If Schools Open, Integration Ordered

The U. S. Supreme Court, as expected, has struck down the Arkansas plan for transfer of public schools to a private corporation and their subsequent reopening as segregated,

In effect, the Supreme Court has told the South that it must have integration if it has schools. The only schools excluded are those which are privately-endowed, which do not receive one cent of support from public funds.

Even these schools aren't "home free" if a Pennsylvania ruling is overturned. In Pennsylvania the NAACP has attacked the constitutionality of a trust fund established years ago to educate "poor white hoys" in a private school. In the lower court, the NAACP lost. But an appeal has been

In its Monday opinion, the Supreme Court said that state legislatures may not, directly or indirectly, prevent the carrying out of the 1954 school desegregation decision. A Crust of Appeals ruling on the same day halted a transfer of Little Rock high schools to the private corporation.

By order of the U. S. yesterday, Little Rock high schools remained closed. Gov. Orval Faubus said yesterday afternoon that he was "investigating other possibilities" which might lead to reopening of the schools on a segregated basis.

He did not elaborate. Little Rock voters last Saturday overwhelmingly approved segregated schools. Faced with the decision to integrate or permanently close the schools, it is impossible to predict what Little Rock will do next. Gov. Faubus has said he "hasn't surrendered, isn't surrendering and am not going to surrender.

There is a possibility that the U. S. government might order the schools reopened, but this appears unlikely. Based on its decisions to date, the court has said the schools, if they exist, must be integrated. It isn't probable that the court would tell Arkansas that it must provide schools for

The next move is up to Arkansas. When that move is made, many people will be unhappy. There appears to be no happy solution to this problem which began more than 100 years ago and will be a problem 100 years in the future.

That's only part of the story Dr. Brackett sald. The growing tendency among farmers to add antiblotics to poultry and livestock rations is giving farm animals an even greater advantage over humans in the matter of healthy eating.

'One of the major reasons behand this trend," he declared, "is that apparently there is no such thing as a completely healthy farm animal. Even those which look healthy have invisible discase. bacteria within their systems, and unless these are killed or controlled, the animals waste feed, grow more slowly and are not as healthy as nature intended. The solution in the case of farm animais is to add small amounts of an antibiotic such as Aureninycin chlorietraycline to feed rations. This is effective against a great many of these invisible germs and leads to a higher level of health in adimais."

The slory doesn't end there, the expert said. The scientific appreach to feeding farm animals is affecting the food we sat. "The use of improved animal rations containing the proper amounts of minerals, proteins, carbohydrates and other tigredients," he arided, "la helping the grower produce better meat, eggs and other products. Thus, we humans are actually eating better todey even though our meals are not as properly balanced or as carefully planned as those prepared for farm animals."
