always came first. I was on call all the time and I didn't have much time to spend with my wife and daughter," Vincent said.

Walter Glelow, former publisher of the Sanford Herald, said of Vincent: "He did a great job and he was always ready and willing to do it. All of the Vincent boys have worked for us at one time or another and all of them are great boys." (Tommy Vincent is the newspaper's current chief photographer and his brother Don also worked for the newspaper.)

Bill Vincent's newspaper career of 20 years was interrupted only once when he was drafted in the Army in 1961, serving for two years. When Vincent turned 37, he realized he was tired of putting in so much time at the paper.

He said he remembers seeing wire stories about expeditions to places like the South and North poles, and he wondered what the experience would be like. The adventurer in him rose up and he began calling agencies to find out how he could get a job on an expedition.

Through a newspaper ad, he got an interview that led to a hurried physical exam and a three-day Antarctica Conference in Arizona. And within a matter of weeks, Vincent found himself stepping off of a plane onto a bed of ice at the end of the earth.

"When I stepped off the plane, I seen just what I had read in them books and that's what impressed me. It was a vast expanse of nothingness as far as the eye could see," Vincent said. "It was the most beautiful thing I had ever seen. Everybody was wearing bright orange coats and it looked just like something out of one of those outer-space stories."

Vincent said he was hired as the cook on that expedition

Bill Vincent sported a beard and parka in 1976 before taking off for the South Pole on a Lockheed Hercules jet.

because he was willing to do other functions. His skills as a photographer helped the mission and also helped Vincent to fill up some lonely hours.

"The isolation was the thing down there. We didn't have no television or telephones and we had to eat a lot because you burned up calories faster down there," Vincent said. "We had some of the best food you ever tasted because we were given such good supplies."

After six months of polar escapades, Vincent returned to Sanford to work for a construction company for 28 months. He then was hired at Central Florida Regional Hospital, Sanford, where he has worked for about 11 years.

Working at the hospital put him back in touch with people again, he said.

"People are all the time coming up to me and saying, 'How are you, Mr. Vincent?' and I say, 'Fine. How are you?' and I ask them how they know me and they say, 'You look my picture when I was this tall. I think that's kinda neat.'" Vincent grinned.

He remembers seeing a young woman's X-ray and thinking she looked familiar around the eyes.

felt it should go to someone who worked with patients," Vincent said. "Someone told me that my name came up several times the next few years but I was surprised when they gave it to me."

In recommending Vincent for the award, Dr. W. Vincent Roberts said in a letter: "His parents taught him from an early age that love of God and being a good neighbor were the two most important rules he could live by. Bill has never forgotten."

Vincent said winning the award has not changed him in the least. He said he still helps people for the same reason he always has—because that's what is right.

Due to his family's need for him, he doesn't plan on taking off for the South Pole for a while, but he still has wanderlust within him. His plans for the future include working at the hospital for another 11 or so years and enjoying life in the ranch house he built himself.

"I took me one year exactly to the day to build it and I did it by myself with the help of a few friends. I always wanted a big place but I had to do some talkin' to convince my wife to move," Vincent said with a sheepish smile.

Vincent's current passion is for painting. He explained that, although he still takes pictures of nature, he likes painting better because he can create something new.

"There are only so many things you can take pictures of, but when you paint something, you make something nobody has ever seen before. It is uniquely your own," he said.

He said he plans to exhibit his work with the Sanford Art Association.

Vincent's wife, Barbara Ann, is a part-time bookkeeper for Ace Hardware, and his daughter, Lisa, is married, has one child and lives in Longwood.

No matter what roads he travels in life, Vincent said people still think he works as a photographer.

"A lot of people still call me at home and they say, 'Bill, I need you to take some pictures tonight or tomorrow night at 8-o'clock, and I haven't worked for the paper in years!'"

His help welcome in hurricane's wake

By staff and special reports

Army Staff Sgt. Michael L. Fee, son of Denver and Charlene Fee of Sanford, found his services in high demand when Hurricane Hugo roared up the Atlantic coastline and slammed full force on to the shores of South Carolina on Sept. 22.

The state that considered itself safe from hurricanes discovered otherwise when winds in excess of 135 mph ripped homes and businesses from their foundations and toppled trees. Tidal waters surged ashore with a 6-foot wall of water that threw vehicles into homes and scattered debris for hundred of miles.

When the winds subsided and the water receded, emergency relief officials discovered downed electrical lines, communities without water and roads completely covered and blocked. Twenty-four of South Carolina's counties were declared disaster areas.

Federal assistance was requested to help get the state back on its feet. Fee, along with his Army unit, met the call.

"I think it's wonderful," Charlene Fee said of the Army's help. "With all the might they have, that's what they needed in this disaster."

A member of the 3rd Engineer Battalion, Fort Stewart, Ga., Fee aided utility companies by clearing roads so power, water and telephone service could be restored.

His unit also helped residents by distributing food and clothing items donated by Americans across the country. As a preventative measure, Army engineers built a wall of sand on the beaches in anticipation of normally high October tides.

Mrs. Fee said her son and his Army unit finished the cleanup work about two weeks ago. She said he is now in the country of Jordan, constructing buildings.

Born in Virginia, Michael Fee grew up in Ohio. His parents moved to Sanford eight years ago; his father works for Daniels Manufacturing in Orlando and his mother works for Sprague Electric in Longwood. The Fees' daughter, Sharon, moved back to Ohio with her family in July after five years in Sanford.

Mrs. Fee said her son has been in the Army about 16 years, but manages to visit his parents regularly on holidays. She doesn't doubt that once Michael retires from the Army, he'll make Sanford his home.

"He's a fine boy," she said. Michael and his wife, Candice, have three children.

Fun Fest will thrill, feed you

Fun Fest '89 promises to be funtastic! The sixth annual Fun Fest, put on by the Church of the Nativity in Lake Mary, will be held Nov. 3-5 at the church on State Road 427.

The family fun will include continuous live entertainment, children's rides and game booths, carnival food as well as full dinners, arts and crafts, and a silent auction along with a raffle.

Members of the parish will be doing some of the entertainment. The musical talents of Tricia Tanarello will be enjoyed. Kelly Cooce and Kristine Lacour, two solo pianists, also will be entertaining under the big tent. A group of parishioners will be singing barbershop quartet numbers for the audience.

Some local groups from Lake Mary and the Central Florida area also scheduled to perform include: the Recruit Training Command's Blue Jacket Chorus, Rounders Square Dancers and Whirl and Twirl Square Dancers, the Seminole High School (Dazzler) Dance Team, Seminole High Destiny dance team, the School of Dance Arts, and the Lake Mary Dance Academy. There also will be some karate demonstrations put on by Kelly's Martial Arts.

The children will be entertained by strolling clowns Iko and Dusty. A moonwalk will be featured as one of the children's rides.

Besides the cotton candy, popcorn, hot dogs and other carnival foods, the parish is preparing full dinners on Friday and Saturday night and a breakfast on Sunday. The Friday night dinner will be a spaghetti feast. Saturday's dinner will be roast turkey with all the fixin's. A complete country breakfast with everything from eggs to fruit cups will be served on Sunday.

For the shoppers there will be plenty to look at and buy. A group of women in the church headed by Claire Tuller has been busy over the past nine months with their arts and crafts to display and sell at the Fun Fest. They also made a great big king-size quilt to be raffled off during the Fun Fest weekend.

Many members of the church donated items for the silent auction. The brand new and well-used items for the auction include a baby grand piano, two organs, a mixer, a new gas grill, a lawn mower, some small appliances, and even some jewelry.

The second raffle is something not to miss. First prize will be $2,000 cash, second prize will be a weekend at a condo on Florida's west coast, third prize will be a lawn mower, and fourth prize will be $500 cash. The tickets are $1 each or 12 for $10. A third raffle, with only 500 tickets being sold, will be for a 21-inch remote control T.V.

The festival last year attracted around 4,000 people. "We hope to better the number of people by 50 percent," said Ray Peizer, the chairman of the event, who has been organizing the Fun Fest since November of last year.

Besides putting on a community builder, Fun Fest organizers hope to raise enough money to add on to the church parking lot.

"We're very optimistic now that we'll get started with this (the parking lot) after the first of the year," Peizer said.

The hours of the Fun Fest '89 are Friday, 6 to 11 p.m.; Saturday, 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.; and Sunday, noon to 7 p.m.

An elaborate program is being put on by the West Branch Library on Hunt Club Boulevard in Longwood for Halloween.

