With 31 million young men registered for the draft and with over 130,000 being added each month, there are lots of questions being asked these days about the military obligations and training routine of our Armed Services. Elton Fay, nationally known expert on military matters, answers in his new series, 'G.I. GUIDE', many complexing problems concerning the immediate future of young Americans of military age. He takes up the draft order of call, including classifications, deferments and essential occupations. He writes about volunteering, about the Reserve-National Guard situation, induction, training and benefits and obligations of military life and other aspects so vital these days both to parents and the draft-age son.
