Time off for good behavior

SANFORD - Seminole/Brevard County State Attorney Norm Wollinger says he is disappointed that the Florida Supreme Court has overthrown a recent change in the early release program.

Wollinger has been working for years on an effort to have gain time removed from certain criminals. He said it was an attempt to prevent these persons from serving only a fraction of their full sentences for major crimes.

As a result of Wollinger's efforts, and a petition signed by 6,000 citizens, Florida's Attorney General Bob Butterworth, earlier this year, announced that the gain time be dropped.

Now, the State Supreme Court says it isn't legal.

Does speed really kill?

Debate rages on danger of higher speed limits

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON - Since the federal government let states raise highway speed limits last winter, at least eight states that did so have seen increases in highway deaths, an Associated Press survey found.

Yet, four other states that raised limits actually saw fatal accidents drop slightly.

The conflicting statistics have led the American Automobile Association and the government's National Highway Traffic Safety

At a glance

In Florida, speed limits on some major interstates and turnpikes increased to 70 mph from 65 mph in April and May. Deaths on interstates were down 8 percent from April-June compared to same period year before, but no studies completed yet for specific areas where speed limits went up.

Administration to caution that it's too soon to draw firm conclusions. Many states, for instance, have yet to gather data since raising speed limits.

Many troopers out on the roads, however, echo Utah Highway Patrol Lt. Robert Flowers, who says he's seeing more damage from high speed crashes. "It opens vehicles up. Doors come off windows come in."

Police investigate two store robberies

From staff reports

SANFORD - Sanford police are investigating robberies at two stores on U.S. Highway 17-92. A food market in the 300 block of S.

French Avenue was robbed at gunpoint Wednesday night at approximately 8 p.m. A Subway shop was robbed early Thursday in the 2000 block of Orlando Drive.

Wednesday evening, a person said to be in possession of a 45 caliber handgun, took $100 in cash and $300 in lottery tickets from the store. No one was injured in the incident.

Police said a K-9 unit was able to locate a few of the lottery tickets on the ground near Third Street and Maple Avenue.

The store manager reportedly told.

Lightning show returns to SCC

By VICKI DeBORRINI
Herald Senior Staff Writer

SANFORD - In Florida, we have little trouble spotting electrifying samples of extraordinary lightning. But watching it, close up, can be a frightening, if not dangerous, experience.

On Saturday evenings during the month of October, that won't be the case at Seminole Community College in Sanford.

By popular demand, the "Lightning Stalker" will return to the college's planetarium with the shows that wowed audiences in July. David O. Stillings, who has made a career of chasing down and photographing some of the most spectacular lightning shows in the world, will bring his electrifying show to SCC.

More than 400 people saw the show when it was presented on weekends in July. Since then, the college and Stillings have had many requests from people who would like to see the show again or for the first time.

"It is really one of the most popular shows we have done here at the planetarium," said Leonard Pellerin, director of the planetarium.

Pellerin encourages those who didn't have the chance to see the show during the summer to make plans to be there this month.

"The show is an exciting event and everyone who sees it walks away in awe," he noted.

Stillings is world famous for his stunning photographs of lightning that he shoots all around central Florida. In addition to showing his photographs, Stillings will narrate the show with

Down comes the sign

Crane company workers have removed the Kmart sign from in front of the Sanford Kmart, 3101 Orlando Drive. The facility was officially closed early this week reportedly as part of a restructuring which includes the closing of low-profit stores. In 1993, a major expansion program was undertaken at the store in an effort to revitalize the facility. The retail space in the store was increased to 85,318 square feet. The improvements however, failed to produce expected results, and the facility was ordered closed.

Husband shoots wife's boyfriend

JACKSONVILLE — A jealous husband was still being sought for bursting into an obstetrician's office where his estranged wife was being examined and shooting her boyfriend in the chest.

A warrant was issued for the arrest of Antonio M. Crews, 22, on a charge of attempted murder, said Sgt. Robert Connor of the Jacksonville Sheriff's Office. Crews had not been arrested by this morning.

Antonio Solomon, 29, was listed in fair condition Thursday at Baptist Medical Center with a gunshot wound to the right chest.

The shooting occurred Wednesday afternoon in the office of Dr. Gerald Stenkiyft at Baptist Medical Center's pavilion tower. Frightened patients and medical workers hid under tables and barricaded themselves in rooms after the shooting.

Raquel Crews, 24, told police her husband had been fruding with Solomon for several weeks and blamed him for their separation about two months ago. She said she is five months pregnant by her husband, but had left him because of domestic violence.

Antonio Crews was charged in April with battery on his wife. Mrs. Crews said after arriving at the doctor's office, she went into the bathroom to give a urine sample. She heard a single gunshot.

Six other patients were in the doctor's office at the time of the shooting. None were injured.

Two weeks ago, the Crews grieved when a judge sentenced a woman to prison for killing their only child in a drunken driving accident.

"I was just finished getting through that when here we go again," said Raquel Crews. "I'm under a lot of stress. I want my husband to be caught and dealt with. I'm still shaken up."

Cuban rafters increasing

MIAMI — The U.S. Coast Guard and the Border Patrol have been busier than usual in recent months handling increasing numbers of Cuban rafters taking to the seas.

The recent rise is nothing close to the immigration crisis in 1994 but the number of Cubans intercepted by authorities has grown each of the past three months. The rafters usually are returned to their homeland.

"Plain and simple, there is a slight increase from month to month," said Coast Guard spokesman Petty Officer Scott Carr.

The question is whether this is the first sign of another mass exodus; officials are watching the numbers closely.

"It's too soon to draw a conclusion," said Lemar Wooley, spokesman for the Immigration and Naturalization Service's Miami District office.

In June, 17 rafters were intercepted. The number has increased each month since, reaching 87 in September, the highest monthly figure in 16 months.

Since May 1985 an average of 10 rafters a month have made it to U.S. shores, the INS said. In September alone, more than 40 Cubans made it to Florida.

"The situation would appear to be building," said Lisandro Perez, who heads the Cuba Research Center at Florida International University. "When the U.S. accepts people who leave Cuba surreptitiously, they are basically saying, 'If you can somehow get here ... we will accept you.'"

At the height of the last crisis, 21,500 Cubans were intercepted in August 1984. The United States began detaining rafters at the Naval base at Guantanamo Bay to stem the exodus.

In September 1984 the United States agreed to increase legal admissions of Cubans through the U.S. Interests Section in Havana to 20,000 a year.

In return, Cuba agreed to crackdown on illegal immigration, diffusing a potential political and economic crisis in Florida, where Gov. Lawton Chiles was in a tight race for re-election and immigration was a major issue.

The Coast Guard figures do not include Cubans who land on Florida's shores and are eligible for parole under the Cuban Adjustment Act. The law gives Cubans preferential immigration status because of the communist government on the island.

Several groups of Cubans have made it to shore in the last two months.

In one week last month, 33 Cubans landed in Florida. The Border Patrol suspected smuggling may have been to blame in some of the cases.

But the message that gets back to Cuba is simple: If you can make it, you are in. That combined with worsening economic conditions sets the stage for an increase in immigration.

Renewed electricity and gas cutoffs, shortages in food and gasoline, rising food prices and the resurgence of an eye disease linked to malnutrition are all signs that conditions may be deteriorating in Cuba.

Shooting death ends argument between dealer and customer

By KATHERINE MUTT
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI — An argument over a boat sale escalated into a bloody gun battle at a dealership that left three men dead and two wounded.

Killed were a salesman and two of three dissatisfied customers who entered the store Thursday afternoon, Metro-Dade police detective Rudy Espinosa said. Injured were another salesman and customer.

A boy who witnessed the shooting gave this version: "A man ... say 'I want my money back for the boat because the boat is no good.' And he (a salesman) say, 'We don't give no refunds.' And the man went to his trunk and got a gun and started shooting."

The child, who gave his account to Miami television station WSVN, said the gun was an AK47 and he heard about eight shots.

Police said three men entered the Showcases Motors car and boat dealership near Miami International Airport about 4:30 p.m. and began arguing with a salesman.

"There was an argument about the boat. One of the men confronted a salesman and shot him in the chest," said Sgt. Pete Andreu, a Metro-Dade spokesman. "Apparently one of the salesmen returned fire."

None of the victims had been identified by police by late Thursday.

One of the three men who started the argument about the boat died at the scene, Espinosa said. A salesman and another of the customers died about four hours later at Jackson Memorial Hospital, the detective said.

Another injured salesman was taken to the hospital, where he was in fair condition late Thursday night and was expected to survive, Jackson

Memorial administrator Regina Deters said.

The other dissatisfied customer, also wounded, escaped in a beige Honda that was waiting outside with a driver in it, Andreu said.

"There were a lot of shots fired. A lot of shots," said an eyewitness, Omar Hernandez, a truck driving instructor who was across the street at the time. He said he heard 10 to 18 shots and ducked behind his car.

Maria Delgado, who works at a truck leasing office facing the dealership, said she heard gunfire and saw a man collapse in the car lot.

Expo continues

The Greater Sanford Chamber of Commerce and Seminole Towne Center have joined together yesterday and today for a Business-to-Business expo and Job Fair. The event will continue until mail closing time at 9 p.m. this evening. Members of the chamber and other businesses have booths set up in the mall's lower level to explain their businesses and/or services. Shown, Chamber member Tricia Kanbar Ledbetter, left, Marketing and Public Relations Manager at the Central Florida Zoological Park, discusses the zoo's programs with visitors Bernardine and George Kunda.

