At least 150 persons from the Miami and South Florida area spent last night in the new cafeteria of Lyman High School in Longwood. The Seminole County School Board had opened Oviedo and Lyman High Schools to persons fleeing the hurricane in South Florida.

More than 50,000 students rode or walked onto school campuses across Seminole County this morning, the first day of classes for the majority of the school system.

Transportation officials report that more students than expected were waiting for school buses at some but not all stops in Sanford and Lake Mary. Courtesy busing virtually has been eliminated.

"We had one or two buses that would have been overloaded," Jerry Yontz, an area supervisor with the transportation department. "But we had other buses two blocks away and we were able to take care of those."

Yontz said that, overall, the transportation was "fan-tastic."

SANFORD - Enrollment did not increase much over last year. though that did not surprise officials at Seminole Community College, who were glad that the numbers did not drop. "We had about 6,900 students start the year this morning," said Joe Roof, dean of admissions at SCC. "We'll probably pick up another two or three hundred during late registration this week."

Roof said those numbers are almost identical to last year's enrollment figures.

Things went smoothly for the start of classes at SCC this morning, according to Dr. Jim Bawyer, the college's vice president for student ema to be OK. Sawyer said the school anticipated the stabilization of enrollment figures for a number of reasons.

The increase in tuition by about 10 percent to $33 per credit hour has probably discouraged some students from enrolling this nemester, Sawyer said. In addition. he said, the greatest growth in enrollment over the last few years has been with non-traditional students.

'With the economy the way it is." he said. "those non-traditional students (those over 21 years old) are less likely to have disposable income to spend on things like education."

The college, Sawyer said, was "not surprised" by the plateau in enrollment numbers.

Some call schools forgotten

From Staff, Wire Reports

It could be called the forgotten segment of Florida's education system - the 28 community colleges which serve nearly a million students.

"The universities with their glamorous research and football teams get all the press, and the community college is the system that educates the masses," said David Armstrong, assistant ex-ecutive director of the state board of community colleges.

But in Senford, administrators at Seminole Community College, the only post-high school educa-tional facility in noith Seminole County, say the 27-year-old college is holding its own.

MIAMI BEACH - Miami Beach's large elderly population was geared up for Hurricane Andrew and — aside from a few die-hards — most fled the island Sunday for safer ground, the island city's mayor said.

HOUSTON - Florida Republicans left their national convention with about the same outlook they arrived with their state is President Bush's to lose, but there's nothing automatic about it.

Many do feel they at least finally have momentum after months of Democratic domination of this year's campaign.

TALLAHASSEE - State auditors say thousands of people are improperly receiving millions of dollars in food stamps due to fraud and errors.

Baker's mission

President Bush's choice of Secretary of State James Baker to take charge of his sputtering re-election bid should bolster the morale of the Republican Party. Even before Baker, a master political strategist, assumed his chief-of-staff duties Aug. 23, he was adding some badly needed direction and discipline to the president's campaign.

Baker is putting together a campaign team whose primary mission is to articulate to Americans why Bush deserves a second term and what he intends to accomplish if given that opportunity. The Challenge for Baker is to get the message across in a hurry. That's Important because Bush, who has been falling farther behind in the polls, doesn't have any time to spare.

in addition to directing the campaign. Baker will help define and implement a comprehensive domestic agenda for the second term. High on his priority list should be a plan put forth by Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp and several conservative GOP lawmakers.

They are calling for the president to spell out an economic game plan that is understandable to the average voter. Specifically, this would include an across-the-board reduction in marginal tax rates, which have doubled during the last three decades, and an increase in the personal exemption for dependents, which has failed to keep pace with inflation. Above all, the president must make a compelling case that he understands the concerns of average Americans who are facing uncertain economic times and that he has a plan to overcome the nation's problems.

Baker has worked with Bush in every campaign he has waged, dating back to the mid-1960s. He is a tough taskmaster who well understands what needs to be done to overcome a 26-point deficit in the polls. All that remains is for the president to focus on the mission he set for himself four years ago in New Orleans. And then listen very carefully to his co-pilot.

Baker's success

James Baker has been a good secretary of state. During his tenure, U.S. policy has advanced in every corner of the globe, from Central America to Central Asia, from Eastern Europe to the Middle East. He will be missed at the State Department.

