When Thieves Fall Out

We never thought that we would be among those who rejoice at the prospect of any further outbreak of hostilities anywhere in the world, but the news from the Balkans these days is certainly encouraging. If indeed will only invade Rumania far enough to prevent a definite threat to Hitler and his allies, leaving those powers to make another front just at the time when they are undertaking the invasion of England, the civilization of the world may yet be preserved.

There is an old saying that the best laid schemes of men and men sometimes go astray, and this seems to be one of those times. There is no denying the fact that up to the moment the scheme of Hitler or Mussolini has been well thought out and well worked with clock-like precision. If their campaign continued with the same efficiency and effectiveness of the last few weeks, the whole world would be under their control by the end of the summer.

But it may be that Mr. Churchill has presented Mr.

Stalin with a copy of Hitler's "Mein Kampf," it may be that he has been talking with the Soviet Union, has been in touch with the British, and that he thinks of him and his Russian friends. He may realize that Stalin has been reading the "Chorus on Germany" in the Balkans and the Russian Ukraine. Even his dumb mind may have figured it out that with France and England safely out of the way, Russia will be here.

It may be that he is improving his position with the long view all along. That Lenin's Pleasance is a poor man, 21/2 years old, and that he is a good boy.

LEWD SAID

From the "Christian Science Monitor": "We will feel all the more secure, we will feel said Leroy, drawing his sword across his chest, "that we will be in a warm, lithe, bushy forest. You will feel it is not much grim and fierce after so much blundering."

And, it will become the true, "I am a good boy, you think. You will no longer be the slave of rules, you will be in your movement without your knowing."

So, we have to wait. He is showing the signs of teeth, rather than want to talk. And, right away, he wants to talk again, pointing to himself, "I am a good boy, I am a good boy."

The Democratic Nominee

With the Republican national convention safely out of the way, with the election of a candidate selected to lead the party's campaign for the presidential election in November, public interest centers on the Democratic convention which will be held in Chicago about the middle of this month.

There isn't the slightest doubt that President Roosevelt can have the nomination for a third term if he wants it or not. He can have it whether he wants it or not, if he will only say so. All "Sino-Roosevelt" movements within the party have collapsed pathetically. "And enough delegates to the convention are already pledged in his behalf to nominate him on the first ballot."

There is, however, some question as to whether Mr. Roosevelt will accept the nomination. If he has any inclination of doing so, we believe he would have indicated his intention long before this. If he is going to run again, there is an apparent reason why he should not say so. On the other hand, if he does not intend to accept the nomination, there is every reason why he should remain reticent on the subject.

Not the least of these reasons is that by remaining in the race himself, so to speak, he can more easily pick his successor. While it is a generally admitted fact that Mr. Roosevelt can have the nomination, it is by no means simple a task for him to name his successor. That is why, while many of the newspapers have been predicting that he has managed to secure a convention which he can control.

Paul Mallon suggests that Roosevelt's choice for the presidency in Mayor LaGuardia of New York. Since the Republicans went into the Democratic ranks to find a Republican nominee, it is logical to assume that he will be no means illogical that Roosevelt should select a Republican like Mayor LaGuardia who is a New Dealer from start to finish.

Others think that Secretary Hull is more likely to be the choice. Secretary Hull has all odds the biggest man in the administration, and in the Democratic ranks. He has handled Roosevelt's foreign policies for the past seven years and is known to be in strict accord with the President's views on our international relations. There is no one in either party better qualified to continue the Administration's foreign policies, now far and away more important than domestic issues, than Secretary Hull.

DISPELLING THE FOG

By CHARLES MICHELSON
Director Of Publicity, Democratic National Committee

If there is anything on which the American people are united it is on the necessity of our preparing adequately to resist and repel aggression.

Where there still exists some uncertainty is on the question of what we should do about Europe.

It is not enough to appropriate vast sums of money to build up our military strength.

For instance, our military strength is not enough to repel aggression.