On Tuesday, Oct. 31, there will be two programs for different ages. The morning program is for pre-school ages and will begin at 10:30. The afternoon program is for the school-age children and will be a drop-in carnival from 3:30-5:30 p.m.

Children are requested to wear their costumes for the Halloween Carnival. There will be games, pumpkin and Halloween stories, and a bogus fortune-teller for the older children.

"It's all for fun," said Frieda Patten, the children's librarian who is putting on the carnivals.

For more information, call 862-2282.

Willy Nilly got to four hearts, and West led the club 10. East won the ace and returned the jack. West ruffed Willy's king, and then played diamond ace and a diamond to dummy's king. Willy drew trumps (noting happily that West had ruffed with a natural winner), and then played a spade to dummy's king. Then he led the diamond jack to find out who had the queen. East of course played low and Willy ruffed. Now Willy tried some "thinking." Wouldn't East have overcalled with anything more than six clubs headed by the A-Q-J? Perhaps. So Willy played a spade to dummy's jack and was down two when East won the queen and cashed another club. Willy had a tip-off when West played ace and a diamond. If West held ace of diamonds and no queen, he might have un-

A puzzlingly successful program

Math Superstars make learning mathematics both fun, challenging

By VICKI DeGOSNEM
Herald staff writer

SANFORD — You probably wouldn't expect too many first through sixth grade students to line up for the chance to do extra math problems. But they are. Across the district, Dividends volunteers are inundated with as many 8,000 requests a year for the worksheets that will allow students to become Math Superstars.

"It's something challenging for the kids and fun for the volunteers," Dede Schaffner, Dividends coordinator, said.

The program is not limited to gifted students or students who have attained a certain grade level in their math class. "Any student can do this," Schaffner said. "We've got gifted students. We've got SLD (specific learning disability) students. They work at their own level and aren't penalized for getting something wrong."

Students who want to become Math Superstars are given a worksheet with several "brain teasers" on Monday. They are to solve the problems as best they can without any assistance from parents, teachers, other students or calculators and return the completed sheets on Friday. Students participate as often as they want.

On the following Monday, a Dividend volunteer meets with small groups of Superstars, gives them the right answers to the previous week's questions and shows them how to properly solve the problem.

Credit is given for participation in the program and additional points are given for the right answer.

At the end of the school year, about 800 of the Superstars participate in a district-wide challenge competing in solving problems with students from other schools. Some schools send their students who have participated most often in the program. Others send those who have solved the most problems correctly over the course of the year. According to Schaffner, it does not matter since it is all done in fun.

"These aren't your typical math problems," Schaffner said. "They are designed to challenge the children to think."

Problems may be in the style of the old fashioned word problem, and others involve rear-

RIDDLE ME THIS

Care to try your hand at a typical Math Superstars problem? Try this one. The answer is at the bottom of the main story.
The ages of Jane and Mary when added together make 44 years. Jane is twice as old as Mary was when Jane was half as old as Mary will be when Mary is three times as old as Jane as when Jane was three times as old as Mary. How old is Jane? How old is Mary?

ranging a set of objects from one shape into another. For example: Six coins are arranged in an "L" shape. Four coins form one side of the "L." The students are challenged to arrange the six coins to make two rows of four coins each by moving only one coin.

The challenges range in degree of difficulty from "fairly easy" (one star) to "difficult" (four stars) and each grade level has its own set of problems.

"A lot of times you'll see teachers doing the problems themselves," said Schaffner. "They are fun sort of challenges."

The Math Superstars program was begun as a math enrichment program by the state Department of Education about seven years ago.

"Seminole County was one of the first to sign up," Schaffner said. She said student interest has been high in the district, as is the list of volunteers in the Dividends program who want to work with the project. "We have people who volunteer specifically for Math Superstars," she said.

Dividends tries to offer the Superstars some incentive for correctly solving the problems. Prizes of specially imprinted pencils and erasers as well as McDonald's hamburgers and cheeseburgers are given to the students.

"The kids love it," Schaffner said. "They're learning some very important thinking skills and they just think they're having fun."

The answers to the riddles: Jane is 27 and a half years old and Mary is 16 and a half years old and you can make two rows of four by placing the coin from the top of the "L" at the intersection of the two rows.

Teaching kids to fight abuse

By VICKI DeGOSNEM
Herald staff writer

Debbie Willis, a children's safety consultant with Citizens Against Crime, travels around Central Florida trying to help parents teach their children how to not become victims of sexual abusers, drug dealers or other criminals. She does not believe in frightening the children with horror stories, but she does want to make them aware.

"When they are frightened," she noted, "they freeze."

She said that often parents have come to her and said that they have warned their children of all the dangers they may face and the children become petrified to leave their parents' side in public.

"We don't want that," she said. Her program is aimed at parents, because she believes parents should take responsibility for the safety of their children.

She teaches that some of the old rules are no longer true. "When I was a kid," she said, "the big thing was 'stranger danger'...you had to stay away from strangers. But today we're finding out that 90 percent of the crimes committed against children are by people they know."

Citizens Against Crime is a national organization which is involved in teaching people about personal safety in the form of crime prevention, home safety and fire safety.

Willis's course is aimed at the needs of a wide range of children from the ages of four to 13.

"They can start even younger than that, I suppose," she said, but felt that younger children might not understand the reasons they are learning the concepts. "But they can learn about things such as personal zones."

A personal zone is the area at arm's length around the child that the child knows no one is allowed to enter without permission. Willis said children know intuitively they have certain rights and that she encourages them to exercise those rights.

"We tell parents to give their children an imaginary magic marker and to have them spin around and draw a circle around themselves," she said. "This area is the personal zone. Parents then play games with the children to give them practice in protecting the zone."

Fun and humor are a big part of Willis's teaching method.

She said commercial jingle writers were consulted in devising a musical mnemonic device for remembering their address and phone number. "Kids remember everything they hear in commercials," she said, "so we applied the same concept to learning important numbers."

She said she is sometimes amused by parents when she tries to teach them to teach their children the proper names for body parts. Often when it comes to naming "private parts" they get flustered and have trouble with the words themselves.

But Willis said, on a more serious note, that parents must teach their children these things. "Parents are so concerned about stealing their children's innocence," she said, "that they let someone else steal it in the most horrible way."

One of the most important things a parent can give a child, Willis feels, is self esteem. "Studies show that most children who become involved in drug use have a poor self image," she said.

Moves, changes noted

• Dr. William Dailey, Director of planning, research and evaluation, will attend the American Association of School Administrators in San Francisco next February.

• Karen Finkelstein has transferred from a teaching position at Spring Lake Elementary School to a Primary (K-3) Curriculum Representative at Forest City Elementary School.

Mississippi's governor unveils $500 million education proposal

United Press International

JACKSON, Miss. — Gov. Ray Mabus unveiled the most ambitious education program ever put forth in Mississippi, a three-year, $500 million proposal that will include a lottery.

The comprehensive package, dubbed "Mississippi's BEST," includes some 30 reform programs that range from air conditioning of school buildings to yanking driver's licenses from dropouts. The state's education system ranks near the bottom in several categories and Mabus's plan offers incentives for schools to improve and threatens state intervention for those that do not.

Mabus Wednesday called for a statewide lottery to raise $180 million for the reforms. The remainder would come from growth in the state's economy, which the governor estimated at 5.5 percent in each of the next three years.

"This is my plan. I'm not going to 'ifs and buts' here ... The plan fits together. It has carrots and it has sticks," Mabus said.

One of the "carrots" would go to educators and school administrators. The proposal provides $300 million over three years in bond money for school repairs and provides for $1,000 teacher pay raises and health insurance.

The 141-page proposal closely mirrors seven broad goals Mabus announced in August to improve Mississippi's public schools, colleges and universities.

The 30-plus reform programs and six initiatives stress accountability. While Mabus got high marks from educators and legislators, some lawmakers and church groups immediately attacked the proposed lottery that would require an amendment to the state's 1890 constitution which prohibits gambling.

"We will definitely oppose it," said Bill Causey, executive director of the Mississippi Baptist Convention. "I would rather the governor not mix the lottery and education. I certainly feel other groups will oppose the lottery."

The lottery would need two-thirds support in both the House and Senate to be placed on the ballot. The proposal has cleared the House the last two sessions but has died in the Senate.

"If the Legislature will put the proposal on the ballot, I believe it will pass by an overwhelming majority," Mabus said.

Mabus said a seven-member Corporation for Educational Innovation, a "super board" of education, would shepherd the program. Its job would be to stimulate innovation on all elementary, secondary and college levels.