Racketeering added to the tobacco lawsuit

By The Associated Press

WEST PALM BEACH — Florida will add a racketeering count to its lawsuit against the tobacco industry, a move that could triple the $2 billion in damages the state is seeking, attorneys said.

Attorney General Bob Butterworth said the state believes there is "significant criminal activity" to justify adding the racketeering claim to the civil suit Florida filed against cigarette-makers.

A racketeering count would be based on claims that the industry lied to federal officials, committed fraud, illegally marketed its products to children and conspired to deceive the public about the dangers of cigarettes, attorneys said.

Butterworth said Florida has more information to support such a claim now than it did when it filed suit in 1985 because "many 'Deep Throats' have come forward."

With the racketeering charge,

Butterworth said the state could present evidence that tobacco companies conspired to mislead and confuse the public about the hazards of smoking.

And, attorneys could try to prove tobacco company executives committed perjury last year when they testified before a congressional hearing that nicotine was not addictive, he said.

Florida is trying to recoup the costs of treating sick smokers since July 1984. Those costs are estimated at $2 billion — much more than initially calculated because the state is now seeking money for a broader range of smoking-related health problems, such as low birth-weight babies, said W.C. Gentry, an attorney who represents Florida.

Palm Beach County Circuit Judge Harold Cohen told the state Thursday that any new claims must be added by Nov. 1.

Last month, Cohen threw out 15 of the lawsuit's 18 counts — including claims of fraud and conspiracy.

Roof collapses when wrong store wrecked

By KIM WOOD
Associated Press Writer

JACKSONVILLE — A roof collapsed at a shopping center undergoing renovation, trapping three people under rubble and seriously injuring a 4-year-old boy.

Garrett Peterson was in critical but stable condition this morning at University Medical Center. He was trapped for an hour, pinned by a pipe in the wreckage of the Lerner's store at the Cedar Hill Shopping Center, said Ted Holmes, a spokesman for Jacksonville Fire-Rescue.

The boy's mother, Gwenth Peterson, suffered what appeared to be a broken leg and injured shoulder, Holmes said. She was in fair and stable condition this morning. The third victim was not immediately identified.

An eyewitness told

Jacksonville radio station WJLK that a demolition crew was using a wrecking ball to knock down an old J.C. Penney store adjacent to Lerner's.

The ball missed Penney's, crashing instead into the women's store and bringing down its roof, the woman told the station. Police didn't say what caused the roof to collapse.

Rescue workers used a dog and a special heat-seeking device to search for other possible victims before calling off the search about three hours after the 8:30 p.m. EDT collapse. "We are confident everyone is out of the building," Holmes said.

Cecile Pearsall, a customer in the store when the roof collapsed, said she was preparing to try on some clothes when she heard a "rumbling and booming" sound.

Restrictions eyed on class-action suits

By Laurie Asseo
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Anyone who ever buys a car, subscribes to a computer on-line service or uses medicine might one day find themselves part of a class-action lawsuit.

But now, the federal judiciary is thinking of changing the rules for claims that can involve thousands of people — many of whom never even knew they had suffered harm until someone else filed suit.

Lawyers for businesses generally like the proposals before the U.S. Judicial Conference. They argue that class-action claims can be a form of blackmail, forcing companies to choose between a settlement and years of costly litigation.

"There's been too much growth in the kinds of cases that are being addressed on a class-action basis," says Alfred W. Cortese Jr. of the Lawyers for Civil Justice, a business attorneys' group.

On the other side of the issue, a group of law professors have lined up with the consumer-activist Public Citizen Litigation Group to oppose the changes as a potential affront of people who have suffered real harm.

If the rule changes are approved, "You are going to create a much larger incentive to go out and cheat individuals," says John Coffee, a Columbia University law professor, and one of 144 academics who signed a letter opposing the proposals.

One proposal would let judges decide that some class-action claims just aren't worth it. They could deny class-action status to a claim if the likely award to each person would be small — say $5 or $50 each — in comparison with the trouble and expense of trying the lawsuit.

If class-action status is denied, each person would have to sue separately, and most wouldn't bother.

"Where litigants are getting pennies and lawyers are getting large fees, what is the purpose of the class?" said New York City lawyer Sheila Birnbaum, who represents companies in product liability claims.

But Brian Wolfman of Public Citizen says that under such a rule, class-action status could be denied to valid claims of wrongdoing.

He cited lawsuits filed last year that accused Packard Bell Electronics of selling new computers with used parts. The company agreed to settle the claims by creating a $1 million fund and extending repair contracts.

"Some economist could go in and say the claim is only worth $10 to each plaintiff," Wolfman said. But such lawsuits also force companies to change their practices and serve as a form of law enforcement.

Class-action status already can be denied if the types of injuries vary too widely or the case simply would be unmanageable.

In May, a federal appeals court in New Orleans barred a class-action claim against the tobacco industry on behalf of millions of smokers around the country. The court said the case would be too unwieldy.

Most claims certified as class actions are settled instead of going to trial.

Another proposed rule would clarify that some lawsuits can be settled on a class-action basis even if that status would be denied if the case were going to trial.

That could make it easier for businesses to resolve large-scale claims. Federal appeals courts recently have disagreed over whether such settlements should be allowed.

Opponents say the procedure could make it easier for businesses to settle with people who seek the lowest payment on behalf of the class.

"You will get global peace at a cheap price," perhaps in cases involving serious injuries, Coffee said. It also may encourage plaintiffs' lawyers to accept low settlements for fear the company might reach an agreement with someone else, he said.

However, Birnbaum noted that judges can refuse to approve settlements that are unfair. Last year, a federal judge in New Orleans rejected a settlement in a lawsuit over Ford Broncos. The judge said the plaintiffs would have gotten virtually nothing, while their lawyers would have gotten $4 million.

The Judicial Conference is seeking comment on the proposed rules, which will be submitted to a committee early next year.

Cortese would like to see class-action lawsuits restricted much further to bar massive claims such as those over breast implants. Class actions should be confined to single accidents such as airplane crashes, he contends.

But that doesn't appear to be in the cards for now. The Judicial Conference might think the current proposals are creating enough controversy as it is.

Most of police force indicted for corruption

By TERRI LIZARD
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO — The latest crime sweep in the impoverished Chicago suburb of Ford Heights resulted in the arrests of most of the town's police officers, who were accused of taking bribes from drug dealers.

Four officers and two former officers were charged Thursday with accepting tens of thousands of dollars from the dealers.

"What they were providing was a very real protection racket," U.S. Attorney John B. Berman said.

A third former officer was accused of setting fire to his private car and then filing false police reports to collect insurance money. All seven suspects were in custody.

Ford Heights is one of the nation's poorest areas, with rampant crime and an average household income of about $14,000 in 1990. Police pay starts at about $8 an hour and tops out at $20,000 annually.

"There's an old line, 'You get what you pay for,'" Burns said.

Former police chief Jack Davis helped distribute drugs, Burns said, and about 30 dealers regularly bribed the officers so that they could sell cocaine and heroin in a wide-open market.

Officers accepted bribes to look the other way, tipped off drug dealers about the activities of other police agencies and even promised to fix cases against dealers, Burns said. He said some officers had been on the take since 1988.

The indictments on bribery, extortion and racketeering charges leave the suburb of 4,900 with only three full-time police officers, a third of its usual strength. Sheriff and state police representatives plan to meet with Ford Heights officials next week to discuss police protection until the town can hire more officers.

Clinton pushes to expand Internet access

By LAWRENCE L. SCHIFFMAN
Associated Press Writer

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Envisioning a day when computers are "as much a part of classrooms as blackboards," President Clinton moved Thursday to broaden the sweep of the Internet at 100 universities, national labs and other federal institutions.

The president said his ultimate goal is to "revolutionize and democratize" American public education by making computers available regardless of income, ethnicity or social status.

Clinton said his administration will push for $100 million in federal financing in 1998 to begin a five-year project to expand the Internet's capabilities. Aides said the cost for the full five years would be about $600 million if approved by Congress.

"Everything ages, and the Internet is straining under its growing popularity," the president said, noting that the global information network began a generation ago as a Defense Department system.

"It is now time to invest in the next generation of Internet," he said.

Clinton began his campaign day in Knoxville by extending congratulations to his running mate, Vice President Al Gore, on his Wednesday night debate with Republican Jack Kemp.

"It's nice to be in Knoxville riding on Al Gore's coattails," Clinton said. "Mr. Kemp is finding out something I learned a long time ago. It's better not to get on the other side of an argument with Al Gore. Last night it was Al Gore who ended the quarterback."

The Clinton couple moved on to Ohio and Kentucky, two states where the president is striving to connect his bond.

warring leaders of Bosnia forged a peace accord last year, Clinton said the agreement showed "that America can be an indispensable nation for peace and freedom."

The Clinton-Gore campaign announced that 100 former national security officials had endorsed the Democratic ticket with a statement praising the administration for "impressive national security accomplishments."

Most of those in the group served in Democratic administrations. But the list included Paul Nitze, who has served both Republican and Democratic presidents and was a principal nuclear arms control negotiator in the Reagan administration.

Facing a cheering crowd of thousands on a jammed Louisville, Ky. street, Clinton, backed by a 120-foot Louisville Slugger baseball bat, conducted his final rally of the day with one more thank you to Gore.

"In his debate and mine, we saw two very different visions for America," said Clinton. "There are two good people on the other side. They just see things totally different than we do."

In Knoxville, Clinton set out his goal to see every American classroom linked to the Internet and said: "I want to see the day when computers are as much a part of classrooms as blackboards." He added that he wants a "service fund" financed by telephone companies so that all schools and libraries can receive free access to the Internet.

