

The Progress Of Pajamas

For centuries the dress of men has been more, shall we say, conservative than that of women. Centuries ago men were compelled by the dictates of fashion to wear heavy white powdered wigs whether they were bald or not. Satin breeches, too tight to sit down in, were also the mode. More recently men's clothing has been of better fit, but in summer it has been nothing short of torture to go around properly clothed.

The revolt of mankind against imported tweeds has been slow but sure, at least for summer use. This summer pioneers in the reform movement have taken their places along with Luther, Huss, and Hale as martyrs to a worthy cause. Some of them have gone to jail, some have suffered the indignity of being followed by gaping crowds as they walked about the streets free at least from the sweating heat. But gradually the battle has gained strength and position and the enemy is falling back.

Recently the five chief of Millstadt, Illinois, announced that his aides would answer midnight calls clad only in pajamas, rubber boots, and helmets. It will no longer be necessary for them to scramble around in the dark to find their pants and then to get into someone else's pair; it will only be required to slip into one's boots and then off to the fire. And the chief urges that the louder the pajamas the better. Thus higher visibility in dense smoke clouds will be attained.

Down in Saratoga the other day the mayor, evidently worried at his mounting score in the summer heat, got three companions and all appeared at a fashionable golf course devoid of their usual plus-fours but clad in startling pajamas. While in Long Beach, New York, an organization of taxicab drivers received permission from the police department to wear chromatic alken pajamas as their regular uniforms.

A group of American trade delegates who had been touring Russia where, we are told, it can get very warm in July, resorted to bathing suits to escape the heat, but reading in an American newspaper, which had escaped the custom officers, that pajamas had made their appearance on Broadway, they turned to their own silk pinks and lavender, much to the astonishment of the natives, and found considerably more relief from the heat than the woolen bathing suits afforded.

Elsewhere the rise of pajamas has been no less phenomenal. Recently a wealthy Oklahoma oil man began an air tour of the United States on a dress missionary campaign. He wears orange pajamas with black and white dots, embroidered in crimson, and his slogan is "cool, comfortable and calm." While in Chicago a leader of the movement has announced a campaign to get one thousand men to march through the streets of the Windy City in pajama attire, and then he says, "The battle will be won."

It is revolutionizing the world, this fashion reformation. But our advice to the average man is taken from Pope who said, "Be not the first by whom the new is tried, nor yet the last to cast the old aside."

Life's Mistakes

We are always reading in some magazine or other periodical the wise remark, "I attribute my success to..." and then follows some long winded statement about early to bed and early to rise. But sometimes we read what men subscribe their failure to. Usually it's nothing more than hard luck. Recently we found a list of seven mistakes of life which may lead to failure. They were as follows:

- 1-The delusion that individual advancement is made by crushing others down.
2-The tendency to worry about things that cannot be changed or corrected.
3-Insisting that a thing is impossible because we ourselves cannot accomplish it.
4-Refusing to set aside trial preferences, in order that important things may be accomplished.
5-Neglecting development and refinement of the mind and not acquiring the habit of reading and study.
6-Attempting to compel other persons to believe and live as we do.
7-The failure to establish the habit of saving money.

Speaking of these mistakes, the Leesburg Commercial picks one as perhaps the most important. Of mind development it says: "But no one need make the mistake of neglecting the development and refinement of his mind. In addition to our public school system there are about five hundred schools which offer home study courses in almost every conceivable subject, and at the cost of a few cents Uncle Sam's postman will carry these courses to the most remote and inaccessible regions."

The Commercial might have added that the habit of saving is no less important. There is an old saying as good now as ever, "Look after the dimes and the dollars will take care of themselves." Benjamin Franklin, who was the very epitome of frugality, set an example for future generations of Americans which may account to a large extent for the phenomenal success of so great a percentage of them.

MAYBE RECOGNITION ISN'T NEEDED

The subject of Russian recognition is not mentioned in this country quite as often as it was a few years ago. And recent news service make one wonder if the matter is not, after all, a relatively unimportant one.

There is a great deal to be said pro and con, about the broad question of Russian recognition, debt repudiation, etc. Meanwhile, two salient facts are emerging. One is that Russia is desperately in need of precisely the kind of goods that America can furnish; the other is that both Russians and Americans, realizing this, are beginning to do business on a big scale.

The other day a big American automobile company signed an agreement with the Russian government to establish a regular monthly service between New York and Russia. The two nations are working together for their benefit; does it matter greatly whether their governments officially "recognize" one another?

County Inspector John E. Mitchell has received figures from Chicago Inspector Stegari of the United States agricultural department that up to August 10, 1929 sales of cotton had been $1,000,000 and $1,000,000 had been shipped to Russia. The cotton would be most satisfactory, and the price of it would be $1.00 per pound. It is not that all the Russian...