Mabus said a school that does not meet minimum standards could be judged "impaired." Schools would have 18 months to correct problems with state help or the state would appoint a temporary conservator to take charge.

Some highlights of the Mabus initiative:

• Reward improving schools with financial bonuses and relaxation of state guidelines.

• Reshaping teacher training to require new junior or senior high teachers to earn college degrees in specialty fields of study.

This Halloween night was very forgettable

Splat! Splat!
The raw eggs striking the windshield of the car made a distinctive sound, a sound not at all unfamiliar to anyone who dared drive their car on Halloween night.

Back in the hills, there are two things you simply do not do.

You don't drive around after dark on Halloween night and you don't put much stock in anything said by anyone with a 'flatlander' accent.

Halloween was a big deal for pranksters and practical jokers back in the mountains of West Virginia.

If you did take to the highway on this night, there was some extra equipment you would need to make it safely to your destination. Chief among these items was a chain saw. Most of the roads wind around hillsides and there are plenty of trees toppled from those hillsides and into the highway each Halloween.

The smart people, the real veterans of Halloween pranksterism stayed at home on Halloween night. If you didn't, you could fully expect to have your windows soaped or your house tee-peed. For you flatlanders, tee-peeing is a tradition begun in the hills, I think, in which the tee-peers wind toilet paper around the victim's trees, shrubbery and anything else that's available. Once it's in place, the paper is wetted down, after which it mats itself to whatever it happens to be clinging to.

I would have been home on this particular night, but I had to work. A friend and I were hoping to get home unscathed from the hoodlums' antics and, if not, arriving alive would have in itself been a commendable accomplishment.

I was tired and wasn't much in the mood for pranks. I just wanted to get home, find something to eat and get some sleep.

But the gauntlet had been cast, my friend and I had been challenged by a couple of egg-tossing juvenile delinquents who had hidden in the woods atop an embankment along the side of the road.

When am I to refuse a challenge?
I towed the car over to a wide spot next to the blacktop (that's what we call the highway in West Virginia) and both of us jumped out of the car and began running toward the direction from which the hen fruit was tossed.

The hillside was yellow clay, the kind that lets you take one step forward then slides you two steps back. But we managed to get up enough momentum before we hit the clay to get about halfway up the hill. We then grabbed hold of an overhanging tree limb and pulled ourselves up to the top of the embankment.

It was not a cold night but it wasn't the kind in which you would normally be out frolicking around either. It was cold enough to see your breath and, both of us were covered, at least from the waist down, in damp yellow mud. It was kind of like walking around with 30 pounds of play dough stuffed in your pockets. There was a full moon, so we figured there would be enough light to chase down the egg-wielding desperados.

We saw two silhouettes making their way through the brush off in the distance. There was, naturally, the sound of twigs snapping and branches being broken and pushed aside as the culprits attempted their getaway.

My friend and I looked at each other and shrugged our shoulders in an unspoken "what the heck" gesture and took off after the villains. We were already cold and wet, so there was no use turning back now.

If you've never run through the woods after dark, then it's hard to describe to you what it's like. Most of the tree branches are big enough to see and duck under, but it's the little ones that get you. You wind up "switching" yourself in the face, arms and legs in the process of blindly pursuing your tormentors.

There were no paths, no walkways. We're talking about plain old grown-over, dense, wooded forests here. The untamed wilderness.

The sight must have been one for the books. Here were two guys in dress slacks, street shoes and ties wildly plunging through the woods in almost pitch black, trying to run down two people who were obviously better equipped to survive such a foot race.

As my breath and legs grew heavier, I remember asking myself two questions. One, what are the chances of catching these guys, and, two, if and when we do catch them, what are we going to do with them?

We made our way up a steep hill and started down the other side. I could see a point where it looked like a cliff stuck out over a ravine. We half-ran and half-slid down the hillside and I looked up long enough to see the two silhouettes still in front of us. We were gaining on them.

As the two egg-throwers approached the cliff, I heard two screams, a momentary pause and then a big splash.

We made it to the edge of the cliff and looked down in time to see two guys trying to wade out of the creek below. They must have dropped about 50 or 60 feet. Lucky for them there was water down there.

We stood and watched as they slid and fell, then got up again and trudged off into the trees below. One of them was limping noticeably and you could hear the two discussing second thoughts about their idea of throwing eggs at passing cars.

Transportation crunch

Group: We need mass transit, not more highways

United Press International

TALLAHASSEE — Advocates of mass transit are gearing up for next month's special session on transportation, saying the age of road-expansion is over in Florida and more money is needed for developing public transportation.

Lawmakers agree that public transit needs more money, but the financial commitment is small. Two plans being offered for the session would nearly double the amount of money the state currently spends on public transportation, but that still leaves the bulk of public money channeled into building new roads and repaving old ones.

"We've got to move in the other direction because it's getting too expensive and we're running out of room," said John Hendrick, founder and past president of the People's Transit Organization, a 10-year-old private, non-profit group that lobbies for alternative rail systems.

"The era of massive road-building and widening in Florida has come to an end," he said, "and we really need to pursue these other alternative transportations very seriously."

State leaders aren't ready to ring the death knell for road expansion, but they agree that a stronger commitment to public and mass transportation is needed to accommodate a growing population and to make the state economically competitive.

Sen. George Stuart, who along with Rep. Alzo Reddick, D-Orlando, has proposed a 10-cent-per-gallon gas tax to pay for roads and public transportation, said eventually there won't be room to build roads out any further.

"Public transportation is very valuable," said Stuart, D-Orlando. "I think that public transportation has a place. About 5 percent of traffic could be diverted. That's a significant amount."

Some say buses, like the Tri-County Transit ones, are needed more than new roads.

The Stuart-Reddick proposal earmarks 2 cents of the tax for the Public Transportation Trust Fund, which would raise about $140 million a year, more than twice the amount already spent by the state for capital grants for new buses and terminals, commuter rails and airports.

The other 3 cents would go toward road construction and repaving, and the remaining 5 cents would go to local governments for new roads and repaving county roads.

Gov. Bob Martinez has vowed to veto a statewide gas tax, but a recent Mason-Dixon poll showed that 40 percent of Floridians support a new gas tax.

House speaker Tom Gustafson, D-Fort Lauderdale, said the House is working on an alternate proposal to spend $125 million a year on public transit — $45 million for airports, $40 million for buses and $40 million for rails.

"It's absolutely essential if we want Florida to be economically competitive," Gustafson said. "Without public transit we won't be able to get the kind of densities in urban centers to be competitive.... It's the only way to stop urban sprawl."

Using current population growth figures, the state Department of Transportation calculated that the Palm Beach-Miami corridor of I-95 would have to be expanded to 40 lanes to efficiently handle traffic. The DOT said I-4 through Orlando

Many voters favor tax hike to fix roads

United Press International

TALLAHASSEE — A new survey shows that four out of 10 Florida voters would be willing to accept a three-cent-a-gallon hike in the state's gasoline tax in order to raise money to fix state roads.

The poll by Mason Dixon Opinion Research found that 40 percent of all respondents chose a hike in the gas tax as the preferred method for raising money for the state's transportation needs.

Another 29 percent said they preferred higher user fees, such as those charged for license tags or tolls, and 17 percent said the money could best be raised through higher property taxes. The remainder were undecided.

The survey was published amid signs Gov. Bob Martinez, who is opposed to any statewide gas-tax increase, might agree to make it easier for regional transit authorities to boost gas levies by up to 4 cents.

"We're willing to talk about how that ought to be done," Martinez said.

The Legislature is scheduled to meet next month in a special session to discuss the state's transportation needs.

Many main highways throughout the state are jammed with weekend and rush-hour drivers. This I-4 exit ramp which heads east to S.R. 46, is usually clogged by rush-hour traffic. Of those state residents polled, 66 percent said they were stuck in traffic jams at least once a week.

Fire ants spreading northward

United Press International

ATLANTA — This is an anniversary year of sorts in agriculture — 60 years ago the imported fire ant established a beachhead in the United States and began churning and stinging its way inland on a journey that has taken it into 10 states and Puerto Rico.

Since the fire ant was unloaded in 1929 at the Mobile, Ala., docks in the ballast soil of a ship from Brazil, federal and state governments have spent millions of dollars in a futile effort to control this tiny pest whose painful sting is legendary.

