Relief Is Coming

In the public agony over the "generation gap," "hi may help a little to attend to Prof. Kenneth Menistee, writing in the Saturday Beview. The "generation gap," Prof. Keniston notes Seering to widen with the onest of adolescence "Modescence is a fairly modern invention. Up to contury ago, it did not exist. Prior to that, the Soung passed from infancy into adulthood almost as soon as they were strong enough to wield an are, hold a plow, saddle a horse or, in the case of the opposite sex, sew a fine seam and card a bit of wool.

They didn't have time to sit around, worrying shout who they were and whither they were going. Except to follow busily in father's and mother's footsteps, they weren't going any-where. Nor did they have time to prepare themselves for semething so remote as a career. Their business was survival, and the struggle segan early and lasted as long as life did.

Before another century is out, the Professor suggests, someone will have figured out something better to do with adolescence, and the "generation gap," now widening, will begin to close again. It is mildly encouraging—Charleston (W. Va.) Daily Mail
