A Streetcar Named The Friendly City

Mass Transit Dream Has Nostalgic Look

By Susan Loden
Herald Staff Writer

If a Sanford man is on the right track with his dream, Sanford residents may one day travel through town on an old-fashioned trolley, snickering at Orlando which so far has bombed in its quest for a light rail system.

Robert Mann, 31, a postal service letter carrier and railroad historian, says he has a plan that will bring the trolley back to the rails that already network Sanford, making it an ideal starting point for a commuter train service.

It's a system that, after about a decade of serving downtown as a tourist attraction and then branching out within the city as a serious form of alternate transportation, might be tied into tracks that lead to Orlando International Airport.

Why does this 31-year-old train buff believe a trolley system may be in Sanford's future, when so far big sister Orlando has been unable to come up with the megabucks needed to develop modern mass rail transit?

Mann said he's thinking small, he's thinking old and nostalgic, and he's thinking about things getting off to a slow start, with the key being the tracks already in place.

Trolleys to some may seem relics of the past that would not blend with existing transportation systems. Not so, says Mann. In fact, the 20 or so cities that maintained trolley service after its decline during the Depression, have better traffic conditions today than those that junked the historic old cars, he said.

And contrary to the popular image of the dinky little trolley bumping along city streets, Mann said trolleys can be sleek machines with rides as smooth as glass.

"They don't bump along and they're far larger than the average city bus," he said. "The street car is the most flexible of all mass transit systems and it's compatible with existing traffic."

"Under the skin of the trolley is the same technology of the high-speed trains of France and Japan," he said.

Although they could rip along comfortably at freeway speeds, Mann said they obviously wouldn't be driven at that pace through town, but it wouldn't be the slow, torturing ride some might envision.

Space War ASAT Weapon Hits The Mark

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Air Force plans to follow up its successful first test shot of an anti-satellite weapon against a target in space with additional similar experiments in the coming months, the Pentagon says. An Air Force F-15 fighter launched the non-explosive warhead aboard the foot-long ASAT, which collided with a 6-year-old U.S. satellite named Solwind, destroying it in an "absolutely flawless" test Friday, the Pentagon said. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger hailed the successful test as "a great step forward" in developing an effective weapon to counter the Soviet Union, his spokesman said.

Radio Moscow said today the ASAT test is a "dangerous step" and proves that Washington considers the militarization of space a major policy goal.

"In this way, Washington, in defiance of widespread protests of the world public, took a dangerous step directly leading to the development of a new class of weaponry, strike space weapons," the radio report said.

"By testing its ASAT system, Washington indicated that it regards the escalation of the arms build up and the spread to outer space as a major goal of America's policy," it said.

The ASAT and the satellite collided at 4:42 p.m. EDT, said Lt. Gen. Bernard Randolph, the Air Force deputy research chief. There was no explosion.

"The satellite was, in fact, destroyed," he said. "The destruction was confirmed by telemetry. It successfully hit the target. From everything we can tell, it went absolutely flawless."

Randolph said another test will be held "in the next few months." Pentagon documents have said the ASAT is to go into operation by fiscal year 1987.

Launch of the ASAT came despite a threat by the Soviet Union to end its two-year moratorium against testing in space and to test and deploy its own satellite killer, a warhead

House Panel Examines Farm Credit Crunch

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The ink had barely dried on a farm bill passed by the House Agriculture Committee this week when one subcommittee began examining the farm credit crisis that could ultimately result in a federal bailout.

"The first necessary step must be passage of a general farm bill that goes as far as possible toward protecting farm income against further blows, and we are already well along in that process," said committee Chairman Kika de la Garza, D-Texas.

On the farm credit problem, he said, "I will say that I believe the Farm Credit System is so important to American agriculture that Congress will not want to stand by and watch it or large segments of it collapse."

The full House Agriculture Committee, after months of haggling, Wednesday sent to the full House a measure that would extend commodity price supports for the next five years.

Then the conservation, credit and rural development subcommittee began hearings to consider federal relief for the

Sales Rebound, But Factory Output Weak

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In one of the first signs that the economy may be speeding up again, retail sales jumped 1.9 percent in August to a record high, helped by extraordinarily strong auto sales, the Census Bureau reported Friday.

At the same time, however, U.S. industrial production grew just 0.3 percent in August, part of an anemic 1 percent increase over the past year, despite a late-summer surge in auto output, the Federal Reserve said.

The clearance-sale financing rates being offered by auto companies until the middle of next month boosted auto sales 7.1 percent, the best performance in that category since April's matching increase.

Total sales for August were $116.1 billion, the highest on record, with nearly one-quarter of the dollars spent on autos, at $27.6 billion — also a record high. The total was even higher without seasonal adjustment.

Panel Picked To Educate Public On Pending School Bond Proposal

By Jim Searle
Herald Staff Writer

The Seminole County School Board district steering committee took a step toward preparing for its $100 million school bond issue Friday by electing three officers to "educate the public" before the issue is voted on Oct. 22.