Its infestations threaten an ever widening array of states, but the chemical has yet to be discovered that will eradicate these red and

Poll: 13 million Americans 'fat and frustrated'

United Press International

NEW YORK — About 13 million adult Americans feel "fat and frustrated," another 66 million know they are overweight but do not follow healthy habits and 9 million have no desire to improve their health, a survey reported Tuesday.

In the Louis Harris poll commissioned by Prevention magazine, 1,250 randomly selected adults from across the country were asked for their views on such health-promoting behavior as exercise, nutrition, weight control and home and auto safety.

The survey found that 7 percent "exhibit a strong desire to be healthy, but they are often confused about what to do."

The poll projected the percentages to the national population.

A question of trust

For nearly 40 years, South Africa's Afrikaner leaders had it all their own way. The white-dominated National Party faced no real opposition in parliament, only rarely having to make concessions or negotiate.

Consequently, the Nationalists were not obligated to justify their peculiar concept of equality, which provided for 26 million blacks to be squeezed into 13 percent of South Africa's land, while 5 million privileged whites enjoyed the rest.

Only in recent years, with international sanctions driving home that apartheid is intolerable to the rest of the world, has the Nationalist regime begun to realize that the future of the white minority depends on its ability to bargain with black leaders. Lobbing tear gas grenades at political dissidents no longer works. The question today is not whether the black majority will be granted more of a voice in running the country; the question is how much and how soon.

President F.W. de Klerk once again revealed the Nationalist Party's lack of negotiating acumen after his meeting recently with black church leaders Desmond Tutu, Frank Chikane and Allan Boesak. The discussions reached an impasse, according to Archbishop Tutu, when Mr. de Klerk refused to respond directly to six demands the clerics laid down as prerequisites to talks about reform. These included lifting the state of emergency, which gives junior police officers and members of the military sweeping powers of arrest and detention, the release of hundreds of prisoners detained without trial, and the reprieve of prisoners on Death Row.

Mr. de Klerk responded by declaring that mistrust was one of South Africa's biggest problems. He obviously did not appreciate the irony in his call to the clerics to help build a climate of trust. Since Mr. de Klerk's election as leader of the National Party, peaceful black demonstrations have been broken up with clubs, police dogs, water cannons, tear gas, rubber bullets and shot guns.

Yet he has given permission for several large demonstrations that would normally have been broken up by his paramilitary police. He also has announced the impending release from prison of eight aging black militants.

Such acts, and the likely release of African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela, lend credence to Mr. de Klerk's stated commitment to reform. But they are no cause for euphoria.

It is distressingly obvious that most of Mr. de Klerk's declarations so far have been about what the black majority will not get rather than what it will get. There will be no black dominance in government, he says. There will be no policy of one person, one vote.

The full extent of the black political participation he has in mind has never been spelled out. Consequently, there will be no reason for the black population or anyone else to trust the Nationalist regime until its vague promises of reform are replaced by a solid agenda for setting South Africa on the road to negotiations and democracy.

Mr. de Klerk should realize that his leverage for negotiating a deal for South Africa's white minority becomes weaker with every passing day. He no longer is able to dictate what role blacks should play in South Africa's future. That is for negotiation now.

Military can't halt Soviet decline

A number of respected conservative voices are being raised these days to warn us against overly optimistic assumptions about the intentions of the Soviet Union. We would do well to listen carefully to these people. They have been right about the Soviet Union in the past, when the world's liberals were falling like a ton of bricks for every hollow assurance offered by Brezhnev, or Khrushchev, or even Stalin.

One of the ablest of these doubters is Richard Pipes, a professor of history at Harvard and a longtime student of the Soviet Union. When Richard Pipes talks, I listen. And what is Pipes saying these days? On the Op-Ed page of The New York Times recently, in an article entitled "The Russians Are Still Coming," he pointed out that, according to the best estimates, Soviet military outlays are continuing to grow at the rate of 3 percent a year in constant rubles. Abroad, Moscow has supplied Syria with MiG-29 fighters and supersonic Sukhoi 24 bombers, receiving in return a major naval facility at Tartus on the Mediterranean coast of Syria, superior to any U.S. base in that vital sea.

Moscow is also, Pipes asserts, stepping up military aid to North Korea, Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia and even Afghanistan. And Soviet aid is continuing to flow to Angola and Nicaragua. Not exactly the picture of an empire in collapse!

Pipes concludes that "world stability and peace are nowhere as close as much of world opinion would like to believe.... In fact, the soft-line policy has enabled Moscow to spread its influence and power abroad more effectively than when it had pursued an overtly hard line."

Pipes concludes that either "Moscow regards the present period as a breathing spell... before re-summing a worldwide offensive," or "the leadership is so beholden to its generals... that it cannot afford to alienate them with cutbacks in appropriations and foreign commitments."

Nor is Pipes alone in his concern. Gen. John Galvin, NATO commander in Europe, recently declared that "we see little decrease yet in the level of combat power available to the East." We would do well to heed these warnings.

We would do well to heed these warnings.

It would be foolhardy in the highest degree for the administration, or Congress, or our NATO allies to reduce the West's military strength out of some assumption "the Cold War is over."

At the same time, however, it is clear that in the broadest terms Soviet power is in irreversible strategic retreat. All we need do to prevail is remain calm and firm. It is all very well for the Soviet Union to maintain its own military strength at a high level and continue sending generous supplies of arms to its satellites. But who today, in the Soviet Union itself or in its satellites, let alone elsewhere, seriously believes that the communist cause is "the wave of the future"?

Does anyone suppose that Gorbachev would sit idly by while Poland elected a non-communist president, and Hungary prepared to do likewise, if he thought he had any alternative?

And what upwardly mobile, opportunistic young politician in the Third World today would choose to cast his lot with the communist world enterprise, confident that it will support him and lead him to victory? Against this worldwide perception of Soviet decline, of what use are a few Sukhoi bombers? They still have a certain raw military potential, but they cannot put Humpty Dumpty back on his wall.

GEORGE F. WILL

Who would want to be mayor?

NEW YORK — It is cold, it is dark, it is drizzling, it is late October, he is late for his next appearance, he is low on money and at the moment he is losing the race for mayor. And what Rudolph Giuliani must do right now is convince a roomful of Jewish voters to think of him as Fiorello LaGuardia. Good luck.

LaGuardia — "the Little Flower" — was, like Giuliani, a Republican. There the resemblance ends. LaGuardia was a protean force, a politician in every chromosome. A reporter recalls that he "sat in a condition of more or less constant gesticulation." Here is a sample of LaGuardia's Sunday morning radio broadcasts:

"Ladies, I want to ask you a little favor. I want you please to wear your rubbers when you go out in this weather. If you don't wear your rubbers you may slip and hurt yourself... Now another word about fish..."

Giuliani's body language, and his language on the stump — earnest, dry, not a lot of laughs — says: Politics is not my profession. A former prosecutor, Giuliani is not as hilly as The Little Man on the Wedding Cake (Thomas Dewey, another crime-busting New York Republican), but it is laughable when he says that he, like LaGuardia, is a "fusion" candidate.

Who is fusing with whom? Republicans are outnumbered five-to-one here. Anyway, cold fusion does not work.

Six months ago, polls showed Giuliani shellacking Ed Koch, the three-term incumbent mayor. Then Koch got unhorsed in the Democratic primary by David Dinkins, Manhattan borough president. Koch's act was stale and Giuliani could have run on the theme, "Buttoned-down (or buttoned up, for that matter) is beautiful."

Dinkins, who would be New York's first black mayor, is commonly characterized as "cautious," although it is not usually considered cautious to forget to file tax forms — federal, state or city — for four straight years. That and other misadventures with legal niceties include an aromatic stock transaction (in 1983, he valued a stock holding at $1 million; in 1985, he sold it to his son for $58,000), and living in subsidized housing for which he is spectacularly ineligible. He has ties to some colorful political scaries on the lunatic left, including a convicted kidnapper who reacted indignantly when accused of anti-Semitism: "Anti-Semitism? I'm anti-white."

Were it not for the $12 million negative campaign run against Giuliani by the rich, feckless Ronald Lauder in the Republican primary, Giuliani might be winning. He still might win, poor fellow.

The city needs more of everything, from drug-treatment facilities to hospital beds for AIDS patients to jail cells to infrastructure investment. But most of all, it needs a vibrant middle class and that class already is in flight from taxes. Dinkins understandably does not like to talk about taxes or (he is ahead) much else. Giuliani plans to pay for the future by eliminating "corruption" and seizing the assets of drug dealers. Really.