ONLY FOOTBALL WELLS TAUGHT

On the eve of the beginning of another term at our university and colleges of special interest is the assertion of Dr. Hamilton Holt, president of Rollins College, that both the recitation and lecture method in scholastic work are inefficient, that genuine teacher-professor are rare, and that only football is effectively taught in colleges and universities. Writing in the forum, Dr. Holt says:

"The teacher is little more than a detective trying to discover the degree of the student's unfaithfulness, using marks as the measure of deficiency. Marks, and not the mastery of the subject, tend to become the objective of the student. The system puts a premium on bluffing. If the recitation system is the lecture system is worse. It assumes that what one man has perhaps taken a lifetime to acquire—succeeding only by dint of painstaking observation, and possibly the use of his creative imagination—can be relayed or spoon-fed to another who has not gone through a like process. The truth is that lectures can teach nothing."

Dr. Holt is sorry for both professors and students who are subjected to a system which he regards as obviously obsolete. "Today we find hosts of men engaged in the laborious, time-consuming and unprofitable task of writing unmissed theses on unimportant subjects and trying to learn more and more about less and less," he says. "While teaching orientation courses the take the opposite extreme and try to make their students learn less and less about more and more. Strangely enough, the teacher-professor—the men who are primarily interested in teaching students rather than subjects—are usually not the ones who win promotions or calls to other colleges, yet it is these who so often make the real impression on the students."

CO-OPERATIVE EGG DAY

On Wednesday of this week business men of Plant City and poultrymen of this section are scheduled to rally forth through-out this section for the purpose of "selling" the Gulf Coast Poultry Co-operative organization now being formed, to all of those in this section who have a flock of chickens. Leading poultrymen of this section have in general signed up. Others are said to be most favorable toward the organization and awaiting only a general movement for signing up before doing so themselves.

There is much to be said in approval of the co-operative, little to be said against it. Any co-operative effort which through the year can assure a firm and steady market for products of the farm should not be regarded lightly. Seasonal ups and downs of prices for any commodity make the production of that commodity somewhat of a hazardous business. That situation has largely governed the output of eggs in Hillsborough county since eggs were first produced here. That situation will continue to prevail so long as hundreds of producers compete with one another in the sale of their eggs. It will always be a buyers' market. The formation of a strong co-operative one which embraces practically the entire output of eggs will largely turn the tide of affairs to a sellers' market as it were.

Poultrymen and all farmers who produce eggs should and of a right ought to be interested in the co-operative. Business men of Plant City too, should, and of a right ought to be interested in the project. The success of a poultry co-operative rests with the people of East Hillsborough county who produce eggs. If they put their shoulders to the wheel they can shove this organization over the hill to success, a success that should result in a staple market for their eggs—a success that should give each and every farmer in the county an opportunity to have a fair flow of cash income sufficient in part, if not in whole, to handle the ordinary family grocery bill. Right now under present conditions there are numbers of farmers with a couple of hundred head of birds who are securing their entire living from this one source and at the same time getting a considerable amount of fertilizer for use in producing small crops.

CLASSICAL REVENGE

Walter Winchell tells in his Broadway column in the Atlanta Georgian two instances of classical revenge which have lately occurred. John Farrow, a Hollywood scenarist, in his early days, went down to sea, but he became the "patry" of the crew, that is, the object of abuse. The officers and crew became so abusive that he deserted and finally tramped his way back to this country. He began writing adventure stories for the magazines and then was sent for by one of the big motion picture companies. His first scenario yielded him $100,000. Instead of saying himself lucky, he got on the train, went to Seattle and found the scoundrel from which he deserted. Walking aboard, he showed his papers at entry and then fired the whole crew. A short while later, he took a satellite picture in burning the old hulk to make a movie thriller. It cost him $1,000,000.

Twenty-five years ago, the business manager of a leading Massachusetts paper was the bone of contention. One set of owners thought him a business wizard; the other set thought him a dunderhead. The controversy over him raged until those who wanted to get rid of him were successful. Fifty years after he was fired, he came back to Fall River and walked into the office of the

AMAZING POSSIBILITIES OF AUTOGIRO

In view of the interest in aviation which everywhere grows with Kudu-like rapidity, it is strange that the autogiro—an invention of Genor Juan de la Cierva, a Spaniard, has not caused more excitement. World-famous Zeppelins and 20-day refilling flights receive columns upon columns of press space. Stories of war in the air have multiplied without end since 1918. G. Well's imagination first ran a few decades ahead of him. But the one item which brings us closest to the expected day when father will run the flying machine out of the hangar to take the family for a Sunday afternoon ride, when the grocery boy will shove his parcels in the twenty-second story servant's entrance of city apartments, when, in fact, air transportation will be as common as and preferred to land travel, has been treated almost as warily by newspapers and periodicals as were the first Kitty Hawk flights of the Wright brothers.

Genor de la Cierva has a flying machine which will vary in speed while flying from about 100 miles an hour down to almost nothing. Its landing speed is so slight that it stops in less than ten feet. Certainly such performance, as compared to ordinary, hornet-like airplanes with its dangerously fast take-off and landing, is a most revolutionary departure.