Introducing Clinton at the Knoxville Civic Coliseum, Gore called the president's Internet initiative "a true milestone on this road to the future."

One of the facilities that would benefit is the Oak Ridge National Laboratory in Gore's home state, Clinton said. Page 8A

Newly returned astronaut: When's next flight out?

By MARGIA BURN
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — If she could, champion astronaut Shannon Lucid would be on the next flight to the Russian space station Mir. Never mind that she just got back from a record six-month visit.

"Don't tell my husband I said this, but I'd be willing to go up on the next shuttle flight," Lucid said Thursday in her first public appearance since returning home.

"But it's not only up to me. I have to take other people's thoughts and considerations" into account, the mother of three added.

Lucid, a biochemist, returned Sept. 26 from the longest spaceflight by an American and a woman — 188 days — and has since been undergoing rehabilitation and medical tests at the Johnson Space Center in Houston.

She said she's gotten used to gravity.

"You do sort of miss being in space and being able to just fly from one place to the other," she said at a postflight briefing for Johnson employees, which was broadcast at NASA centers nationwide. "It's really pretty nice to have the freedom" of weightlessness.

Her hair trimmed and curled after growing long and straight aboard Mir, the 53-year-old Lucid said she's gradually increasing the number of exercises she does each day to strengthen her muscles and build her bones. Both were weakened by six months of weightlessness; she also returned wobbly and weepy, but those side effects passed quickly.

NASA officials have said Lucid can fly in space again if she wants, provided she's in good health. "That's a concern after this long," said David Leestma, NASA's director of flight crew operations.

Less loss and radiation exposure are the biggest long-term concerns.

Lucid had to spend seven extra weeks on Mir because of heater problems with space shuttle Atlantis, her ride home. Already a U.S. space champion, she was able to break the world's female space endurance record because of the delay, she was replaced on Mir by NASA astronaut John Blaha, who's due back in late January.

Lucid was greeted by President Clinton when she returned and made the cover of Newsweek. She still has a list of 150 requests for news interviews.

She's a little embarrassed by all the attention, colleagues say. "She doesn't want it, but she deserves it," Leestma said. "She's done an enormous thing, a tremendous thing that was not envisioned when we assigned her to that flight. ... She has done it with the best attitude. Her spirit is genuine."

A colleague asked her if her spiritual life had been changed in space. Some astronauts who walked on the moon said the experience helped them find God.

"I like to think that it was the same as it was basically my whole life," said Lucid, the daughter of Baptist missionaries. "The location of where you are, to me, doesn't necessarily affect your spiritual life."

Concerned citizens

When it comes to fighting crime, citizens, all-to-often, have a tendency to tell the city commission or police department, "Don't just discuss it, do something about it."

Now it's time for the citizens to take their own advice. On Tuesday, Oct. 17, at 7 p.m., concerned citizens, people who really want to reduce the ever-growing crime problem in the downtown and historic areas of Sanford, are planning an action-meeting.

It will be held at Jaycee Park, French Avenue at Third Street. Everyone is invited to attend and not just stand there and listen, but volunteer to help. Get directly involved.

The recently formed Sanford Citizens Patrol Neighborhood Watch program in the historic area of the city hasn't been in action long. But they are already noticing a reduction in burglaries, muggings, street walkers and drug activities.

They haven't eliminated crime, but they have certainly done something to start reducing it. Now, if they can double the number of people involved, or even add a dozen or so, imagine how much more they will be able to accomplish.

Even if you don't live in the historic Sanford area, attending this gathering might be the match that could light a flame in your own neighborhood, and help extinguish even more criminal activities on a wider scale.

If you are a visitor, bring some neighbors along. While we can't say this with all such organizations, when it comes to this Sanford Citizens Patrol Neighborhood Watch group, there is enthusiasm, support, and the members have taken it upon themselves to learn what they should do. You can learn from them.

The local group, although well-formed and in full-swing, still needs volunteers and assistance. Other groups may need a kick in the britches to get started in a more active manner.

It doesn't matter where you live, be on hand for this gathering, but especially folks in the historic district of Sanford. There's work to be done, action to be taken, and criminal activities to be eliminated.

For additional information on this particular organization, phone Vernon McQueen, at 328-8202.

Women voters

I'm really tired of the news media telling me that women will vote for the liberal candidate this fall. I'm a woman with a very soft heart, who just as much as the next woman hates poverty, inhumane treatment of others and poor education. I am also a woman who understands how best to fight these problems. It is certainly not by government bureaucracy, regulations and wasteful programs.

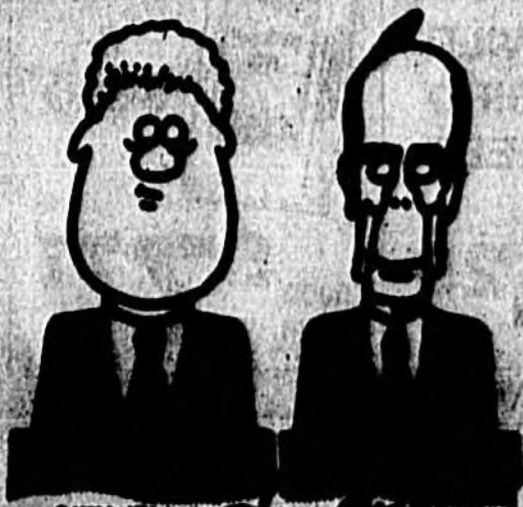

I believe the conservative approach of strengthening the family, giving more decisions to local boards and governments, and giving a tax cut to make the economy strong are the answers to the problems.

I certainly am studying and encourage other women to study their candidates and to vote for those with the most conservative approach.

Sincerely,
Kathy Willis

Will Dole attack Clinton's character?

Bob Dole got trounced in the first presidential debate, and now he's telegraphed the punches he plans to throw at President Clinton in the second debate, reducing to near-zero his chances of scoring a last-round knockdown.

While Dole came off as a polite gentleman in the Hartford debate, Clinton seemed the confident chief executive -- a man with a strategic plan that's working.

Post-debate polls almost uniformly confirm that the public thinks Clinton won on Sunday, and surveys continue to show Dole failing to break above 40 percent, while Clinton is topping 50 percent and Ross Perot is lagging in single digits. Even Dole campaign officials say that Clinton has an 11-point lead.

On a recent Don Imus radio show, Dole forecast his plans for the debate Oct. 16 in San Diego, saying he plans to hit Clinton harder on "character," which he failed to do in Hartford for fear that the media and women voters would consider him "mean."

There are perfectly legitimate "character" questions to be raised about Clinton, although this can't be done by Dole himself in a single debate performance.

The most prominent are allegations that White House higher-ups knew security office chief Craig Livingston was collecting FBI files on hundreds of Republicans and Clinton's hint in his Sept. 26 PBS interview with Jim Lehrer that he might pardon former associates in the Whitewater scandal who have been convicted of crimes.

Clinton also endorsed allegations made by Whitewater defendant Susan McDougal's lawyer that special prosecutor Kenneth Starr wants her to lie in order to "get" Clinton.

"Filegate" and Clinton's interference in Starr's work deserve intensive scrutiny by the media. So does the allegation by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. that first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton helped prepare a document used by a Little Rock real estate developer to cheat the government.

If the press can't or won't do its job, it will take a concerted effort by the Dole campaign, the Post-debate polls almost uniformly confirm that the public thinks Clinton won on Sunday.

Republican National Committee, or some independent group to elevate the issues and make them relevant to the campaign.

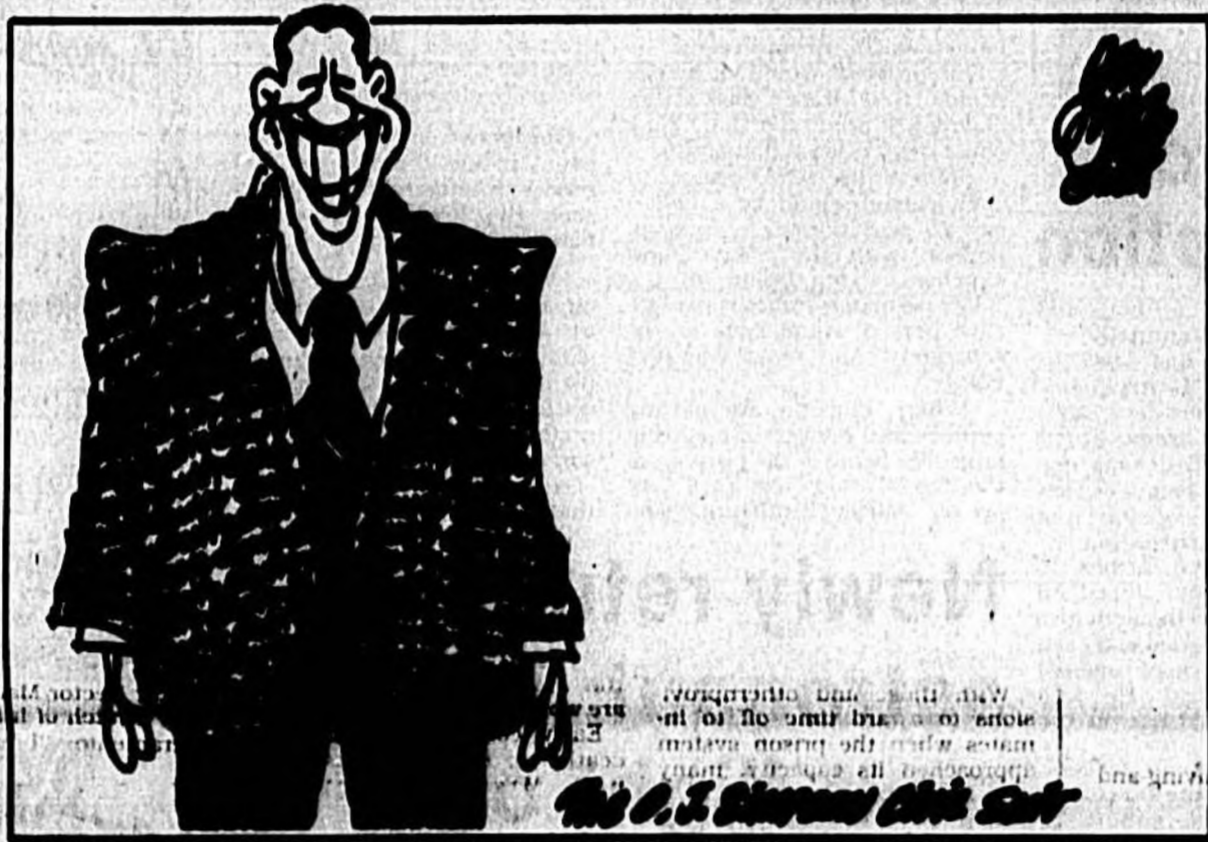

Dole is certainly within his rights as a presidential challenger to demand Clinton explain a pattern of misbehavior in the administration.