The city's spiraling decline is stunning. In 1945, a Gallup poll found that 90 percent of New Yorkers called themselves happy. Would 10 percent today?

Here is a genuine sample of graffiti back then: "Nuts to all the boys on Second Avenue — except between 66th and 68th Streets." According to a Look magazine survey in 1945, 88 percent of New Yorkers were in bed by 10:30 p.m. Today, muggers seem to make up more than 8 percent of the population.

I exaggerate. Slightly. New York is called the city where everyone munitins but no one deserts. Wrong. Juan Samuel of the New York Mets wants to be traded. A team official explains: "He and his wife had a difficult time with the city. They were robbed a couple of times. He just didn't have a good experience in New York." Samuel has played second base, a position not for the fainthearted.

Who is having a good experience? There are 28,000 children in foster care. Infant mortality is 20 percent above the scandalous national average. In Manhattan and the Bronx, one in every 60 newborns tests positive for the AIDS virus. Last year, 5,000 babies were born with narcotics in their blood. Many were born to some of the 140,000 children under 17 who are cocaine, crack or heroin addicts.

Forty percent of all the city's children live in poverty. Fewer than half the ninth-graders graduate four years later, although 85 percent of new jobs require at least a high-school diploma. Murders are up 20 percent in two years. Crime costs small business $1 billion a year.

Mayor Jimmy "Gentleman Jim" Walker, who married a chorus girl and drove a Duesenberg and governed, sort of, from 1925 until he hotfooted it out of the country to escape fraud charges in 1932, said he would rather be a lamppost in New York than mayor of Chicago. Nowadays it's better to be a lamppost in New York than mayor of it.

The city's spiraling decline is stunning.

Drastic measures are needed to win drug war

WASHINGTON — Along the U.S.-Mexico border, shrewd government agents run what they call "reverse stings." Instead of posing as drug buyers, they advertise themselves as sellers. They coax major drug dealers into a trap by offering cocaine by the kilo, then confiscate suitcases of cash and toss the duped kingpins into jail.

Reverse stings are part of the newest, and perhaps wisest, form of combat in the drug war — going after the money instead of the drugs.

We talked to two federal agents who regularly impersonate drug lords. They claim the reverse sting is far more effective than undercover drug buys. "It's the only sure fire way to bust anyone near the top." Drug networks aren't likely to trust a low-level courier with $500,000 in cash.

The Bush administration is blindly devoted to stopping the flow of drugs, but some strategists in the drug war are starting to realize that taking drug money out of circulation has a more devastating effect on the market. Restricting the drug supply simply drives up the price and makes the business even more appealing.

Finance officials from 15 nations met last month in Paris to try to tighten international controls on drug money laundering. Banking laws in Switzerland, Luxembourg and some Caribbean nations have made those countries popular pit stops for drug money. Other nations are considering requiring banks to report deposits of $10,000 or more, as is already done in the United States.

One veteran undercover narcotics detective from the Washington, D.C., police department told our associate Jim Lynch that U.S. banks get off too easily, even with the $10,000 reporting requirement. He thinks banks should be forced to report other suspicious deposits — such as multiple deposits in one account of $5,000 each. The detective goes so far as to suggest that banks that don't report obvious drug transactions should be publicly named so their honest customers can take their business elsewhere. "People are concerned enough about drugs that I don't think they'd bank somewhere that did business with drug money," the detective said.

He also thinks car dealers should have to report when a customer pays cash for an expensive car. That would crimp the drug dealers' style. "If they can't buy anything with all that cash, it becomes just stacks of paper," the detective said. He wants car dealers to face fines if they take $50,000 from a jobless kid and ignore the source of the cash.

The detective and other narcotics officers also advocate more flexibility in the law when they seize the possessions of convicted drug dealers. Now they have to prove an item was bought with drug money before they can confiscate it.

Civil libertarians will pale at some of the suggestions. They come from cops on the front lines who are frustrated at seeing the drug trade flourish when bankers, car dealers and other legitimate business people have the information needed to pinpoint major dealers.

John Yoder, the first director of the Asset Forfeiture Office of the Justice Department, has been pounding on doors at the Justice Department and White House with another proposal to change market factors in the drug business. But he gets little response.

Yoder advocates making it more profitable to rat on drug dealers than it is to deal drugs. He recommends that anyone who helps police bust a dealer should get as much as half of the seized assets. Yoder also wants amnesty for drug traffickers who cooperate with police.

Car dealers should have to report when a customer pays cash for an expensive car.

Sanford's airport is the answer

I have been reading with great interest about the problems with the fourth runway due to the environmental problems at the Orlando International Airport.

We have a fourth runway in Central Florida it is 8,400 feet long and is already in place and will accommodate any airplane that flies, including the Concorde.

It is one of the long runways at the Sanford/Orlando Regional Airport (Central Florida Regional Airport at Sanford) which is waiting to receive the overflow.

We all know that the three main tourist destinations in Florida are: 1) Disney, Epcot and Sea World; 2) Cape Kennedy and 3) Daytona/Ormond.

When one lands at the Sanford/Orlando Regional Airport, one is exactly 45 minutes away by car from any one of the above three locations. In other words, the Sanford/Orlando Regional Airport is the axle and the crossroads of Florida, centrally located for everything.

Just a few more pearls of wisdom from a native Central Floridian.

Shevardnadze buries Brezhnev mistakes

By GERALD HADLER

MOSCOW — Eduard Shevardnadze, Moscow's ever-traveling foreign minister, stayed put long enough to sweep away decades of Soviet pretensions that included outright lying about a controversial radar station, chemical weapons and human rights violations.

By burying once and for all every pretense of the foreign policy of the late leader Leonid Brezhnev, Shevardnadze heralded a new era of responsible international conduct and honorable relations with the West.

His acknowledgment that the Kraenoyarsk radar station violated the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty and his pledge to tear it down clears the way for a landmark Soviet treaty to halve the number of nuclear warheads.

Another painful acknowledgment — that the Soviets continued to make chemical weapons while the Americans stopped for 15 years — removes obstacles that have blocked a pact halting their production.

Shevardnadze, whose access to foreign ministers of all nations has restored confidence in the Kremlin as a negotiating partner, bluntly told Soviet lawmakers about the past indiscretions: "We violated international norms."

Then, in as clear a foreign policy statement heard from any Western statesman in decades, Shevardnadze enunciated the new political thinking of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, one with a high moral content.

"What are the missions and duties of diplomacy?" Shevardnadze asked rhetorically. "They certainly require conducting a policy of defending the interest of the state. But they also lie in shaping the correct and moral ideas of policies and interests."

"A political decision and diplomatic action may seem pragmatically advantageous, but if they are immoral, they can never in any way be justified or meet the interests of the people and the state."

Soviet violations of accepted international norms reached a peak in Brezhnev's most blatant secret decision, the December 1979 invasion of Afghanistan. The move was so secret that Shevardnadze said he and his then fellow candidate Politburo member Gorbachev learned of it from the radio.

Shevardnadze lamented that Brezhnev's stance on human rights was self-destructive because it led to trade sanctions against the Soviet Union.

"It is shameful, but in the not-too-distant past we used the term 'so-called human rights' and maintained that we had no such problems because there could be no such problem under socialism," Shevardnadze said.

Ending years of deception about the Kraenoyarsk radar, Shevardnadze conceded that the United States was correct in asserting that the Soviet complex violated the 1972 ABM treaty by serving as a system to detect incoming missiles and that it should be torn down.

"All these years we have been fighting to preserve this full ABM treaty for the sake of strategic stability," Shevardnadze said. "Yet, at the same time, this radar station, the size of an Egyptian pyramid, has stood — and I must say this directly — in violation of the ABM agreement," he said.

"At last we have put an end to it," Shevardnadze said. "We have announced that we will dismantle this station."

While the United States stopped making chemical weapons in 1969, "in response, we continued for nearly two decades to produce them without considering the billions in expenditures, the harm to the environment or the threat to people's health," he said.

Shevardnadze's speech also answered President Bush's wait-and-see approach to Soviet reforms abroad.

The Kremlin, he said, will now "honor treaties, agreements and contracts."

Salvation Army service is varied

Lt. Sam Flanigan, commanding officer of Seminole County's Salvation Army, and Reginald Howe, board member, discussed the services made available to the community by the Salvation Army.

Seminole County's branch of the Salvation Army (SA) was established Jan. 7, 1928 in Sanford. The SA's first address was 115 W. First Street until 1932, when they moved to 214 East Second Street. The S.A. moved to its present site in the fall of 1974 and dedicated the structure January 1975.