Bill Clinton had a nice line in a recent speech in Los Angeles: "The notion that the Republicans won the Cold War reminds me of said.

But a lot of things that could have gone wrong for the rooster these past four years didn't, and that is the guts of diplomacy.

"To govern is to choose," said Napoleon. and Baker made the right choices — and continues to make them as the drama in the former Yugoslav nation unfolds. It is not certain other roosters would have.

The distinguishing feature of Bush administration foreign policy for four years has been the assertion of U.S. diplomatic primacy without abandoning a collective, collaborative approach. For example, the administration saw the importance of expelling Iraq from Kuwait, but understood that the U.S. role was to lead a coalition, not go to war alone. The same approach is being followed in what was once Yugoslavia. The mistake of Vietnam has not been repeated.

in Central America and the Middle East, two hotbeds of conflict four years ago, Baker's diplomacy got the adversaries talking. In Nicaragua, now a democracy, the task was to lower the U.S. profile and let the Central Americans take over, it worked. In the Middle East, the task required a higher U.S. profile, and a combination of carrot and stick. It

Baker's critics say he is too pragmatic, too willing to deal with bad characters, like communists in Beijing and tyrants in Baghdad. It's true that others at the State Department have taken a more moralistic. neo-Wilsonian approach to diplomacy. Rarely have they been as successful. The past four years have been as eventful as any in history. Communism collapsed, the Cold War ended, democracy spread, the nuclear threat receded and aggression was defeated. The job, as the former Yugoslavia reminds us, is not done. The rooster can't take all the credit, but let's not begrudge him a little crowing.

Secular zealots undermine ACLU

Extremism in protecting the separation of church and state is no vice to some members of the American Civil Liberties Union. For instance, some years ago, a local chapter of the ACLU in the state of Washington threatened a public school district with "drastic action" if it did not immediately stop tearing down the wall between church and state.

A high school in the district was about to put on a production of the rock opera "Jesus Christ Superstar." That work, thundered the ACLU, "is religious in nature," and mounting it at a public school "tends to place the imprimatur of the state on a particular religious statement."

I told fra Classer, executive director of the national ACLU, that by this criterion, Verdi's 'Requiem' and Duke Ellington's "Concert of Sacred Music" might also soon be put on the subversives list by his watchdogs in that state. Glasser told them to cool it.

Now, however, an official of another local ACLU chapter in the same state has built that wall of separation higher than even Thomas Jefferson could have imagined.

The Concert Choir and the Madrigal Singers of Washington State University were to have sung at a premiere of "Missa l'homme arme" by faculty member Charles Argersinger, whose around the country.

The event was to have taken place during a Sunday worship service at the Community Congregational United Church of Christ because the work, a mass, was specifically designed for performance in a church. But, as Mark Driscoll pointed out in the WSU college paper. The Evergreen:

"Attendance at the event (by the student singers) was com-pletely voluntary and participation would have had no bearing on anyone's grade.

The performance was to be done on personal student time, not on student class time. ... No one would have been forced to pray, take warned that the university might "expose" itself - to a lawsuit - by permitting its students to perform as part of a worship service in a church. The administration caved in and canceled the performance — much to the astonishment and anger of the composer and the student singers.

Before the premiere was to take place, an anonymous monitor of secular correctness — identifying himself only as being with a local ACLU — called the school's administration. He Argersinger's mass was later performed by the same cast at the Emmanuel Presbyterian Church in Spokane, but the university did not object because it was billed as a concert asked the Washington state affiliate of the ACLU about the zealouaness of its local chapter in this matter. The state office carefully declined any comment.

But in the college paper, Mark Driscoll wrote. "What a frightening precedent this case has set. ... All this, hidden behind the guise of freedom."

Since the Washington state affiliate has decided not to say snything about its local chapter's extremism, it would be helpful if the national ACLU would tell Professor Peterson that making the ACLU look silly is not the most effective way to recruit college students.

HODDING CARTER

Social safety net misses many

The speechwriters have had their day and those modern-day spear carriers, the convention delegates, have gone home from Houston. as a month ago they went home from New York City. From here on, it's sound-bite city, with eloquence at a discount and repetitive themes the currency of the political process.

