'Dear Mama ...Forgive Me'

MILAN, Italy (UPI) — The magazine Gente Wednesday published a letter of confession written by Pope John Paul I to his mother when he was 10 years old, apologizing for lying about a small sum of money he was given to buy

The magazine reproduced the three-page letter, which was dated March 5, 1923. It was headed Forno di Canale, the old name of the pope's hometown, now called Canale d'Agordo. The letter said:

"Dear Mama. "The other day when you sent me to Cencenighe to buy medicine, I took the small sled to be quicker and going there I lost 2 of the 12 lire you gave me. You did not know how much the medicine cost and when I came back home I gave you 5 lire although the medicine cost 5 and I told you "I didn't have the courage to confess immediately and I thought I would keep quiet about it. But something is pricking my conscience, which from that day on has not been easy as it was before.

"So today I thought a lot and now I confess the truth to you, because, as I said before, my conscience is uneasy. And I thought too of the proverb that says: a sin confessed

"I hope that, like the other times, you will forgive me this time because you are so good. If you want the 2 lire I will give them back to you when I have them.
"With the thought that you will forgive me and with a calm conscience I think of you. I greet you.

"I am your most affectionate son - Albino." The letter was written just before Albino Luciani entered the minor seminary at nearby Feltre to start down the road that led him to the papacy.

White House: Dollar Priority

The Federal Reserve Board and the Treasury Department move in quiet, sometimes mysterious ways in the continuing effort in Washington to keep the economy under control.

Thus, the 'agencies' response to President Carter's expressions of "deep" concern over the decline in the global value of the dollar remains a matter of speculation.

That call is ever the more significant today following Wednesday's decline of the dollar against the Japanese yen on the Tokyo foreign exchange. Just when the dollar seemed to have been improving in the world economic picture, another decline was reported. So the president's call for action itself is encouraging.

The evidence of a new White House emphasis on the dollar's woeful exchange rate with the yen, the mark and the franc was enough to spark some improvement after the Carter statement on Aug.

In a subsequent news conference, however, the president renewed the pressure on Congress to enact energy legislation, which has been stalled for the past year.

The sad plight of U.S. currency is tied to the continuing U.S. deficit in its balance of trade. And oil imports, although down slightly since the oil began flowing from Alaska, are a major contributor to the deficit. The key to improvement, in the president's view, is conservation.

He acknowledged the alternatives to encourage a less-profligate consumption through higher prices—the wellhead tax on crude oil that he advocates, oil-price deregulation and an increased import tariff, which he can set by executive order. The tax, according to the Carter proposal, would be redistributed to the people. Higher prices achieved through deregulation, in the president's estimation, would mean higher profits for producers.

They could be channeled into development of new resources, however. He would prefer congressional action to the tariff option. The president is right in seeking comprehensive legislation that would establish a policy and restore the nation's credibility in the international money market.

The lawmakers have been nudged again. The should stimulate action in a political year.

Paper War

The White House should get a pet on the portico for working out a plan to cut down on the paperwork involving federal regulation of pension programs.

The new, simplified reorganization plan can take effect within 80 days unless Congress steps in and modifies or votoes it.

The government is in the pension regulation business in a big way, supervising 1.6 million private retirement plans which cover some 76 million workers. Officials say the new, simplified approach will in no way result in relaxation of protections for

The reorganization plan was instigated because of the vast number of regulations, blamed in part on the division of responsibility between the Labor and Treasury departments. It is designed to eliminate overlapping jurisdicties.

Government regularly reaffirms its intent to put its paper house in order. Successes are rare. The effort to streamline the Treasury-Labor relationship should be watched closely for possible application to other departments.

Affirmative Action Quota

County's affirmative action plan, calling for the hiring of 30 minority and 31 female employees has been adopted. The county initially approved the affirmative action concept last March calling for the hiring lowever, the county did not set the number of minority and female employees to be hired at that time. This week they did. An affirmative action program is required to obtain federal funds for certain projects, according to County Administrator Roger "Basically, the concept is to develop a system that will get us recruiting more women and minority applicants and let them know when jobs come open," said Neiswender.