The Salvation Army has a 26 member board, 24 regular board members and two lifetime members Dr. Vincent Robert and Mrs. Ralph Austin Smith. An additional lifetime member and one Emeritus member are to be added to the board soon. Robert Gregory is the current chairman of the board.

Dr. & Mrs. Vincent Roberts received a singular honor for their community services. They were the recipients of the state's first Dynamic Force Award. Considering the statewide competition this was noteworthy. Dr. and Mrs. Roberts recently attended the Salvation Army's National

SEMINOLE OPINION

LURLENE SWEETING

Advisory Organizational Conference in London.

One of the SA's successful programs, in its second year of operation, is the Latchkey program. This program serves working parents whose children attend Hamilton, Goldsboro and Pinecrest Elementary Public Schools plus Liberty Christian Private School. At one time they served Idyllwild Elementary School however there were insufficient numbers of children that needed their services this year.

Criteria for service is: proximity to the Salvation Army and at least ten children at the school needing child care. Cost for the service is $15 per week, they can ac-comodate up to 80 children. The current enrollment is 57.

Debbie Bray, who came to get her daughter, Aliah Alshomrani, had nothing but accolades for the Latchkey program. She leaves her daughter there at 7:30 a.m. and generally comes for her at 5 p.m. This program has relieved her of worry about her daughter's care. The SA takes her daughter to school, picks her up in the afternoon and provides a well organized program for her in the afternoon.

Bray believes she is a good judge of child care services because of some of the experiences she had when seeking services for her two older children.

The Latchkey program is just one of the services SA offers to this community.

It also offers a Summer Child Care program that complements the Latchkey program. The program serves children who have completed first grade and have not reached their 14th birthday. The hours are 7-6 p.m. at a cost of $20 per week per child. This program is coordinated with the closing and opening of Seminole County Public Schools.

NATIONAL COMMENTARY

Congress needs to rethink capital gains

By DAVID F. SCOTT Jr.

The recent discussions over a possible capital-gains tax cut are particularly sad. Those involved with potential legislation in Washington, D.C. have the wrong agenda on the table.

This indiscretion is evident in the form that the House version took. Any time a change in the tax code is touted as both a tax cut and a federal revenue enhancer, a red flag should be raised in the average citizen's mind. That is, "beware of politicians bearing gifts."

That combination is possible, of course but it rarely works out that way. Just remember supply-side economics and the Laffer curve. That episode from the early 1980s gave rise to the term "Voodoo Economics." There have been some benefits from the concept of supply-side economics, but wiping out the federal deficit through high levels of real economic growth has not been one of them. The federal government ran its twentieth consecutive budget deficit in the fiscal year ended Sept. 30.

Just a bit. On Sept. 28 the House of Representatives voted to support a capital-gains tax cut. Then on Oct. 13, the Senate approved a deficit-reduction bill that did not contain any capital-gains provisions. The Senate's course of action transfers further consideration of this volatile topic towards the latter part of 1989. It is of interest to review the House proposal as it is the only tangible legislation relating to the gains tax that is actually on the table.

The House proposal can be quickly summarized in four points:

Any time a change in the tax code is touted as both a tax cut and a federal revenue enhancer, a red flag should be raised in the average citizen's mind.

(1) Assets qualifying for the favorable treatment would be taxed at 19.6 percent rather than the now-prevailing 28.0 percent. Such assets would include financial assets, commercial and residential dwellings, and farm and timberlands.

(2) The assets would have to be held for one year and a day to qualify for the favorable treatment.

(3) The favorable rate would cover the time period from Sept. 14, 1989 through Dec. 31, 1991.

(4) After 1991, the gains from the sales of qualifying assets would be "indexed." In effect you pretend that your acquisition cost grew at some inflation rate. This gives you a smaller gain to declare when the tax bill is computed.

A change in the tax code, if written in this form, is a sham. It is only necessary to ask this question to ferret out the problem: What are we trying to accomplish? The answer is: all too straightforward. The House proposal for two or three years would merely enhance federal revenues.

Those economic units that own qualifying assets and who have a reason to sell would be propelled to do so by the tax incentive. The proposed law is nothing more than an incentive to liquidate or churn existing financial and real assets. It is a sly economic marketing by the House to induce trading in "old" assets in order to speed up receipts into the U.S. Treasury and, thereby, create short-term relief from the constraints of the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law.

Actually, those in a position to affect economic decisions should be attempting to accomplish something quite different. If Congress is going to tinker with the tax code, the objective should be to enhance national economic growth. This cannot be achieved by placing incentives only on the sell side of the equation. The investment side must too be stimulated. An alteration in the tax code that only lasts for a tad over two years will not induce individuals to save more.

What is needed then, is a legislative package that will encourage savings. Favorable treatment of capital gains can be part of that overall bundle — but in a much different form than has been offered by the House.

First, the time period for which the law would be in effect must be lengthened considerably in order for economic units to have any confidence in it. A minimum of seven years would make sense.

Second, the holding period to qualify for the favorable treatment should be longer. Needless churning of existing assets could be minimized if the holding period was stretched to two or even three years. As has been currently proposed, indexing should be a part of the law. This indeed is the only part of the House legislation that makes any economic sense.

An unfortunate by-product of the rather boring bickering taking place among Democrats and Republicans on this issue is the "either-or" construct that has been placed around the concepts of a favorable gains tax relative to Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs). The IRA was one of the best savings vehicles ever offered to the American public. In a brainless move, the Tax Reform Act of 1986 effectively killed it off as an active investment device.

By the end of 1988, about 25 million individuals contributed to IRAs. There is little doubt that savings would be better stimulated by reinstating the IRA in its previous form than by the House's capital gains proposal. A prudently designed savings package could include both the IRA and a favorable capital gains tax rate. This would wean individuals away from Social Security as a total retirement system, rather than attracting them to it. The argument that this might prove too costly to Washington D.C. is difficult to swallow in an era when federal spending exceeds $1 trillion annually.

In the final analysis, designing legislation that affects individual economic decision is a prime importance. This sort of analysis should transcend typical party labels to be useful to society. Real economic growth helps us all. The contrivances of recent weeks concerning capital gains, IRAs, and savings have had precious little to do with economic growth. It is time to refocus.

Poor suffer as party lines blur over taxes

By LEON DANIEL

WASHINGTON — There's evidence to support Capitol Hill's current conventional wisdom that Americans are in no mood to wage class war.

There was a time when Democratic pole dubbed themselves champions of the underdog.

But nowadays there's hardly a surprise out there beyond the Washington Beltway, much less outrage, when renegade Democrats join Republicans in Congress to cut capital-gains taxes in a giveaway for the rich.

Lawmakers on both sides of the aisle didn't even blush when they caved in to demands of affluent oldsters to gut Medicare's catastrophic health insurance.

Even on non-pocketbook issues, there doesn't seem to be a dime's worth of difference between the two major parties.

Now some Democrats are saying right out loud that the only way to win back the White House — after losing four of the last five presidential elections — is to act like Republicans.

Many Democratic lawmakers are terrified of appearing soft on defense issues and foreign policy, but it's their kowtowing to affluent constituents that is widening the gap between the nation's rich and poor.

Fewer Democrats appear willing these days to point out that the disparity between rich and poor is a matter of priorities rather than resources.

"No corner of America is untouched," said Sylvia Martinez of the National Coalition for the Homeless.

"We have homelessness in small communities you've never heard of."

Instead, Democrats in increasing numbers are lining up boldly to fight shoulder to shoulder with Republicans in championing the causes of the overdog.

Child molestation case lacks objectivity

If Eric Foretich raped his small daughter as his ex-wife Elizabeth Morgan says, the darkest corner of hell is too high-class for him. If he didn't, nothing will make up for the treatment he's received in some of the press.

Morgan spent 25 months in jail rather than reveal the whereabouts of her daughter Hilary, who she says Foretich raped. She was put into jail by a judge who found no "legally conclusive" evidence of the sexual abuse; he also ruled Foretich may see the child, and Moran refused to bring the child forth.

If Morgan suffered jail to protect her child from a legitimate threat, she is a hero, I guess that's something we may never know. But her heroism is something we have gradually begun to take for granted, thanks in large part to some less-than-objective coverage by the media. Because of her sacrifice, Morgan's side is consistently publicized. Foretich's side is usually relegated to a short denial somewhere toward the end of the text.