That being the case, here's a theme either campaign is welcome to use free of charge. It can be encapsulated in a simple slogan: "Loyalty up, loyalty down." Whoever seizes it early, develops it fully and convinces the voters that he is sincere will be a sure winner.

People of my generation may object that they have heard it before. If you served in the armed forces, and millions of adult males did between 1941 and the early 1970s, you couldn't avoid it. For several decades after World War II, two-way responsibilities were understood to be the basic cement of the social contract, in civilian as well as military life.

But what may sound like old stuff to some of us might as well be written in Sanskrit for all that it means to millions of younger Americans. What they have seen or experienced could better be summarised by a different slogan: "You give your all, we give you the shaft." The economic system that is emerging in the competitive world markets of the 1990s places a high premium on lean and mean management practices. That means that job security is an tify proposition. It means that old guarantees, like pension programs, are not worth the paper on which they are written.

The morning headlines and evening news drive home the point repeatedly. Major corporations slice their payrols by tens of thousands of employees, then slice again. Whole companics are swallowed up by raiders, diamem-bered, their assets sold off and their husks tossed onto the economic garbage heap. Retired mineworkers are told their benefits will be cut, or in some cases eliminated, because of "changed circumstances," and only de-termined union resistance staves off the calamity. There is much talk of redefining the way Social Security works for current beneficiaries as well as oncoming ones. Even the postal service, that bureaucratic bastion of job security, is suddenly loid that some 40,000 middle-management slots will be pared away. Perhaps most, if not all of this, is absolutely inevitable. Proponents of the new order make a permandant cost with the company of the proponents.

persuasive case, which goes something like this:

The heady days of unchallenged U.S. economic supremacy allowed wage and benefit practices that are unaffordable luxuries in the dog-eat-dog world of the 1990s. Only extreme measures can avert a long slide into secondclass status. Inefficiencies that could be tolerated when American supremacy was unchallenged are potentially fatal when every industrial sector is under foreign siege. Fat. dumb and happy, we were collectively headed for the slaughter pen. Wholesale disaster can be averted only by selective bloodletting.

That's a long way from the heady days of the late 1940s, when Congress passed a full employment act, which established as a matter of national policy that everyone who wanted a job should have one. Today, the "acceptable" unemployment rate is around 5.5 percent. Up to 6.5 per-cent in tolerable. Only when it goes above 7 percent do the political warning bella go off, and even then the premise is phony, since the real unemployment rate is about 5 percent higher than the official one. That's because millions of people have simply stopped trying and have joined the ranks of the "discouraged" workers, a neat bit of phraseology which obscures the fact that they are "discouraged" because they can't find work.

People of my generation may object that they have heard It before.

Mind you, no one except a Marxist ever believed that full employment was either possible or desirable. Nor were private sector pensions available to that majority of the workforce not employed by large corporations. For every steelworker, autoworker, miner or white-collar manager, there were three or four farmworkers, gas station operators, dime store cierks and short order cooks who had no fringe benefits, no job security and no real hope of ever having either.

But the system held out the prospect and the promise of both. The official myth was that if you stayed with the company, worked hard and played by the rules, you could expect steady employment and a secure old age. That was the way it was supposed to work.

Now it doesn't and won't. All of us know at least someone who has lost a job recently or seen a health program slashed drastically. Only the very rich feel invulnerable to overnight unemployment. We are repeatedly warned there is more to come - that there must be more to come -- for the good of the economy.

Perhaps, but only if government fills the void. Human beings are not machine parts, to be tossed out when no longer needed. Commitments made and accepted in good faith should be honored.

Pork barrel knows no party lines

WASHINGTON - Forget the hot rhetoric in Houston last week that bailed and bashed Congress for failing to balance the budget. When it comes to carving up the budgetary pork, both Republicans and Democrats respond to the dinner bell.

President Bush, for example, attacks Congress for wasteful and irresponsible spending practices, but Bush is wisely gun-shy when it comes to taking on Capitol Hill's chief purveyor of pork, Sen. Robert Byrd. D-W.Va.

Earlier this year, Bush threatened to eliminate 68 proposed projects in Congress's budget — including a $200,000 Vidalia onion project and $50,000 for a grape entomologiat. Bush vowed to go to the brink with Byrd. but he beat a hasty retreat after Byrd targeted Executive branch perks and Republican backed pork.