If Dole wants to avoid charges of persona non grata, he can raise the issues in campaign ads, assign surrogates such as moralist-in-chief Bill Bennett to do so, or ask the Republican National Committee to take on the task.

In fact, RNC officials have discussed the possibility of running an ad that scrolls through the Clinton "scandal" list -- from former Deputy Treasury Secretary Roger Altman, who resigned after giving the White House a "heads up" about Whitewater probes, through White House aide David Watkins, who quit after misusing White House aircraft.

No decisions have been made about whether to run such an ad, partly because the RNC seems to be concentrating its resources on keeping control of Congress, not on aiding the reeling Dole campaign.

In past campaigns, Republicans have been boosted by highly negative independent campaign ads financed by conservative activist Floyd Brown, but Brown has moved to Seattle and reportedly is planning no ads this year. Liberty as not, they'd be back anyway.

WRITER'S BLOCK

The signings of the times

Autographs used to be fun. Small boys could write to a favorite ballplayer, and get a signed picture in the mail a week or two later.

I remember writing to Whitey Ford of the New York Yankees in 1961. I was 11-years-old and he was just beginning his major-league career.

Mighty Whitey wrote me a neat note and sent along a color postcard.

Now and then, I sneak a look at it....and remember the innocence of yesterday.

And then I notice a newspaper advertisement this week that ex-Yankee's pitcher Catfish Hunter is going to be signing autographs at Bais Factory Outlet World from 11:00 a.m. to 3 p.m. Sunday.

These autographs, it is noted, will cost $15 apiece.

Or $90 if a fan wishes to have a hat or a jersey signed.

I'm going to pass on this offer. Fact is, why would anyone want to PAY for an autograph?

And when are the professional sports commissioners going to put a screaming halt to allowing any current players to be any part of autograph-for-money activities?

If Catfish Hunter needs the dough and wants to domain his Hall of Fame standing by doing baseball card shows where the public is asked to fork out $15 - or $90 - for his signature, so be it.

Joe DiMaggio has done shows where his signature costs $800.

What galls me is that today's athletes are allowed to do shows where their fans have to pay for autographs. It shouldn't happen. If baseball had a commissioner he should say so, so do basketball, football and hockey do have commissioners who haven't the guts to say anything.

Fortunately, some ballplayers know better. Sanford's Tim Lincecum won't sign for money - unless it might be for charity.

Mr. Lincecum makes enough in salary and endorsements. Thank you, Mr. Lincecum has integrity. Thank you.

As we all know some ballplayers take huge chunks of money for signing, and then fail to claim it on their tax papers. Hang down your head, Babe Ruth.

There's a big stink, too, that most of the autographs on the market today are phony. John Henry Williams, who makes his dot, Hall of Famer Ted Williams, says there are thousands of forged Ted Williams autographs floating around the country. John Henry said so on a 60 Minutes segment recently.

Card dealers and autograph dealers squirmed in their slimy souls and said it wasn't so.

But who knows?

For years, I've been amused by Big Time autograph galleries that peddle everything from documents signed by Abraham Lincoln, Napoleon Bonaparte and Albert Einstein.

I must admit to being intrigued by the Napoleon, Emperor of France, and Einstein, German-born physicist, catalogues offers:

• Signed letter and picture of Napoleon, $1,000.

• Signed letter and picture of Einstein, $1,975.

Napoleon's letter, dated Dec. 28, 1800, was sent to a man named Lamirac.

An irritated Nap writes: "Your comment to the effect that I have caused the needless deaths of one hundred thousand Frenchmen has reached my ears. You are quite incorrect. I am one short. Please see me at your earliest convenience."

This fine letter was written just before the mysterious disappearance of Lamirac.

Einstein's letter was a reply to a man named Schwilbert.

"I have utterly no idea what on earth you are talking about."

This letter and cheapish photo of the port physicist is framed in red and gilt.

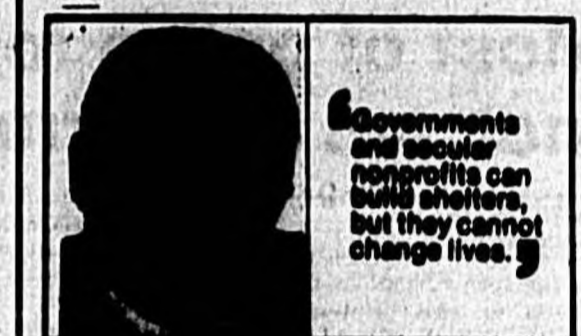

The greatest autographed note I ever saw was one scribbled out last day by ex-football player and broadcaster Frank Gifford.

A man had asked Giff to sign a book - an old Henry book.

Amused, Gifford signed his name with a note, "Give the book back to the library, you creep."

No wonder Shirley Lee loves this guy.

WILLIAM RASPBERRY

Rescue efforts

WASHINGTON—The Rev. Stephen Burger thinks there may be tremendous opportunity at the intersection of Clinton's anti-welfare legislation and the rescue-mission work he has been doing since 1989.

The refreshing thing about him is that he isn't sure how much of it he wants.

The government wants to enter into partnerships with nonprofits that have programs that work," said Burger, who heads the International Union of Gospel Missions (IUGM), comprising 300 rescue missions across North America. "Our programs work. This past year, we fed 27 million people and housed 9 million. Our success at rehabilitating addicts and alcoholics and the people who used to be called 'bums' is well known. I'm satisfied we have something to offer, and we ought to offer it.

The question, though, is do we accept government money to run our programs? And to tell you the truth, I'm not there yet. I'm not prepared to say we should run to the government's spigot and demand money. I'm trying to understand all that. But I am saying, here's an opportunity that we can work with the government, even if we raise our own money."

Burger, visiting here from IUGM's Kansas City, Mo., headquarters, reveals himself as a thoughtful—and unrelentingly Christian—man. It is absolutely clear to him that the reason the Gospel Mission rehabilitation programs work is that they minister to the spiritual side of those who have fallen by the wayside.

Take the matter of homelessness. Governments and secular nonprofits can build shelters, hand out sandwiches and even distribute certain services. But, Burger insists, they cannot change lives.

"They don't treat the whole person. They don't challenge the homeless person's fundamental way of thinking. They treat homelessness like the basic problem is housing supply when, as our experience teaches, it goes a lot deeper than that."

Burger likes the formulation of his colleague, the Rev. Mickey Kalman of the City Rescue Mission in Oklahoma City: "The philosophy of government homeless programs is to respect and protect lifestyles that produce homelessness."

It's not so much government wrongheadedness as the incapacity of the government to reach the inner core that is the problem, Burger said in an interview. Certainly government could make life easier for the faith-based programs by being less rigid about zoning and staff credentials. And he thinks it absurd that a Schenectady, N.Y., mission was taken to court over its insistence that a client couldn't bring his pornography to the mission with him.

Government might be helpful in yet another way, he said. "I've seen runs like mine in Charleston, W.Va., and he works in the housing projects. Now some of the community rooms in those projects had turned into well nothing. I mean they were warehouses. Full of junk, because people were afraid to go into them. Well, my own runs them around, and now they are used for programs that are changing people's lives. Should government make such spaces available? Should government pay for the programs?"

Family concerns

UNDATED — Politicians love to cuddle babies. But President Clinton and Republican Bob Dole are giving more than a passing campaign kiss to kids.

It's more like a bear hug for the entire family.

In speech after speech, stop after stop, both Dole and Clinton and their running mates and wives are placing family concerns center stage — from time off work for doctors appointments to $500 per child tax credits.

It's no coincidence that key voter groups — women and aging baby boomers — worry deeply about such bread-and-butter issues. And despite a rosy economy, national anxiety about families and their futures is burgeoning.

"It really is extraordinary, how the combination of families and children have come to be the conceptual touchstones for so much of the rhetoric and so many of the proposals in this campaign," says Charles O. Jones, a political science professor at the University of Wisconsin.

"But it's logical. So many of the crucial problems we're facing involve kids."

Government whistle-blower

BOSTON — After getting laid off as a sales rep for a medical laboratory, Joanne Byrne found another job far more profitable: government whistle-blower in a Medicare fraud case.

Byrne, who had to take odd jobs cleaning houses and baby-sitting while she waited three years for a resolution, hit a $6 million jackpot under a statute that rewards citizens for helping the government.