I don't have any reason to doubt Morgan's story, but neither do I have reason to doubt Foretich's, because neither has been cross examined in a court of law. All I want is to see both treated fairly by a press that is ethically bound to be objective.

As a journalist who has investigated cases where people have accused their spouses of molesting their children, I may require that objectivity more than most. Such cases are murky waters for journalists to tread.

OPINION

because court hearings are closed to "protect the privacy of the child." But I always went as far as I could: I read files kept by child-protection officers, depositions of accusers and professed witnesses, and evaluations by psychologists and psychiatrists.

In several of the cases, there were bitter disputes over child-support payments or custody. One questionable custody case sticks out in my mind, precisely because I was never able to find evidence to justify denying the father custody of his children.

The children's mother had left the state and signed a paper saying she no longer wanted custody, yet the children had been in 11 foster homes in three years. I wanted to find a smoking gun, so I could say, "Yes, there is a good reason that man doesn't have his children." Here is what I found from looking at the documents that were available to me:

During a custody dispute, a neighbor (a friend of the mother) accused the father of sexually molesting his then 4-year-old daughter. According to testimony recorded by a child-protection worker, the little girl said Daddy had penetrated her with several toys, as well as what the worker interpreted as being the father's penis. Yet an examination by a respected pediatrician showed the girl had never been penetrated.

In the man's file were two diametrically opposite evaluations of his psychological makeup, based on the same raw testing data: One, a respected psychologist hired by the state, assessed him as "hostile, a volcano about ready to erupt." The other, an equally respected psychiatrist hired by the man, said there was absolutely nothing abnormal about the man's psychological state, and that he was justifiably angry because the state was keeping his children from him. Neither of the psychologists gave him tests designed to detect pedophilic tendencies.

The conclusion of the state child-protection division — that the girl had been molested by her father — was based solely on the evaluation of the state's child psychologist. Were his questions leading, as many critics of these kinds of cases allege? We don't know.

Am I convinced one way or the other? Absolutely not. But my research has given me a healthy respect for the complexity and hidden components of these cases. And when I read about one, I'd like to see what is not known clearly reported as such.

Ants

black bugs from Brazil. The fire ant quickly spread outward from Mobile in the soil of nursery stock containers and is now found, in addition to Puerto Rico, in Alabama, Georgia, North and South Carolina, Florida, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas and Oklahoma.

Tom Kowalski, a biochemist and horticulturist with the Georgia Department of Agriculture, says cold weather may not stop the spread of the ant northward.

"We don't see them in the mountains but they are in the valleys all the way up to Chattanooga (Tenn.). Hybrids of native and imported fire ants may interbreed to get cold weather resistance," he said. "We hope it (the spread) will be limited to warm winter areas but they could move up the coast to southern New Jersey."

Researchers say there is little documentation of reports that fire ants kill livestock such as newborn calves, destroy quail chicks, that their weather-hardened mounds damage farm machinery or that some farm acreage has been taken out of production because of so many mounds.

But Kowalski said farm workers are reluctant to go into a field infested with the ants.

An accidental encounter with a fire ant mound can leave a lasting impression. Stepping on a mound breaks its outer shell and in seconds hundreds of fire ants swarm out from galleries and attack the intruder. The fire ant can sting many times and will continue to sting until it is removed. A pustule forms and the skin becomes red around the site of the sting. The wound takes a week or longer to heal, researchers said.

There have been reports of allergic reactions to the fire ant sting but fatalities are rare.

To the fire ant's credit, it eats the boll weevil and other insects harmful to agriculture. In Louisiana, sugar cane farmers love the fire ant and welcome it into their fields, said Dr. Homer Collins, head of the USDA's imported fire ant research unit at Gulfport, Miss. In that state, Collins said the ant is a predator on the sugar cane borer.

Imported fire ants look much like the ordinary house and garden ant and are difficult to distinguish, said Kowalski. But their mounds appear to be taller and are more prominent than other ant mounds.

A single mound may contain one or more fertile queens, several thousand winged males and females and up to 300,000 workers. During the spring mating season the queen flies up into the air, mates and falls to the ground, Kowalski said. The mating flight can result in a 10 to 15-mile spread of new ant colonies in a single year. The ant also is spread in commerce, particularly nursery stock, although there is a federal quarantine.

"They're going to spread on their own and you can't stop that," said Kowalski.

"I don't believe you can eradicate the fire ant. You'd have to cover every square yard."

There are many fire ant poisons on the market that can control the ant.

Democrats accuse administration of conducting 'transparent' politics

United Press International

WASHINGTON - Key Democrats said Friday the administration's decision to unexpectedly sell $17 billion in government securities to prevent the federal government from going broke for a week was a "transparent political move" to force a vote on a capital gains tax cut.

"There is absolutely no limit to what they will do to advance their cause," Senate Democratic leader George Mitchell said.

Brady wrote Capitol Hill leaders Thursday to say he will sell the securities which would prevent the country from going into default until Nov. 8 if Congress fails to increase the debt ceiling before that date.

The debt ceiling would tumble to $2.8 trillion Oct. 31 from a temporary ceiling of $3.37 billion agreed to earlier this year. The administration has requested and the House has approved a new $3.08 trillion debt ceiling.

If the government goes into default, it would not be able to pay its bills, including Social Security checks which go out early in the month.

"Without any action prior to the expiration of the debt ceiling on Oct. 31, our current projections indicate that the Treasury could run out of cash on Nov. 3, and is certain to default on its obligations on Nov. 3," Brady wrote.

But he said the Treasury could take "extraordinary administrative actions" to use $17 billion in unused borrowing authority granted under the temporary debt ceiling to keep the government from defaulting until Nov. 8.

"Even with this borrowing up to the debt limit, it is important that Congress act on debt limit legislation no later than Nov. 7 in order to ensure adequate time to arrange market borrowings to avoid default," Brady said.

Brady's decision was announced as the Senate neared a showdown on capital gains taxes and was immediately identified by Democrats as part of the White House strategy for action in the Senate.

By delaying the need to increase the debt ceiling for a week, Brady removed the pressure for the Senate to act and prevent a government default and gave Republicans additional time to press for passage of the capital gains tax cut.

Republicans have offered the tax cut as a rider to legislation providing aid to Poland and Hungary and, barring consent from the GOP, the Senate cannot consider any other legislation, except a few conference reports, without withdrawing the aid package.

"It is a transparent political move to get a capital gains tax cut," Mitchell said. "It is an obsession with the administration. It is most unfortunate and regrettable. It won't really do much good to enhance their cause."

"It is my hope this unfortunate effort will be withdrawn," Mitchell added. "It is for the benefit of democracy in Poland, and the benefit of freedom everywhere."

and certainly in the interests of the United States."

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, called Brady's action "surprising, astonishing, and deeply troubling" saying it undermines world confidence in the Treasury and the securities it sells.

Bentsen said the White House had ordered the professional debt managers in the Treasury Department to do what he said they have always resisted doing - "speed up the borrowing, even though that will likely raise interest costs."

"They have been ordered to stockpile cash. They have been ordered to take an action based on a gamble that Congress and the president might do this year what they have never done before - force the country to go into default," he said. "We have never done that. I don't see how such an action can fail to undermine confidence in the integrity of our national credit operations."

"There is no danger that Congress would fail to pass a debt limit bill in the time to assure that Social Security checks would be issued. I don't know any one in this Senate, Democrat or Republican, that would be politically dumb enough to hold Social Security payments as a hostage for achieving some of their aims," Bentsen said.

Senate Republican leader Robert Dole said, however, that Brady would sell the securities "to protect senior citizens."

Looking for riches out West

California Gold
By John Jakes
(Random House, 640 pp., $19.95)

John Jakes departs from his previous themes dealing with the Revolutionary and Civil War periods with "California Gold."

Instead he takes the reader on a trip through California from 1866 and into the early 20th century, a period of history the author feels has been neglected.

The principal character is Mack Chance, a transplanted Pennsylvanian who wants to strike it rich in California. Chance makes his dreams come true with real estate ventures, orange groves, and, in the end, sees the money that can be made in motion pictures.

Along the way the reader gets a real feel of the Golden State during this period, when the railroads dominated every facet of society.

One of the more interesting episodes in the novel is Jakes' account of the sale of real estate to Midwesterners who are flocking to California in search of the promised land.

Some of the salesmen shamelessly promise instant good health and some use fake orange trees as lures.

Jakes' account of the 1908 San Francisco earthquake, in which Chance loses his son, is even more compelling in view of recent tragic events in northern California.