Although the actual aerodynamic of the autogiro are not fully understood, the basic principle of the machine is simple. The ordinary airplane, as everyone knows, has to gather speed along the ground before it will rise. This is due to the fact that the air must rush against the front edge of the wings with enough speed to create a sufficient vacuum on the top surface of the wings to hold the plane aloft. With most types of planes forty miles an hour at least, is required. The autogiro has, instead of an upper wing, four large vanes which are about fifteen feet long and are mounted on a vertical shaft. Before the machine is ready to fly, this windmill-like mechanism is made to rotate, either by taxiing the plane or by

Basque Country Seen as Cradle of Outdoor Girl

Sun-Kissed Hills of Pyrenees Have Produced Fine Athletes

By David P. Bentzer International News Service Dramatic Editor Copyright, 1929

NEW YORK, Sept. 10.—(INS)—The cradle of the original sports-girl lies in the sun-kissed hills of the Pyrenees, according to Rita Weisman, short story writer and playwright who just returned from a vacation in the Basque village of St. Jean de Luz overlooking the Bay of Biscay.

A mysterious race whose origin even lost in the mists of broad, has produced tall, broad-shouldered, Amazonian womenhood with the rhythm of the sea in their stride.

They are superb types of girlhood with a traditional love of the outdoors, said Miss Weisman. "They walk like queens, swim like mermaids and dance their native fandango with joyous grace."

And if you think that the barrelegged and suntan-faced are American, you are very much mistaken. The Basque maidens have been going without stockings and wearing themselves on the sands since long before Columbus made his famous ferry trip across the Atlantic.

Miss Weisman told of the naivete of these Pyrenees lasses. One came out of the sea and stretched out a large towel. She stepped down and by a series of lightning-like manipulations she donned her one-piece bathing suit and robed herself completely without exposing an inch of meat, hair or skin.

"And the did it so gracefully and so quickly that she could not get since from a look of 'modesty,'" said Miss Weisman.

When the girls were in the outdoors, the Basque girl wears clothing to show her body free. Miss Weisman says that there are no dresses worn from the Basque style in pleated sport styles.

U. S. NOT BLAMED FOR SPREADING COCKTAIL HABIT

Frenchman States His Foundrymen Were Only One

By Alice Langelier International News Service Staff Correspondent PARIS, Sept. 10.—America is not to blame for the fast spreading cocktail custom among the French according to Gaston Rameau, writing in "L'Illustration" and commencing his readers that even the name is of French origin.

The story runs that a rich French farmer lost his finest fighting cock. To the man who would find and return it, he would give his daughter in marriage. A handsome officer was the lucky man. Bottles were brought out to pour the drinks for the toast to the champion cock. But, disturbed by the good looking officer, she mixed the alcohol with a curiously cold drink which resembled the multi-colored tail of the cock, hence "cocktail."

"If we French are fast substituting the cocktail set for the old-time tureen as a wedding gift," writes Monsieur Rameau, "there's a good reason for it and it hasn't anything to do with America and the Americans. French hostesses have learned that the cocktail has practical advantages. A smart dinner preceded by a cocktail has already reached the point of communicative warmth and jollity which is sometimes not even attained at the very end of an ordinary meal. The barman cooperatively changes the atmosphere of the dining-room, particularly when it is the man-of-the-house."

who plays the part? A cocktail, according to the Frenchman, produces a special kind of intoxication which is unlike anything caused by other wines and liquors. Each one of the ingredients which composes the drink separates from the others and affects the head as if it were the only one.

The effect, he finds, is like a pleasant anesthetic, or drug, producing a kind of vague excitation, diffusing voluptuousness as though suddenly life became exceedingly easy and calm, like the sweetest dream. The cocktail brings with it joy, sweetness and indulgence and such a drink is worth while to any man, argues Rameau.

At the same moment, he urges his readers not to carry the cocktail habit too far, as many Americans have done. "It must merely be the means of an illusion of the moment. It will not change soon. It would be a great mistake to take it too seriously, a little episode in the struggle which sustains modern man against his destiny."

American visitors to the Chateau Thibery, Hill Des Berrys, on Bre, Bellan, Woods, etc., will no longer see the placement of the celebrated Bertha, a kind of cement platform which was installed by the State as an official monument. The property with it stands has been sold and from this spot to the road by which they entered, no less than four proprietors are in possession of the land and it is next to impossible to get their permission for entrance, precluding the caretaker.

"European hotels are the best in the world," says S. Gregory Taylor, prominent New York hotelier. "They are more efficiently run and more comfortably arranged and furnished than the famous big American hotels," he continues.

Senate Probe Into Shearer Activities Will Start In Week

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12.—(INS)—The Senate's investigation into the propaganda activities of William J. Shearer against naval reduction, and his employment by three American shipbuilding concerns to represent them at the ill-starred Geneva conference, will get underway early next week and will be conducted by a sub-committee of three senators it was decided today when the Senate Naval committee met and authorized Senator Hale, (R) of Maine, the chairman, to appoint either three or five members of the committee to conduct the probe and to map out plans for public hearings.

While the committee was laying plans for the inquiry, there was submitted to President Hoover lengthy reports on Shearer's record and his multifarious activities from three separate governmental departments—justice, state and navy. The latter report came from the naval intelligence corps. The State Department's report was said to have concerned itself with Shearer's foreign activities, which have brought him into disfavor with a number of foreign governments, including the British and Belgian.