"It's still not real," the divorced mother of three said Thursday from her Bloomfield Hills, Mich., home.

Hours before, a federal judge in Boston accepted a deal in which her former employer, Damon Clinical Laboratories, agreed to plead guilty and pay $119 million in fines for submitting fraudulent Medicare claims for unnecessary blood tests.

The lab was the latest Corning Inc. subsidiary to reach a multimillion settlement in the government's four-year Medicare fraud investigation, and the fines are among the largest recovered in any health-care fraud case. The crimes happened in the years before Damon was bought by Corning in 1983.

Byrne's $6 million will be taken out of the fines, along with $1.5 million that will be split between two other whistle-blowers who worked at one of Damon's competitors.

Jeffrey's quick glove

OLD TAPPAN, N.J. — A few days ago, Jeffrey Maier was just a Little League pitcher, a kid who loved the Yankees so much he cut school to see them play the Orioles in the opener of the American League Championship Series.

On Thursday, only a titer-tape parade was missing from the 12-year-old fan's whirlwind day, when he was featured on national television, feted by a newspaper — and reviled in Baltimore.

Jeffrey's quick glove took a fly ball away from the Orioles on Wednesday and turned it into a game-tying home run for the Yankees, who went on to win.

"I'm not as famous as the Yankees," he told a horde of reporters at The All-Star Cafe in New York City. "The players go out there every day. The Yankees deserve the credit."

Woman becomes citizen at age 105

HYATTSVILLE, Md. — It took almost 108 years of living and 17 years residing in the United States, but Henriette Bolens is a citizen.

And as far as officials know, she's the oldest person ever to take the oath.

Bolens started thinking about citizenship a few years ago, but it wasn't until President Clinton signed welfare reform legislation that her son-in-law got motivated to take her to Baltimore to fill out the paperwork.

They were worried that she would lose her Medicaid benefits, although the new law only bars legal immigrants from receiving cash benefits and does not affect Medicaid.

Still, perception can be reality.

"If she become a citizen, definitely they have to give that to her," said son-in-law Roger Guelke.

She became just that on Thursday. Ben Ferro, director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, came to her home here to administer the oath to Bolens, who immigrated from Haiti in 1976.

"Whether you're born here or whether you're a citizen like this, it's all the same," Ferro told her. "That's the really important part. Everyone is equal here now."

Owner steals his dog from death row

MEDFORD, Ore. — Buster is on the run from doggie death row.

The owner of the retriever-chow mix snatched him from the pound and spirited him out of state a day before the dog was to be put to death for killing a goat.

"He's gone, buddy, never to be seen down here again," owner James Hurlock said Wednesday.

Hurlock said he took Buster from the Jackson County pound on Tuesday while a friend distracted animal control officers in another room.

As a result, Hurlock himself could be in legal trouble. The matter has been referred to the district attorney, county officials said.

"I knew that yesterday was going to be my last chance," Hurlock said. "I'll take the consequences. I'm not hiding from nobody."

County commissioners handed down the death sentence earlier this month after Buster killed a neighbor's goat. Hurlock admits his dog killed the goat, but said state law is too harsh.

Animal control officers said Wednesday that Hurlock told them his brother had taken the dog to California.

Oregon law is unclear about whether the county can ask the state to extradite the dog. "But if we find it, we're going to put it to sleep," Jackson County Commissioner Jack Walker said.

California grass fire

VACAVILLE, Calif. — Police are blaming a 15-year-old boy for starting a 1,500-acre grass fire that threatened about 100 homes in northern California this morning.

The teen-ager, arrested Wednesday, was being held in juvenile hall and scheduled to be arraigned today on arson charges. He also was linked to several of the 11 other grass fires set in the area in the past two weeks, Vacaville Fire Department spokesman Frank Moore said.

The boy was arrested while riding his bike near where the latest fire started Wednesday, Moore said.

About 640 firefighters battled the blaze near Vacaville, 50 miles northeast of San Francisco. The fire was difficult to reach because of steep terrain, but firefighters hoped to have it contained by tonight.

Solano County Sheriff's Deputy Dave Robinson said deputies told some residents Thursday that they should evacuate.

"We still do not have extremely critical conditions," Department of Fire and Public Works Chief Robert Taylor said. "But we're recommending that people leave before it gets to that critical point."

But now, if any, people heeded the suggestion as the threat to homes diminished.

Prisoners

for criminals convicted prior to Oct. 1, 1986, that it violates the constitutional rights of those prisoners.

As a result, 23,000 inmates who this spring lost their ability to earn time off for good behavior based on an opinion by Butterworth will once again be able to get 30 days off their sentence each month.

The court ruled that Butterworth's decision, by changing the rules after prisoners had already committed their crimes and received their punishments, violated the "ex post facto" clause of the U.S. Constitution.

Wolinger this morning said he was extremely disappointed with the decision. "The Supreme Court could have gone many ways with this," he said, "but I believe the decision is against what they had previously said, that the Department of Corrections has discretion in such situations."

"These people (criminals) don't deserve such a break," Wolinger said. "I bet they are certainly happy about this decision up in Raiford this morning."

While inmates imprisoned for crimes committed after Oct. 1, 1986, must continue to serve at least 85 percent of their sentences, those prisoners who committed crimes before then can continue to get 30 days off for each month of good behavior.

Lawyers for both Butterworth and Department of Corrections Secretary Harry Singletary scrambled to determine what recourse the state might have, including appealing the decision to the U.S. Supreme Court.

"I have to listen to see what my attorneys say about it, but it sounds like from the ruling that we are going to have to let people out," said Gov. Lawton Chiles.

At issue was "incentive gain time," the last vestige of time off awarded to state inmates to help relieve crowded prisons.

In the 1980s and early 1990s, all inmates received "basic gain time," an immediate 33-percent reduction in sentence upon their admission into the prison system. Prisoners could then earn another 30 days time off each month by working and following prison rules.

With those and other provisions to award time off to inmates when the prison system approached its capacity, many inmates were serving less than one-third of their original sentences.

Reacting to public anger about the early release of prisoners, the Legislature eliminated basic gain time as of Jan. 1, 1984. And the 1985 Legislature passed a law requiring inmates to serve 85 percent of their sentences. Incentive gain time was limited to 15 percent of the total sentence.

The new law was meant to apply to inmates whose crimes were committed on or after the day it took effect: Oct. 1, 1986.

But this spring, responding to an outcry over the impending release this year of Altamonte Springs child-murderer Donald McDougall, Butterworth issued an opinion that the DOC could stop granting incentive gain time for even those violent felons whose crimes were committed before Oct. 1, 1986.

McDougall — who himself was murdered last week in Avon Park Correctional Institution after a radio call-in show marking the anniversary of his 5-year-old victim's death — would have benefited from Thursday's court ruling.

DOC spokesman Gene Morris said the department must now compile a list of all violent felons whose crimes occurred before October 1986 and determine, case-by-case, how much time off each inmate should be awarded.

Between April 21, when the rule took effect, and Thursday, inmates eligible for incentive gain time could have earned nearly 150 days — four months — off their sentences.

About 23,000 of the prison system's 64,000 prisoners will benefit from the court decision.

Morris said the department is still trying to determine how many inmates should be released immediately because they would have earned enough gain time in the past six months to finish their sentences.

Harrison said that Butterworth should have known his opinion was unconstitutional, but that he did it nonetheless to further his political career.

"It's the 'I'm running for governor' opinion," said Harrison, who in the mid-1970s served for two years as deputy attorney general. "He knew it was wrong, and he did it anyway, because he saw he could make political hay."

Metric system is creeping slowly into American life

By RANDELM E. SCHNEB
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Whatever happened to the U.S. metric system?

Virtually every nation measures the universe in meters and grams, but Americans still love their feet, pounds and ounces. That despite the fact that metric was adopted as the official U.S. system of measurement more than 100 years ago.

States have tried posting highway speed limits in kilometers per hour. We didn't like it. Someone tried to get service stations to dispense liters of gasoline. Sorry, we'll keep our gallons. Water freezes at zero degrees Celsius? Forget it.

Yet, there has been some progress in the move to metric. In trade and business, the change is slipping along: Think of 35 millimeter film or soft drinks sold in 1- and 2-liter bottles.

But in cultural areas, like displaying temperatures or speed limits: "We've gotten nowhere," said Gerard Iannelli of the National Institute of Standards and Technology, whose job it is to assess such things.

Technically, the United States does use the metric system: It's been the nation's official system since 1893. The pound and foot and so forth legally are defined merely as fractions of the official kilogram and meter.

Today is even national metric day — the 10th day of the 10th month.

But most Americans prefer to ignore the official system in favor of weights and measures that are relics of when this was a British colony. Somehow, inch and foot and mile seem to trip easily off the American tongue, which stumbles over liter, meter and gram.

In terms of the family of nations, America's only kin on the metric issue are Liberia and Burma.

Speed

A little more than half the states have increased limits on at least some highways since Congress ended the federal cap of 55 miles per hour — 65 mph on rural interstates.

Before the change, highway deaths had been increasing for the previous three years, highway safety groups note. And the increases that have occurred since might be attributable to reasons besides higher speeds, including bad weather or higher rates of drunken driving.

Many officials estimate it could take up to three years to get good data. Yet in some cases, the increases are startling and are worth noting.

Early speed limit increases in Alabama, California, Missouri, Nevada, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, South Dakota and Texas.

Missouri highway patrol spokesman Lt. Ron Beck said officials simply don't know if the jump is because of higher speed limits, now 70 on rural freeways and 80 on city interstates.