"California Gold" is as good or maybe better than his famous "Kent Family Chronicles" and his Civil War trilogy.

Good Grub: The Story of Charles M. Schulz
By Rheta Grimsley Johnson
(Farrar, 286 pp., $17.95)

She exists, a real-world counterpart to the little red haired girl with whom Charlie Brown has been in unrequited love for decades.

She's Donna Mae Johnson Wolf, Charles Schulz's first love, and revelations of her existence surface in the pages of Rheta Grimsley Johnson's biography of the cartoonist.

Forty years ago, Schulz pursued and wooed his love, but the union was not to be. Donna is now a very happy grandmother.

Schulz is happily married, too. If anything about him can be called happy. Still, he has never forgotten the rejection from his first real love. His revelation about his lost love proves the biggest revelation in Johnson's biography, the first the 67-year-old Schulz has ever approved.

This is a lovingly, gently handled book.

There's no controversy, no scandal and just a single real revelation.

Legacy of Silence: Encounters with Children of the Third Reich
By Dan Bar-On
(Harvard U. Press, 286 pp., $25)

Dan Bar-On lets the children of the Third Reich tell their stories in a simple emotionally compelling style - page after page of his interviews with them in their homes.

A senior lecturer in behavioral sciences at Israel's Ben Gurion University of the Negev, Bar-On sought an avenue into the psyche of those involved in Hitler's Nazi Germany. His path was through their children. And the children's stories, as adults decades after the events, provide fascinating reading.

Bar-On, whose family left Germany in 1933 and settled in British Mandate Palestine, relies on a format for his book that not only reveals the emotions, questions and worries of his subjects, but also of the researcher.

He comes from a culture obsessed with the Holocaust, a culture of the survivors. And he enters the world of the victims. His reactions are as interesting as are his subjects' memories of their parents, their childhood and how the events shaped their lives.

Whatcha Gonna Stew
By Patrick McManus and Patricia McManus Goss
(Henry Holt, 264 pp., $14.95)

This is the weirdest cookbook ever published.

Patrick McManus Goss has collected backwoods Idaho recipes, and her brother, who in the past has cooked up some fine books about the outdoors, has rustled up some memoirs to wrap the recipes in.

"My memoir is pretty much true," Patrick McManus begins, but he adds, "I have tried, however, to keep bald-faced lies well within the quota established by other writers of memoirs."

Not all the good writing is in the reminiscences. The recipe for Baked Steelhead in Cream Sauce, instructing the reader to debone the trout, says, "these can be removed using a pair of pliers."

The reader who buys the book for the memoirs, who unhappily runs into recipes a mere third of the way in, should be advised that more lies is listed in later on.

Jewel prices go through roof at auction

United Press International

NEW YORK - An unidentified private collector paid $4.6 million for a 32-carat Burmese ruby ring, the highest auction price ever for a colored stone, at an auction that also set a world auction record for a necklace.

The Thursday evening auction at Sotheby's gallery saw the prices of jewels soar with many lots bringing three to four times the pre-sale estimates of the gallery's gem experts. The ruby ring had been estimated to bring only $800,000 to $1 million.

Auction observers said the landmark sale was another re-fection of the world's perilous financial situation. At such times, investors put their money into jewels that are readily transportable and historically less vulnerable than the stock market to economic setbacks.

The ruby was from the collection of the late Countess Lux Milla de Borsouy, daughter of legendary Peruvian tin king Simon Fatino, which sold for a total of $31.3 million. Proceeds from the sale will benefit a Swiss humanitarian foundation in memory of the countess's grandson, who was killed in a helicopter accident in 1988.

It was an auction record for any single-owner sale of jewelry in the United States and second only to the $50 million sale of jewels of the duchess of Windsor at Sotheby's in Geneva, Switzerland, in 1987.

Another auction record set by the Borsouy sale was $3.5 million paid by an anonymous collector for a sapphire and diamond necklace set with five huge Kashmir emerald-cut and cushion-shaped sapphires, the highest price ever paid for a necklace at auction. It carried a pre-sale evaluation of $1.5 to $2 million.

Two other world records were $3 million each for a ruby and diamond necklace, purchased by an international dealer, and an emerald and diamond necklace, sold to another dealer, the highest prices ever paid for necklaces with such combinations of stones. The pre-sale estimate on the ruby necklace was $700,000 and on the emerald necklace $2 million.

One of the most stunning lots in the sale was a pair of diamond pendant earrings, with stones weighing 42 and 34 carats. They brought $1.4 million, twice the low estimate of their value.

tion, with 7 percent equating about 13 million.

This group, predominantly women with limited education, has the highest percentage of people who are trying to lose weight, but the lowest percentage of people who have been successful in keeping weight off, the survey said.

The poll also identified 38 percent as "the young and reckless," because they know a good deal about healthy habits but are unwilling to live according to their knowledge.

These young adults tend to drink less and exercise more than other segments of the population, but they don't pay much attention to fat and cholesterol in their diet, drive faster, and ignore speed limits and safety belts.

The Americans with the healthiest and safest lifestyles, about 35 percent of those polled, are most likely to be middle-aged, well-to-do women with college degrees and good jobs as professionals or managers, the survey found.

At the bottom of the survey were the 5 percent of Americans who know the least about healthy living and don't seem to care.

The group consists predominantly of whites, blue-collar men who are fatter than the average American and have the lowest level of guilt about not eating right or exercising.

Tax

portation needs. One of the proposals for raising more money involves a hike in the gasoline tax.

The poll was sponsored by several business groups. Mason Dixon Opinion Research interviewed 800 voters for the survey.

The poll also found that 56 percent of those who rely on their cars for transportation get stuck in a traffic jam at least once a week.

When asked about a hypothetical candidate for governor who supported the increase in the gasoline tax, 60 percent of those surveyed said they would be more likely to support that candidate.

Another 15 percent said they would be less likely, and 21 percent said the candidate's stance would not make a difference in the way they voted.

"This basically shatters the myth that a gubernatorial candidate would lose votes by advocating a gas tax increase, contrary to what Gov. Martinez has been saying," state Sen. Howard Forman, D-Pembroke Pines, told The Miami Herald.

"The vast majority of Floridians are tired of living in gridlock," said Forman.

House leaders had been pressing for a gasoline tax increase of up to 10 cents per gallon. But last week they indicated they might look instead to a 1985 law permitting metropolitan transit authorities to impose a regional tax increase of 4 cents per gallon if voters approve.

The tax has never been adopted anywhere in the state, but because it is already on the books, Democratic leaders in the House suggest it would not violate Martinez' opposition to new taxes to expand the levy statewide.

"I'm not supporting a gas tax increase," Martinez said. "We're looking at the law as it exists."

Martinez also indicated he might agree to permit counties within the state's seven Department of Transportation districts to agree upon district-wide gas tax increases without voter approval. Aides said the idea would help ease disparities in districts' shares of state gas tax money.

Halloween

We let them go at that point. Besides, the cliff was too sheer to negotiate anyway and we weren't about to do a swim dive at midnight into a shallow creek.

We made our way back through the woods toward the direction of our car, feeling somewhat vindicated. At least the egg-tossers didn't get away without a little punishment. One of them had a tangled-up leg and both of them were going to have a long walk back to civilization in soggy clothes and temperatures in the mid-30s.

When we reached the car, both of us were exhausted. We were covered from head to foot in mud, dirt and leaves, not to mention the numerous welts and cuts from the branch-sawings we had taken on the way.

We slid back down the embankment, opened the trunk of the car to get some rags and tried to wipe most of the gunk off our clothes.

We were, at least in our own minds, somewhat heroes for standing up for all these poor, innocent victims of egg-splattered windshield.

My friend rubbed a rag over his face and glanced downward at the car.

"Uh-oh," he said.

"What, what?" I asked, somewhat startled by his sudden outburst of concern.

"Look," he said, shaking his head and pointing toward the ground.

There they were, four brand new steel-belted radial tires. All flatter than a pancake.

So there we were, out in the middle of nowhere with a full tank of gas and four flat tires.

But at least we taught these egg-tossers a lesson.

Transit

would have to be expanded to 14 lanes.

"You end up with extraordinary numbers that don't work, which make the argument for public transit," Gustafson said. "It has to be done with a combination of public transit and road networks. That allows more people to move in a denser pattern that's consistent with urban patterns."

"I would predict right now that no transportation package is going to pass without some funding level of public mass and rail transit in it," Hendrick said.

"It's real clear that the legislators from South Florida have been insisting on it. The question now is how much."
