TODAY'S BIBLE VERSE
Many have been ready to perish when in reality they were not far from abundance. There are limitless treasures near us. God opened her eyes and she saw a world of water. — Gen. 21:19.

Envy and jealousy inspire whisperings and conspiracies. If you have aught against a man speak to him or else be silent. All that hate me whisper together against me. — Psalm 41:7.

Personal incomes in the United States have risen to 276 billion dollars. That's almost enough to pay off the national debt.

In 1913 some 66 percent of taxes went to the state and local governments; this year 78 percent goes to Washington, only 22 percent remains at home. If you want to know why it is so hard to raise money for local projects, there's the reason.

Governor Warren says that the suit brought against him charging Road Department conspiracy over kickbacks was just brought to ruin Road Chairman McKethan as a candidate for governor in 1956. The campaign is getting under way a little early.

Suntime magazine says that Palatka is the site of an old Indian village once known as "Pilakika-ha" or "Pilatika". A military post was established there about the time that Fort Mellon was built here in Sanford and was visited by Generals Scott and Taylor, and by the then Lieut. William Tecumseh Sherman. Not many people remember, either, that Sherman resigned from the army and actually lived in Louisiana where he was head of a military academy before his March Through Georgia made him famous.

Not long ago we were reading in a medical magazine how communities which are without the services of adequate doctors might best go about the task of supplying this need. "Doctors like to locate in places where there are modern medical facilities," this article said. "And they like to locate where their children will have good schools and their families cultural opportunities." In short doctors are pretty much like other people; they like to locate in communities that are progressive and where the opportunities are good.

John H. Perry, who died last week at the age of 71, was one of Florida's outstanding publishers, one of this country's greatest newspapermen. Starting out as a young boy, he soon became connected with the Scripps Howard chain of newspapers, later branched out on his own, and soon became the owner of the Western Newspaper Union which supplied feature services to thousands of newspapers all over the country. In 1920 he became interested in Florida where he purchased the Jacksonville Journal and the Pensacola Journal. Since then he has acquired the largest chain in the state as well as extensive interests in other states. He has two sons, John, Jr. and Farrell, both grown and carrying on the family tradition.

Last week Sanford dedicated the new Tourist Club building and inaugurated the tourist season with a three days festival of special events. What tourists mean to Florida they can mean to Sanford if some steps are taken here for their accommodation and their entertainment. And what they have meant in Florida could hardly have been believed 25 years ago. Tourist provides an annual income of $900,000,000, says Roy E. Kony in the Christian Science Monitor. The tourist adds $1,000,000 to the local retail volume of nearly $300,000,000. Nearly 5,000,000 tourists visit Florida annually from around the world. "Tourism is the backbone of the Florida economy," says the Secretary of the

Teen-Age Troubles

The gift of seeing ourselves as others do would be most welcomed by parents of modern teen-agers. Legends about differences between generations and fiction of "a new generation worse than any before," are so much nonsense. Teen-agers are people and the sooner everybody admits it is the better off all of us will be.

It is true that crimes committed by teen-agers seem to be increasing in number. The way some teenagers race around in souped-up, rebuilt automobiles makes conservative folk wonder what the world is coming to.

But flaming youth is a short-lived fire. Teen-agers grow soon mature and slip out of the gangling adolescent stage as suddenly as they seem to have popped into it. Probably the most surprised are not the parents but the teen-agers themselves.

A recent poll of hopes and opinions revealed that they prefer to be regarded with a little dignity. They dislike pretending to be less mature in their aspirations than they really are. Many are tired of pretending to have little interest in adult pursuits simply because parents seem alarmed whenever such an interest is expressed.

All are aware of the teen-ager's parents and their worries. The concern over a sullen, unresponsive daughter who refuses to confide her troubles makes a parent feel his child is ungrateful. But to the daughter, her mother and father are people who refuse to recognize her individuality. She resents their wistful prying into her thoughts, their self-willed ignorance of anything they hope she won't desire to know.

The main trouble between child and parent seems to be the parent's refusal to admit the child is an adult. In other words, the sooner some parents grow up, the less trouble they will have with their children.