In Oklahoma, Lt. Gerald Davidson said that since his state raised limits to 70 mph on most interstates and 65 mph in urban areas, speed has been a factor in 30 percent to 33 percent of traffic deaths, up from 20 percent in traffic deaths before. However, he said it is too early to determine if the higher speed his humorous, but often hair-raising accounts of how he was able to get the photographs.

After discussing two decades of stalking Mother Nature's pyrotechnics, Stilling will create a grand finale of cross-faded slides across the planetarium sky. The music of the William Tell and 1812 overtures will accompany the spectacular show.

Periodically, educators or bureaucrats or reformers try to nudge the nation along the metric path, normally with little success.

The 1975 Metric Conversion Act required federal agencies to use the system whenever possible in business activities, though exemptions have been granted.

"I think what happened in the 1970s effort was they tried to change everything at once and had tremendous cultural resistance to changing things that deal with everyday life and traditions," Iannelli said.

Today, economic self-interest seems to be slowly working. Change often passes unnoticed.

Anyone who reads nutrition labels contemplates milligrams — a metric measure — daily. Soft drinks are routinely sold in 1- and 2-liter containers. Wine and liquor bottled long ago were changed to metric sizes. And cars and other products seeking to compete overseas generally are made to metric specifications.

Yet metric has failed to take hold in what Iannelli calls "cultural areas, where we have an ingrained culture, tradition, habit." Meat and potato salad, for example, still are sold by the pound, and other items by the bushel or the dozen.

"Let's say I went to buy a pound of hamburger and I found the store selling it in kilograms," Iannelli said. "I'd be a little startled and rather worried."

Indeed, that was Americans' reaction a few years ago when some service stations sought to market gasoline in liters — resistance was loud until gallons returned.

Largely because the public didn't want the change and partly because of the $800 million cost, Congress also last year eliminated a requirement that road signs be in metric.

limits were a factor.

On the other hand, fewer people died in Florida, Massachusetts, Montana and Utah despite higher speed limits on significant numbers of roads. Massachusetts officials attribute the drop to enforcement of seat-belt and drunken-driving laws.

Several states still are mulling whether to raise limits. Others, like Michigan, have increased the limits in just a few selected areas as a test.

While the death toll has varied, one thing seems clear: Raising the speed limit means more people can drive legally.

California Highway Patrol Officer Hector Marquez patrols a busy stretch of Interstate 5 near Sacramento: "I haven't seen a great change in people's driving habits. Many drove right around 70, even with 55 limit. Now that it has been raised to 65, people are still hovering right around 70."

But Utah officer Flowers said he sees an increase in damage since the speed limit was boosted to 75 mph on most rural freeways and 65 mph in cities. Under the old limit of 65 mph on rural freeways, a car would roll over one or two times, Flowers said. But now, cars roll as many as seven or eight times, he believes.

When debate over the speed limit swirled through Congress, Montana and Nevada were often singled out as places likely to see increases in speeding and deaths.

The Republican Party platform advocates eliminating the Energy Department, which finances Oak Ridge.

Early Thursday, two persons reportedly entered the Subway shop at 2827 S. Orlando Drive. Police said one reportedly went to the rest room area while the other jumped over the counter, threatened the female clerk and pushed her to the floor.

They said the man then took approximately $280 from the cash register, and removed four rings, valued at over $280, from the hands of the clerk.

The two men were then believed to have driven off from the rear of the store.

The clerk was not injured in the incident. Police said they interviewed a number of juveniles who were in the restaurant at the time of the robbery.

No weapon was indicated in the incident report.

Child-sex tourism

OLONGAPO, Philippines — A British travel agent was sentenced to 16 years in prison today for promoting child sex tours in the Philippines.

The evidence presented against Michael Clarke included a brochure he allegedly distributed in London for an adult tour package to "Sin City" and the "OK Corral," where "dozens of headstrong young filles are tethered."

A spokesman for a London-based church group testified Clarke had personally offered him sex with a child prostitute.

Clarke, 50, of Eastbourne, Sussex said he will appeal the verdict. It was the third conviction of a foreigner in a 14-month government campaign against child abuse.

Official of ruling party gunned down

DHAKA, Bangladesh — Two gunmen assassinated a top member of Bangladesh's ruling party on the streets of the capital, police said today.

Obaidul Huq Babul, 45, died of bullet wounds to the head and stomach from Thursday's attack, police said.

The gunmen shot Babul at close range and then fled on a motorcycle, officers said.

No one claimed responsibility for the killing, but Industries Minister Tofael Ahmed, a cousin of the victim, said it was politically motivated.

Babul is a candidate of Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's Awami League for a parliamentary seat in the southern district of Bhola.

At least 10 political activists — both from the ruling and opposition parties — have been killed by unidentified assailants in the three months since Hasina became the prime minister.

Soldier dies of injuries from IRA bomb

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — A British warrant officer died today of his injuries from an IRA bombing, becoming the first soldier slain in sectarian violence in Northern Ireland in more than two years.

James Bradwell, 43, had been in a coma since the Irish Republican Army detonated two 600-pound car bombs Monday at Britain's army headquarters.

Bradwell was the most critically injured of 31 people hurt in the attack. Five other soldiers, one of them a woman with shrapnel in her head, were still hospitalized today in serious condition.

Word of Bradwell's death came as peace campaigners planned a mass rally in downtown Belfast to demand that the IRA resume its truce.

Theppal Barracks southwest of Belfast, previously untouched by the IRA, is in the heart of the army's 18,000-strong forces in Northern Ireland.

The IRA has killed about 1,800 people since launching its campaign against British rule in 1970. The outlawed group began a cease-fire on Sept. 1, 1994, but resumed hostilities in February with a deadly truck bomb in London's Docklands.

Until Monday, the IRA had confined renewed bombings to England and a British army base in Germany.

25 Moroccans drown

TANGIERS, Morocco — At least 25 Moroccans drowned in the Strait of Gibraltar while trying to illegally cross into Spain, a government official says.

The official, who requested anonymity, said Thursday that the would-be immigrants had left Morocco on Saturday. The official would not give any other details of the deaths in the often-stormy strait between the two countries.

The Spanish government has turned back increasing numbers of illegal Moroccan immigrants in recent weeks.

Moroccan Interior Minister Drias Beari traveled to Spain last week to discuss ways of halting the illegal immigration.

Nobel Peace Prize

OSLO, Norway — Roman Catholic Bishop Carlos Filipe Ximenes Belo and Jose Ramos Horta of East Timor won the Nobel Peace Prize today for their pro-democracy efforts in troubled East Timor.

They were cited "for their work toward a just and peaceful solution to the conflict in East Timor."

The two men will share a peace prize award of $1.12 million.

Indonesian troops took control of the eastern half of the island of Timor in 1975 during a raging civil war.

Indonesia was censured by the international community when Indonesian troops killed dozens of pro-independence East Timorese protesters in November 1991. The government claimed 50 demonstrators were killed, while human rights groups said about 200 independence protesters were killed by the army.

Belo has been instrumental in prompting the government to investigate the killings, which finally led to the dismissal of two generals and the imprisonment of several army officers.

New military alliance

KABUL, Afghanistan — Once bitter enemies, rival leaders assembled in the north today in a new military alliance against the advancing Taliban Islamic army that has overrun two-thirds of Afghanistan.

It took the Taliban's conquest of the capital and overthrow of the government two weeks ago to bring the country's deposed military chief together with warlord Rashid Dostum, who commands the only other major military force still capable of standing up to the Taliban.

Deposed President Burhanuddin Rabbani, Shiite Muslim leader Karim Khalili and Jaffer Naderi, the leader of a small but well-armed Ismaili Muslim sect, gathered today at Dostum's headquarters in northern Mazar-e-Sharif.

Since the capital, Kabul, fell to them on Sept. 27, Taliban soldiers have waged a ferocious battle against forces loyal to Maseed in his stronghold in the Panjshir Valley, about 90 miles north of Kabul.

While fighting has raged north of the capital, the Taliban rulers have moved quickly to impose their version of strict Islamic law, banning women from the work force, closing girls schools, forcing men to wear beards, the skullcap or turban and attend the mosque. They have banned photography, music and most games.

Gruesome mass graves

KLJUC, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Fifty feet straight down, it is dark and wet and the cave floor is full of bodies. Some were dumped in a sitting position, some kneeling. All are thought to be Muslims killed by Serbs.

Since last week, Bosnian officials have been excavating some of the most gruesome mass graves anyone has found so far in Bosnia.

They are located in parts of western Bosnia captured from Serbs just before fighting stopped a year ago. Survivors say the victims were rounded up by local Serbs on June 1, 1995, and shot. They say the cave at Lomate and a nearby meadow hold some of the largest mass graves in the area.

So far, 70 bodies have been pulled from the cave and laid out on the muddy grass nearby. None have been identified.

Workers also have found two plastic bags neatly tied — each containing a human head pierced with nails. It's not certain whose heads they were, or how many more bodies are there.

Dole works 'trust' theme in Ohio

By GARY ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Facing hard decisions about where to devote his campaign in its final weeks, Bob Dole is working to energize his rural Republican base. "You go hunting where the ducks are," he said.

And despite pressures in some GOP quarters to attack President Clinton's character more before Election Day, Dole said that win or lose he doesn't want to be remembered for going negative.

"Well, I'd like to win but there's certain limits. I can't see myself getting into the mud here in the last three weeks," Dole said Thursday in an interview with ABC's "Nightline."

"I think whatever happens, I want to be at peace with myself when it's over," he added.

On the road, Dole's been hammering away at his theme that he is more trustworthy than Clinton. Riding in a bus caravan along the cornfield-lined Ohio backroads, he's been stopping at county fairs and ice cream shops in this traditionally Republican state where Clinton leads.