In his new book "Adventures in Porkland: How Washington Wastes Your Money and Why They Won't Stop" (Villard) government ever bought. Brian Kelly relates how even the president's budget director, Richard Darman, is deferential to Byrd. One telling example came in 1989, when the White House was trying to pass a supplemental budget to aid the

That was the Nicaraguan contras. During negotiations. Byrd mentioned to Darman that a government telescope in West Virginia had blown down in a windstorm. The normally stingy Darman awiftly inserted a $75 million provision to replace the damaged instrument. Kelly reports that Darman later told friends, "That was the cheapest $75 million telescope the federal government ever bought." Taxpayers might beg to differ.

Pork has been described as spending with a "Zip code attached." More succinctly, Kelly describes pork as the money of everyone being spent for the pleasure of a few to satisfy the re-election just of one. Kelly figures that taxpayers would be 697 billion richer if all the special interest, constituent-driven projects were sliced from this year's budget.

Though defining pork is not an exact science — one person's pork is another person's prime cut — if Kelly's estimate is used as a ball park figure, the possibilities for putting this money to good use are arresting.

With $97 billion, the U.S. Food for Peace could be funded for approximately 81 years - the Drug Enforcement Administration for 157 years. Federal prenatal-care programs would be covered for about 430 years. At a time when infrastructure is crumbling across the country. 997 billion could build 30,000 miles of Interstate Highway. It's also four times the amount it cost for the Apollo program, which put a man on the moon.

Instead, Congress has chosen to fund a rasher of programs that are more comical than beneficial. As Kelly points out, members of Congress "make it their business to spend the taxpayers' money." Millions of dollars are wasted each year on mundane things like studies of the sexual habits of Japanese quail and how long it takes to cook breakfast eggs. Other pressing national priorities include a $7 million grant to study jet lag, and $500,000 to build a 10-story replica of the Pyramid of Cheopa and an 800-foot model of the Great Wall of China in Bedford, Ind.

Taxpayers have indirectly employed scientists to answer pressing questions like: Why do people fall in love? What causes rudeness? Why do people cheat and lie on tennis courts? What's the likelihood of Belgian endive growing in Massachusetts? Are there better ways to can mackerel?

in the words of former House leader Tony Coelho, "pork is politics."

Sawyer said that despite the 10 percent increase in student fees mandated by the state government, the students have lost little in terms of classes or services and they are still getting "a good value."

Armstrong added, "The majority of their students came out of our system and moved on into their system. "Contrary to what a lot of people think, our doors are not wide open to the point where you can walk in without any qualifications at all. You do have to have a high school degree.

Sawyer noted that though there are almost the same number of students at the college as there were last year, the students seem to be taking lighter class loads. That, he said, was in response to the higher per-credit costs.

Sawyer noted that the vocational classes have remained full. Students looking to change careers or to upgrade their educational level within their current careers, are taking classes in those areas, because the course of study can be completed in less time than an associates degree would require.

She has taught children from toddiers up to pre-teen and "loves" all of them. Salety tipe for children ment wants you to teach your child or children basic safety tipe. Following are 10 valuable tipe: 1. Teach your child your telephone number, area code, your full address, and how to use the telephone to call home, a law enforcement officer, or dial 911 in an emergency.

2. Keep an up-to-date file on your child. Include a recent photograph and physical deacription. Update the informa-tion regularly. Younger children should be updated several times a year.

3. Make a mental note of the clothes your child wears EVERYDAY. Avoid putting your child's name on the outside of clothes or books. Children may respond more readily to a dangerous person who calls them by name.

4. Be sure your child knows what to do in case you become separated while shopping. Your child should not look for you. but go immediately to the nearest clerk or security guard and ask for assistance.

5. Choose a secret code word to use in case of an emergency. Your child should never go with anyone who does not know the code word. Change the code word every so often.

6. Have a set of your child's footprints or fingerprints taken by local law enforcement or qualified professionals, and be able to locate dental records if necessary.

7. Instruct your child's school to notify you immediately if your child is absent. Inform the principal of those who are authorized to pick your child up from school. Try to have the same person pick up your child every

8. Alert your child to the many tactics used by possible abductors to lure children away with them. Advise them how to respond in these situations. It is best to ignore these dangerous people.