Too Much Protection

Once upon a time men worked in laboratories around the world, juggling the cryptic symbols of science, comparing, teaching and rewriting the hieroglyphics of physico-chemical formulae, translating them into the most progressive, most productive works seen since the crude days of alchemy. Those happy years of free interchange of information are gone.

Today the research man, seeker after physical truth, is a prisoner in one of the police states fencing off our earth. He works alone and his results are not his to use. His fellows in other countries can only wonder and try to find by deduction the processes of his experiments. If one scientist discovers a fact others are not informed and can only wait till they stumble on the same information.

A recent example of this folly is the so-called hydrogen bomb test which was sizzling over news services out of Italy a few months ago. The over enthusiastic Italian press maintained that an Italian scientist had discovered a way less difficult than the American method to combine hydrogen atoms to make helium.

Our scientists disagree. They say the great flame rising in the air, glaring red with green on top was nothing more or less than exploding hydrogen uniting with oxygen to produce water. Later Italian Defense Minister Randofo Picciardi denied his country had the hydrogen bomb.

But American scientists would like to know. Picciardi's report could be a routine government denial of Italy's bomb. Our scientists can only read the symptoms and conjure an answer. With the freedom of yesterday we could ask and probably learn a quick answer to a nagging puzzle blocking our own progress.

Protecting Policemen

A policeman's job is dangerous at best and when his job takes him on a hunt for dangerous criminals it can be especially so. New York police are experimenting with a bullet-proof body armor and a bullet proof shield which may take some of the risk out of raids on the hideouts of desperate lawbreakers who elect to shoot it out rather than surrender.

In Korea the army and the marines have been using body armor with some success and its use has been credited with a reduction in the number of casualties from shrapnel and small arms fire.

It is not likely that the policeman on the beat in New York will be equipped with armor, police officials say. But purchase of armor for special assignments is being considered. Other cities will be interested in the experiments in New York for the men who protect the safety of the community deserve to have the risks they take reduced to a minimum.

THE WORLD TODAY

WASHINGTON—The Supreme Court today will be asked to give a historic answer to the greatest social importance of this question: Should there be an end to separate schools for white and Negro children everywhere in the United States?

The South awaits the outcome gravely but not only Southern states are involved. Five cases of segregation in schools—in South Carolina, Virginia, Delaware, Kansas and the District of Columbia—will be laid in the court's lap.

Lawyers, some of the most distinguished, will argue on both sides before the nine justices. The court will give its decision some time in 1953. It could, as it has in the past on other kinds of segregation, avoid giving a flat, final and sweeping opinion.

At the heart of this struggle is the 14th Amendment, which says all citizens must be treated equally. Over half a century ago a railroad in Louisiana forced Negroes to ride in the back, or Jim Crow section, of its trains.

When protest was made to the Supreme Court on the grounds that the "separate but equal" doctrine, of the Negroes violated the equal treatment clause of the 14th Amendment, the court gave a far-reaching opinion in 1896.

It said separate treatment for Negroes was not unconstitutional so long as they received equal treatment. This became known as the "separate but equal" doctrine. It left states everywhere free to pass segregation laws.

And no court in the 56 years since then has overturned that principle. In recent years the court has knocked out segregation on interstate buses and trains but only because, it ruled, the Negroes were not getting equal treatment.

And in 1950 the court said Texas and Oklahoma must let Negroes into their graduate schools but again only on the grounds that the Negro schools were not equal to those for Whites. The court did not say forcing the Negroes into separate schools was unconstitutional.

Now the court is being asked to say, once for all, that separation is unlawful, even when treatment is equal. The cases from Delaware, Kansas, Virginia and South Carolina all involve the 14th Amendment.

Lie Sees Little Hope Of Peace In Korea

OSLO, Norway. (AP)—United Nations Secretary General Trygve Lie declared in a recorded interview with the Norwegian State Broadcasting System last night that there is little hope for peace in Korea.

"Everything has been done that could be done by the United Nations," he said. "It is a fact" he said, "that the Soviet Union, together with four other Communist nations, now are completely isolated. They have never been in such an isolated position. We must only hope that world opinion will be able to influence the coming decision about an armistice in Korea."

The pale pink plaster walls of the ballroom with its fine flowered draperies made an effective background for the dining tables upon which red carnations glowed under candlelight.