It makes for some colorful campaigning. At one point Thursday, Dole spied a handwritten "Dole for Dole" sign in Circleville and halted his entire convoy to buy some sweets and shake a few hands.

"Thanks for the pie and doughnuts," Dole boomed over the loudspeakers atop his "Asphalt 1" customized bus. "And thank you for your votes."

"We're solidifying our base," Dole said, fighting for Ohio where he's behind Clinton 8-10 points in polls. "You go hunting where the ducks are."

Once this two-day tour ends tonight, Dole will return to Washington for a high-level campaign meeting Saturday to reassess where to channel his advertising dollars and travel time — and where not to.

It is a virtual certainty that Ohio, with its 21 electoral votes and strong GOP tradition, will be contested until the end as part of Dole's strategy to contest battleground states. Indeed, the president and Dole were both in Ohio Thursday stumping for votes.

"You can't win unless you carry the state of Ohio," Dole said.

At several appearances Thursday, Dole repeated that he would deliver his promises, such as a 15 percent income tax cut, and suggested that Clinton would promise the moon but will not follow through.

"He told you in 1992 you were going to get a tax cut. How many times is he going to tell you that before you say, well, maybe he doesn't really mean it?" Dole told a crowd of several hundred near Bloomingburg.

"He wants you to believe he's going to give you everything you ever wanted, and it's not going to cost anybody anything," he added. "We're going to give you the truth."

As Dole raises questions lately about Clinton's integrity, some GOP supporters believe he should be tougher on the president on such ethical issues as Whitewater and White House use of some Republican FBI files.

"We've got to point out there's a credibility problem here," said Ohio Gov. George Voinovich, campaigning with Dole. "We've been talking about credibility, and who do you trust, who do you believe?"

In a radio interview while rolling across southern Ohio in his bus, Dole said he plans to raise some of these issues more prominently in his final debate with Clinton Wednesday in San Diego.

"You've got to be fairly circumspect and respectful. I respect the office of president," Dole said. "We're going to be more aggressive in the next go-round in San Diego. Not personal, but aggressive."

Wallace family honors woman he tried to block from school

By JESSICA SAUNDERS
Associated Press Writer

MONTEGOMERY, Ala. — Vivian Malone Jones forgave former Gov. George Wallace long ago for trying to block her and another black student from entering the University of Alabama in 1963, but she never had a chance to talk to him.

Mrs. Jones got her chance before a ceremony in her honor Thursday night, when she received an award, named in memory of Wallace's wife, that recognizes women who made major improvements in the state.

Mrs. Jones, a 54-year-old Mobile native who lives in Atlanta, said Wallace told her the June 11, 1963, confrontation was wrong.

"He said he felt the state of Alabama is better now than it was then as a result of what happened through the integration and the desegregation of the schools here," she said.

The 77-year-old former governor, who has Parkinson's disease and has used a wheelchair since being partially paralyzed by an assassin's bullet in 1972, made no public remarks. He long ago renounced his segregationist past.

Wallace's son, former state Treasurer George Wallace Jr., presented the award — a glass eagle — to Mrs. Jones, honoring her for her courage in integrating the university and becoming the first black graduate.

"I would have preferred for it not to have happened but it did," Mrs. Jones said as she received the first Lurleen B. Wallace Award of Courage.

"I'm just happy that ... we can come tonight to celebrate a change — a change of attitude, a change of feelings about what's happening in this state," said Mrs. Jones, who retired last week from a job with the Environmental Protection Agency.

The largely symbolic showdown in 1963 took place at the door of the campus auditorium, where students registered for classes. Wallace stood in the auditorium doorway as Mrs. Jones and James Hood approached, flanked by National Guard troops.

In a performance carefully arranged with Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, Wallace made a speech about states' rights, then stepped aside to let the students in.

Mrs. Jones said she forgave Wallace long ago for what he did. Hood, who met Wallace for the first time in July, also has said he forgave the former governor.

Robert F. Kennedy Jr., who was 9 at the time, attended Thursday night's ceremony, which he saw as "a moment of reconciliation and redemption."

He praised Wallace for admitting he made a mistake in supporting segregation.

"I don't see this as an attempt to rewrite history. I think it's an attempt to right a wrong he may have participated in and he may feel some responsibility for," Kennedy said.

Mrs. Jones said despite the changes in Alabama, much remains to be done.

"We are still struggling with economic and social injustice in America," she said.

United 4, Mutiny 1

WASHINGTON — Raul Diaz Arce's spectacular three-goal performance led D.C. United to a 4-1 victory Thursday night over the Tampa Bay Mutiny in Game One of the Major Soccer League's Eastern Conference finals.

Diaz Arce's hat trick, which delighted the bolsterous turnout of 23,568 at RFK Stadium, gave United a 1-0 lead in the best-of-3 series.

Tampa Bay will host Game Two Saturday and, if necessary, Game Three next Wednesday.

The Mutiny had the best regular-season record (20-12) in the league, but 1998 World Cup qualifying conflicts forced Tampa Bay to play without two starters, including talented playmaker Carlos Valderrama.

It's unlikely, however, that Valderrama could have done much about D.C. United's three-goal assault in a six-minute span of the second-half that broke open a 1-1 tie.

Cardinals 8, Braves 3

ATLANTA — Gary Gaetti hit a game-breaking grand slam off Greg Maddux in the seventh inning and the St. Louis Cardinals started the Atlanta Braves 8-3, evening the National League championship series at 1-1.

The slam capped a five-run seventh and ended the night for Maddux, who matched a career high by giving up eight runs. Todd Stottlemyre was the winner, allowing three runs on four hits in six innings.

St. Louis took away the home-field edge in the best-of-7 series, which shifts to Busch Stadium on Saturday for the next three games.

Orioles 5, Yankees 3

NEW YORK — Rafael Palmeiro hit a two-run home run in the seventh inning, lifting Baltimore past New York 5-3 and evening the American League championship series at 1-1.

Palmeiro's shot to right-center off Jeff Nelson snapped a 2-2 tie and gave the Orioles a reason to celebrate less than 24 hours after a possible victory in Game 1 was stolen away by a fan.

Jeff Malar, 12, leaned over the right-field wall and interfered with Tony Tarasco in the eighth inning Wednesday, turning a routine flyout into a game-tying homer by Derek Jeter. The Yankees won 5-4 in 11 innings.

Meanwhile, the Orioles put their protest in writing, asking acting commissioner Bud Selig and AL president Gene Budig to overturn their Game 1 loss. Owner Peter Angelos and general manager Pat Gillick submitted a five-page protest that included five attached pages of newspaper articles.

The best-of-7 series shifts to Baltimore for Game 3 tonight.

Bonds upset with Giants

SAN FRANCISCO — Barry Bonds, unhappy that his father was demoted by the San Francisco Giants, may want to be traded.

Bonds' agent, Dennis Gilbert of the Beverly Hills Sports Council, said the star outfielder was angry that his father, the team's batting coach, was demoted last week without his knowledge.

But Gilbert would not say whether Barry Bonds, who has two years left on a six-year, $43.7 million contract, asked him to negotiate a trade. Bobby Bonds has been offered a role as a roving instructor and part-time scout.

Cox in trouble again

LAKE FOREST, Ill. — Chicago Bears line-backer Bryan Cox said he will sue the NFL after being fined $87,500, or the equivalent of one game's pay, for his on-field misconduct last Sunday against Green Bay.

Cox was fined for verbally abusing field judge Bill Smith, making repeated obscene gestures and shouting obscenities. Commissioner Paul Tagliabue threatened Cox with a suspension for any further misconduct.

Tribe girls edge Rams for 14th straight victory

By JEFF BERLINICKE
Herald Staff Writer

LAKE MARY — Eventually someone may notice the gaudy 18-2 record. The first place standing in the Seminole Athletic Conference. The 14-match win streak. The domination that resulted in eight straight two-game sweeps going into last night.

No one has noticed yet. The Seminole girls volleyball team took all those successes into last night's trip to Lake Mary and eventually overcame the Rams in three games. During the streak, the Tribe has now bounced the powerful Rams, perennial champion Oviedo and highly-ranked Merritt Island but still, Seminole cannot crack the top-10 in the state.

"Eventually someone's got to notice us," Seminole coach Beth Corso said.

If the voters don't notice after last night, they just aren't paying attention. The Tribe sports Aubrey Nelson, possibly the best player in Central Florida, a front line that could block a hurricane and a strong core of seniors. They haven't lost since the first weekend of the season (in the Lake Mary Tournament) and are nearing foreign territory, namely a regular season county championship, an unheard of notion just two years ago.

Alert on for tainted product Adrenal cortex extract not DEA-approved

Nationwide Alert on Hallmark Lake Injectable Adrenal Cortex Extract

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) is announcing a nationwide alert concerning 50 milliliter vials of Hallmark Lake Injectable "adrenal cortex extract," distributed by Phyns Pharmaceuticals of Scottsdale, Arizona. People have bought this product to lose weight. There are no quick fixes to weight loss or any other type of physical concern of consumers. It is plain quackery!

Since April 1986, FDA, the U.S. Centers for Disease and Prevention and numerous state agencies have received reports of disease-causing bacterial infections-forming at sites at least 64 cases of these infections have been reported throughout the United States.

Adrenal cortex extract is not approved for use by FDA for any indication and is usually derived from the adrenal glands of cattle, sheep or swine. Although it has never been shown to be effective for treating any medical condition, it has been promoted over the years for a wide variety of uses including weight loss, burn treatment and lessening substance abuse addictions.