9. Check your child's route to and from school. Call attention to any dangerous spots, such as vacant lots, alleyways, etc. Advise them what to do if a strange person follows or approaches them.

10. Encourage neighbors to participate in a "safe home" program. Establish safe homes where children can go for help in your neighborhood.

A 'Classic' success

Beacome, Higginbotham win Mr., Ms. Seminole titles

From Staff Reports

LAKE MARY — It was standing room only Saturday night at Lake Mary High School as Central Florida's best bodybuilders flexed their muscles for charity.

Several hundred people packed the Lake Mary High School Auditorium to see Rick Beacome and Joan Higginbotham outpose a field of 45 competitors to win the crown of Mr. and Ms. Seminole 1992 at the sixth annual Seminole Classic bodybuilding championships.

In the process, the evenig helped raise money for the AIDS Foundation.

Every year, the proceeds from this event go to benefit a charity," said Tom Robare, who organizes the event along with Matt Arena. "Last year, the money went to the Pinklon Thomas Youth Foundation for disadvantaged children. This year, it will go for AIDS research. We've always had a lot of support from the community and this year was no different."

The event also raised more money for the AIDS Foundation by having the 1992 Florida Women's Heavyweight Champion, Rozann Keiser, make an appearance at the Classic and sell autographed pictures.

In addition to raising money for charity, the Classic also has a central theme directed at the youth of Seminole County. This year, the theme was "Just say no to drugs."

Robare was not only pleased with the turnout of speciators, he was also impressed with the number of competitors.

"That (45) is about the average number of entrants for us." said Robare. "But it is still better than the average for competitions throughout the state." Robert and Arena, a former Mr. Southeastern

Most Muscular winner, were also able to attract Orlando's Deke Warner as the guest poser.
"He (Warner) finished fourth in the Mr. USA competition," said Robers. "The Men's National Championships are going to be held in Orlando

Sampras serves by Courier

By BETH MARRIS AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS - Pete Sampras is sizzling on cement a week before the U.S. Open begins. He broke former Sanford resident Jim Courier once in each set for a 6.4, 6.4 victory in the U.S. Hardcourts on Sunday, winning his third straight title.

"This is the time of year where I really start playing well on hardcourt, which is my favorite surface," said Sampras, the second seed who earned $144,000 for the Courier couldn't handle Sampras' trademark serve that consistently hit the court at nearly 120 mph.

"I really served well against him. I mixed up my serves and he really couldn't get any rhythm," Sampras Sampras twice came from behind to gain the match's only service breaks. Tied 2-2 in the first set and trailing 30-love, Sampras got back to 30-all with a backband voiley winner and a forehand that passed Courier at the net.

Courier's forehand sailed wide and Sampras ripped a forehand cross-court winner deep from the backcourt for the break and a 3-2 lead.

"He's usually serving big, but if he's hitting the ball well from the baseline he's very tough." said Courier, now 1-5 lifetime against his 21-year-old rival.

Courier led 3-2 in the second set before Sampras won three straight games for a commanding 5-3 lead.

Courier had two game points serving at 3-3, but committed errors that allowed Sampras back in at

"Even when I did come up with good returns, he was coming up with better volleys," mid Courier, who won $75,905 as runner-up.

He doublefaulted and Sampras smacked a backhand volley into the open court for the second break. Dies Hardsourts, Page 2B

Retirement of a hero a sign of advancing age

Today, I'm S1 years, nine months and 24 days old. And I feel old. Last week, Larry Bird retired.

For the first time in my life, I've watched one of my personal heros come and go, from college player to superstar to the end of the road. I remember Red Auerbach taking him as a junior in the 1978 draft.

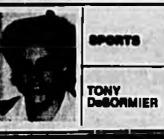

even though Bird (eligible for the draft under a since rescinded rule) said he was returning to Indiana State for his senior year In the spring of 1979, I remember watching Bird lead Indiana State against Magic Johnson and

Michigan State in the NCAA cham-pionship game. The championships, the great plays, the three-point shooting clinics he gave at the All-Star game. Now he's gone.

Certainly, I've seen some of the all-time greats end their careers — Wilt Chamberlain and John Havilcek, Hank Aaron and Tom Beaver, Bobby Orr and Bobby Hull, Roger Staubach and Dick Butkus. And there have been other players who have gone from rookle to retiree in my lifespan — Jim Rice and Fred Lynn. Magic Johnson.

Leroy Selmon and Walter Payton. Somehow, Bird is/was special, at least in my life as a sports fart.

Why is he special? I don't know. really. I grew up a Celtics fan and rooted for all who wore the green and white. And while Bird carried Boston's banner. I had always been drawn to such over-achievers as Paul Silas, M.L. Carr and Danny

But they came and went as somebody a little younger, a little quicker would show up to take their lace. Bird, however, was a constant. Or at least he was until his bad back took its toli the last couple of

And as time passed and I developed a better appreciation of the game and just what it was that Bird did on the court and why it was so special, so unique, I began watching Bird less as a fan and more as a student of the game.

While I was thrilled that he played for the Celtics, Bird's appeal tran-scended team loyalty for true basketball fans, just as Johnson did. You may hate the teams they play for, but what they could do with a basketball demanded appreciation and respect from fans of the sport. The two were originals. Nobody played the game like them before and there's hardly anyone who approaches that level of constant excellence today. After Michael Jordan, you really have to stretch for another name.

Johnson's surprise retirement last year didn't have the same impact because the passing of that brilliant career was overshadowed by the life-threatening aspect of the reason for his leaving. And even though he was determined to be HIV positive. Johnson's skills hadn't deteriorated

I've talked to others, who liken Johnson's retirement to that of Bandy Koufax, who retired in 1966 after a season where he went 27-9 with a 1.73 carned run average and 317 strikeouts, winning his fourth Cy Young Award.

While Johnson and Koufax, like Bird, ultimately retired for medical ressons, Johnson and Koulax chose to retire well before they had to, performance-wise, Bird's back, however, had delice. wever, had gotten to the point where it no longer allowed Bird to do the things he wanted to on the court the way he wanted to do them. It was painful to watch.

Could he have played another year or two? There have been several stories and columns that have suggested that perhaps Bird waited a year too long. Maybe that's what hurts so much. It's one thing for an athlete to pick his time to take his final bow. There's no sense of regret in those cases. Keeping with our examples of Johnson and Koufax, they had already accomplished everything they could when they retired. Anything else would have been redun-

The frustration of Bird's curtain call is a different matter. Someone we thought of as physically indomitable had to surrender to physical infirmity. What does that mean for the rest of us?

The Seminole County expressway, linking eastern Orange County with Sanford, is well under construction. It's not scheduled to open until 1993 we'll give you a bird's eye peck at the current state of construction. With a map and aerial photos, we'll show you the route, including the on-and-off ramps, bridges and toll stations all in a full-page pull-out that could double as a poster for future reference.

Proper watering tricky business tricky business. Most of us either water too much or too little and since the symptoms are the same in both cases, it can seem confusing. But if we understand what is happening to plants that are overwatered or un-derwatered, we can begin to see things from the plants' point of

When we underwater our lawns or other plants it is usually done with the best intentions. Most people think that a daily light sprinkling is the proper way to give our plants the best possible care. When, in fact, It is almost uscless to lightly sprinkle plants everyday. These light, frequent waterings are only able to wet the soil to a depth of approximately one inch and are not able to get water where it is needed - the roots. Plants need water in the root zone to be absorbed by the plant and most plant roots are much deeper than one inch. Plants will fare much better if given a weekly soaking. When watering, allow the soil to become wet to a depth of several inches. A soil that has been wet to a depth of six to eight inches will retain moisture for several days where as a soil wet to a depth of only one inch will usually dry out within a day. So, to keep plants at their best, give them a thorough watering at least once a week during dry weather. Though it may sound strange to some, many of us do overwater our plants at times and in essence drown them. As mentioned before, the symptoms for overwatering are the same as

ing. The leaves begin to turn brown at the tips and edges, then turn brown all over and drop from the plant. These symptoms should be the same for both cases, since they result from the same cause - too little water in the plant tisaue.