The adrenal cortex extract of concern may have been prepared under conditions that could have led to its contamination. These products could also be improperly labeled, containing indications for use that might expose HIV patients to particular risk.

The FDA has worked with other government agencies in investigating how this potentially contaminated product was manufactured and distributed. The agency is taking regulatory steps to identify the responsible parties and to ensure that these products are promptly removed from the market.

Because of the seriousness of this situation, FDA is trying to directly notify as many consumers of these products as possible.

Physicians or consumers who have adrenal cortex extract products bearing "Hallmark Lake" on the label, should immediately stop using the product and contact FDA at 714-927-7416.

Patients experiencing swelling, tenderness, other signs of infection at the site of injection or other adverse reactions should contact their physician immediately.

Teenage turmoil mulled by Socrates

Dear Readers, Who said this: "Children are tyrants. They contradict their parents, gobble their food, and tyrannize their teachers."

1. Robert Dole, 1974
  2. William Shakespeare, 1508
  3. Socrates, 380 B.C.
- If you guessed #3, you are right. Obviously, teenage turmoil has been around as long as there have been teenagers.

While in many ways these are the best of times to be growing up, in other ways they are the worst of times, and the stress and pressures of teen life has made depression almost epidemic among teenagers.

Teens experience emotional peaks and valleys on a daily basis. It's when the valleys last for more than a couple weeks that parents need to pay attention and consider whether medical intervention may be necessary. While adolescent depression can wear many masks, John Meeks, in his book

	FAMILY COUNSELOR
	MARY BALK

"The Many Faces of Adolescent Depression", identifies seven symptoms that can give you important clues about your teen's emotional health.

1. Loss of interest in activities your teen used to love: He/she just doesn't seem to care about anything.
2. Long-term mood change: While adolescent moods can change like the wind, long-term mood change is not normal. Depressed kids may act rude, angry and irritable, or they may be withdrawn and sad.
3. Sleep disturbances: This usually manifests itself by the teen sleeping much more than normal, but still feeling tired and listless when awake.

4. Weight change: The teen may either begin dramatically overeating or stop eating almost entirely. Any change in a teen's eating patterns can be a signal of a problem.

5. Movement disturbances: Inner instability breeds discontent for depressed teens. They may start the day lethargic only to become agitated as night approaches, or vice versa.

6. Excessive guilt feelings: Depressed teens feel excessively guilty or to blame for minor sexual misbehavior, or take responsibility for parents' failed marriage or other painful things that happen to family members.

7. Suicidal tendencies: When teens reach this stage, boys characteristically seek help by acting out or by becoming reckless. Girls, however, will often make false suicide attempts as a way of signaling their distress. It is imperative that parents take any reference to death or suicide seriously—it may well be a life or death situation.

Rekindled flame burns deep

DEAR ABBY: A year ago, my son learned that a girl he had dated in high school 20 years ago was living close to her's drive from where he lived. He hadn't seen or heard from "Susan" since he joined the Air Force in 1968. When he heard that she was in the hospital recovering from heart surgery, he went to see her. Well, that was the end of his marriage to "Jan," a kind, loving wife and mother.

He left a wonderful wife for a selfish, obsessive divorced woman. I still consider Jan my daughter-in-law. Never will I accept the remarriage he married. He has alienated himself from his brothers and parents.

Abby, please tell people who feel nostalgic never to rekindle an old flame. The fire my son started has burned his entire family. Now, we have only ashes for memories.

Jan still is considered a member of our family. She always is included in family gatherings. He is not even invited.

BETTER IN OHIO

DEAR BETTER: Although your relationship with your former daughter-in-law was a good one, it would not have been your best. My husband, who was born and educated in England, says this really gets on his nerves.

	ADVISE

would not have been tempted by his old flame.

Please talk to your son. Perhaps he had good reason to leave Jan for Susan. If so, be more supportive of his choice and more accepting of Susan. You can remain friends with Jan and Susan has considerable respect for you. In the interest of family harmony, make time for your son and his present wife.

DEAR ABBY: I am 60 years old. Somewhere in the past, I acquired the habit of pushing my plate toward the center of the table when I finished eating.

My husband, who was born and educated in England, says this really gets on his nerves.

I never noticed it before because I have always thought it was proper — that it speaks to the server that you are finished with that course. Please advise.

SERIOUS IN BOSTON

DEAR SERIOUS: Pushing one's plate toward the center of the table is not proper. To signal the server that you have finished eating and are ready to have your plate removed, place your knife and fork together diagonally across the upper right corner of the rim of your plate. The knife blade should face inward and the fork should be on the inside.

DEAR ABBY: I couldn't help but respond to "Beamed" dilemma about her friend bringing a salad to Bible study and a heated lunch.

Her answer lies in the very Bible she is studying: Proverbs 15:17: Better a meal of vegetables where there is love than a fattened calf with hatred.

It would be a nice gesture for "Beamed" to prepare a lovely salad lunch the next time it's her turn to host.

Does new drug improve osteoporosis?

DEAR DR. GOTT: I'm a 58-year-old female diagnosed with severe osteoporosis, due to the fact that I had a complete hysterectomy at 33 and didn't take any hormone supplements until now. I've been placed on Fosamax and calcium. Will the prognosis be good, or has too much time passed for this to be effective?

DEAR READER: The initial reports on Fosamax, a new prescription drug that strengthens bones, were glowing. The medicine clearly retards the rate of mineral loss from bones and helps regenerate new bone.

However, Fosamax has not been marketed long enough to establish a track record. No one knows — based on special analyses called bone-density studies — how long the beneficial effects will last.

I believe that your physician made a wise choice in prescribing the drug, along with calcium, but I cannot comment (nobody can) on whether it will reverse your osteoporosis, thereby preventing complications of the disease, such as compression fractures.

In addition to using Fosamax, you could be helped by estrogen supplements. The risks of this therapy are slight in women who have had hysterectomies, because there's no fear that the estrogen could lead to uterine cancer. Ask your doctor about this option.

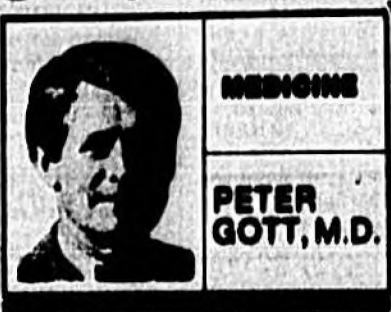

To give you more information, I am sending you a copy of my Health Report "Osteoporosis." Other readers who would like a copy should send $2 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2017, Murray Hill Station, New York, NY 10158. Be sure to mention the title.

DEAR DR. GOTT: At a recent dinner, I overheard one person saying that an acquaintance died from arthritis of the lung. As a veterinarian with a wife who is a teacher of medicine and surgery, I simply shook my head. This just can't be. The man became irate when I questioned him. Since then, I've scanned books unsuccessfully, but found a health magazine that talked about arthritis of the liver. Why are these terms being used?

DEAR READER: Arthritis means inflammation of a joint. The use of the term in some other context is inappropriate. Have you ever heard of pneumonia of the finger? A sprain of the stomach? Tonsillitis of the heart?

Your dinner companion has been severely misled. You and your wife are correct. There's no such thing as "arthritis of the lung," although — as you know — certain forms of arthritis, such as lupus, can also affect the liver. In such instances, doctors would refer to "hepatitis," which is the standard term for liver inflammation.

Each profession has its terms and jargon. Medicine is no exception and sometimes these words can lead to confusion. But with arthritis? No way.

Arthritis is arthritis. Period.

DEAR DR. GOTT: What can you tell me about lecithin? I take it for cholesterol-lowering reasons but don't know if it helps in other ways, also.

DEAR READER: Lecithin is a phospholipid, a substance necessary for normal metabolism. The human body manufactures it, so it is not considered to be a vitamin. There are no valid scientific studies showing that lecithin supplements lower serum cholesterol, nor does it improve memory, despite the claims of health-food fanatics.

If you want to take lecithin, it won't hurt you — but it probably won't do much good either. You'll do better by following a prudent low-fat diet, increasing your dietary fiber and using prescription medication, if needed.

To give you more information, I am sending you a copy of my Health Report "Fats II: Herbs and Other Healing Fats." Other readers who would like a copy should send $2 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2017, Murray Hill Station, New York, NY 10158. Be sure to mention the title.

Concede what must be lost

By Phillip Alder

When have we matured from childhood to adulthood? Sydney J. Harris, an American journalist, claimed it hasn't happened "until we move from the passive voice to the active voice — that is, until we have stopped saying, 'It got lost,' and say, 'I lost it.'"

The declarer in today's deal was adult in her approach. But with a better line of play, she wouldn't have had to exhibit such laudable ethics.

How would you play in six spades? West leads the ace and king of clubs.

In this auction, North, having bid only two spades, can afford to cue-bid her singleton club when South takes another bid.

The declarer, Rae Frenkel from Australia, ruffed the second trick in the dummy. She played a spade to her king, cashed the spade queen, played a spade to dummy's ace and ran the diamond 10. When West discarded, declarer claimed 12 tricks. Unwisely, the defenders accepted. But later Frenkel realized that she couldn't avoid a diamond finesse, she is stuck in her hand with no dummy entry remaining. To her credit, Frenkel found the opponents and conceded one down.

The winning line is to unblock the heart ace before playing a spade to dummy's ace. Then declarer can cash dummy's heart king and discard the jack or queen of diamonds. Two diamond finesses are sufficient, as the second trick established South's club jack as her 12th trick. She wins five spades, two hearts, three diamonds, one club and a club ruff in the dummy.