How could constant overwatering of a plant possibly result in too little water in the plant? The answer is that too much water in the soil causes death of the root system as a result of an oxygen deficiency. The plants' root system needs oxygen to live and when the soil stays soggy all the time, very little oxygen is present in the soil. When this condition exists. the roots die. Dead roots do not absorb water, even if there is an abundant supply present in the not). When the roots are no longer able to absorb water the leaves begin to show signs of a lack of water. Often these symptoms are considered a sign of too little water and more is applied, only to compound the problem. And more often than not, the plant dies quickly.

To avoid these problems give your plants a thorough soaking at each watering and allow the soil to become slightly dry between waterings. The heavy rains that I have had in my gardens the past few days do not leave much choice in the matter, but if they have passed you by, remember to keep these principles in mind when you water.

REMINDER — If you plan on having a fall vegetable garden. be sure to attend the "Fall Vegetable Garden" program on Thursday night, Sept. 3, here at the Agriculture Center at 7 p.m.

All Seminole County programs are open to the public regardless of sex, race, age, color or origin.

Is dyspnea linked to a hiatal hernia?

histal hernis as well as a heart problem. I get out of breath just bending over or during minimal exercise. My doctor has no good answer for this since, unfortunately, the extreme dyspnea doesn't occur when I am sitting the respiratory tree without in-

in his office.

DEAR READER: Your breathlesanesa (dyspnes) could be due either to your heart condition or to your histal hernis. You should return to your doctor to discover the cause of your symptoms. In my opinion, you need a chest X-ray and a stress test, n cardiogram taken while you exercise

If your dyspnea is caused by the heart problem, you'll flunk your stress test. If you pass, the doctor will have to search for another cause, such as a lung condition. Hiatal hernia can occasionally cause breathlessness if the stomach becomes overfilled with air and presees upward on the disphragm, inhib-iting respiration. This often can be helped by using anti-gas compounds, which are available without prescription.

DEAR DR. GOTT: After experiencing shortness of breath and periods of almost blacking out when going up stairs, my doctor ordered breathing tests that diagnosed restrictive lung disease. Is this serious and what has caused my problem?

DEAR READER: Restrictive

lung disease means loss of the lung's elasticity, which inhibits the ability to breathe in enough oxygen. The condition is a common consequence of lung scarring, which occurs in chronic infections and a disease known as interstitial fibrosis.

These patients are shortwinded and intolerant of exercise. When performing acts such as stair-climbing, they may feel faint because their lungs cannot supply enough oxygen for the increased activity.

The diagnosis is established by pulmonary function tests show ing reduced lung volume and shallow breathing at rest.

Using these tests, restrictive tung disease can be easily dif-ferentiated from obstructive disease (emphysems), which is characterized by blockages in trinsic restriction of lung motion. The two diseases cause identical symptoms.

30 Uteh ski

Once, when playing in a tournament in London and sitting North. I bid seven diamonds after a competitive auction in which our opponents had preempted us out of Blackwood. East sacrificed in seven hearts, whereupon West took the diamond ace from his hand, licked the back of the card and stuck it to bis forchead. My partner, the kibitzers, West and I started laughing. East, properly keeping his eyes on his cards. wondered why.

If a card is exposed during the auction, it becomes a penalty card, usually to be played at the first legal opportunity. There are some other pos-sib-il-ities, but they don't arise in today's deal. also features the diamond ace.

West's bid of four no-trump was wild with 4-8 distribution in acc.

the black suits. And when South bid seven diamonds, East couldn't wait for his turn. He doubled and immediately led the diamond ace.

South, realizing that seven diamonds was doomed, retreated to seven no-trump. Luckily for declarer, West didn't have a diamond to lead. He selected the spade five. Expecting West to be 5.7 in the black suits, declarer tried to restrict his losses. He finessed dummy's spade jack at trick one; then. with the aid of three finesees, he took four heart tricks. Next, South played a club to dummy's king and cashed dummy's A-K of spades. Finally he led a club to his see, preparing to concede four down, when something je nappened. Esst, being out of clubs, was forced to discard the exposed diamond

You might get involved in a sideline endeavor with two friends in the year ahead. In time, the three of you may realize there is a market for your wares which could become a second source of earnings.

VIROO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) If you share your time with friends you have strong emotional bonds with, today will prove enjoyable for you.