The bond issue, according to Carey E. Ferrell, assistant superintendent for business and finance for the board, said the money is "desperately needed to keep pace with county growth." Ferrell said the tax rate increase to support the bond issue will have a "minimal impact" for the first four years, estimated at $1.50 per $1,000 assessed valuation, after which it would drop to roughly $1 per $1,000 assessed valuation. However, since the levy for the first four years would be in lieu of the authorized $1.50 per $1,000 assessed valuation the school district can levy for capital outlay, if the bond issue is approved, Ferrell said that would be eliminated, making the $1.50 added to the tax rate for the bond issue no more than what would have been assessed for capital improvements.

The newly appointed officers are Chairman Larry Strickler, Vice-chairman Jeanne Morris and Treasurer Wayne Keeling. Their assignment for the next six weeks, according to Mrs. Morris, will be to educate voters about the need for the bond issue and where the monies will go with passage. The 30-member committee will operate on a $12,000 budget with that money to go for such things as advertising in the media, bumper stickers and public contact with business leaders. The money for the budget will come from public and private contributions from sources such as area chambers of commerce, community oriented

Screening Program Will Make Your Heart Sing

By Janie Gnat
Herald Staff Writer

Been worrying about the old ticker lately but afraid the cost of what your family doctor would charge to check it out might send it into frantic palpitations? Well, worry no more. Beginning next month the Seminole County Health Department can give you a thorough cardiovascular exam and it won't cost you an arm and a leg.

"Heart disease is the number one cause of death and the number one disease in this country," said Dr. Jorge Deju, the county's director of health and human services. "Being in the prevention business, preventing some cause of disease or death obviously has an attraction for us."

The screening has three phases — evaluating a person's overall health habits, blood, and heart — and takes about 30 minutes to complete, Deju said.

The first part of the test is a health risk appraisal form the examinee, with help from health department personnel, fills out. Health-related information such as age, race, sex, blood pressure, cholesterol level, presence of diabetes, and smoking habits is requested. The information is then run through a state computer in Jacksonville and it takes about two weeks to get an analysis back, Deju said.

From that information the test subject's "health age" is computed. If that age is higher than the applicant's chronological age then "you aren't doing so well," Deju said.

That printout also evaluates the applicant's good health habits and bad ones. When Deju's office receives the printout an appointment will be set up for the subject to come in and discuss what needs to be changed as well as how to make those changes.

A blood test is the second part of the evaluation and tells the examiner about the applicant's levels of cholesterol, triglycerides, uric acid, and glucose in the blood. Since some types of cholesterol are more harmful than others a further test for Low Density Lipoprotein or High Density Lipoprotein may be required. (Called LDL or HDL tests.)

An electrocardiogram, or EKG as it is commonly known, is "a computerized assessment of the heart," Deju said. This is the third and final part of the test and only takes about 20 seconds to run. However, that test will not be available until October when Deju's office obtains the equipment needed.

"This test is a very exciting thing especially for young people because as you get older what you did at a younger age makes more of a difference," Deju said.

Although the program is brand new publicity, for it has been limited mostly to hospitals and doctors in the private sector. However, Deju's office has been making appointments for those interested in having the evaluation once everything is in place.

The test is available to all Seminole County residents for $25 (considerably less than what a private physician would charge) and anyone wishing to have their "health risk" appraised may make an appointment by calling Winnie Carpenter at the county Health and Human Services office, 322-2724.

Ban Recommended On Florida King Mackerel Fishing

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Florida's Gulf Coast fishermen could be banned from catching king mackerel under a recommendation presented to the National Marine Fisheries Service, but the proposed ban would not affect fishermen in the western Gulf.

The NMFS should place a moratorium on king mackerel fishing in the Gulf east of the Alabama-Florida border, according to a recommendation made Wednesday by the Gulf of Mexico Fisheries Management Council.

The NMFS regulates king mackerel fishing in the United States. The federal agency is advised by both the Gulf of Mexico Fisheries Management Council and the South Atlantic Fisheries Management Council. Members of the councils are nominated by the governors of their respective states and ratified by the national panel.

The king mackerel is a silvery, torpedo-shaped deepwater fish, which runs offshore from North Carolina to the Gulf of Mexico.

Gulf fishermen said a recommendation by the South Atlantic Council for a moratorium on the entire Gulf was political.

Plane Crash Victims Identified

FLORETTE, Ala. (UPI) — A family of six was killed Friday when a twin-engine airplane bound for Iowa stalled in midair, plummeted into a soybean field in the mountains of north Alabama and burst into flames.

The private Piper TS-60 crashed in Morgan County 18 miles south of the Huntsville-Madison County Jetport after disappearing from radar at 11:17 a.m., said Lloyd Alley, the Federal Aviation Administration control tower manager.

Reports show the aircraft, made by Aerostar until Piper bought the company, was flying from Lakeland, Fla., to Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

"The pilot reported at 6,000 feet that he had trouble with the right engine and lost hydraulic power," said FAA spokesman Fred Farrar. "The plane descended to 4,000 feet and the tower lost radio contact."

Morgan County Coroner Gene Shelton identified the pilot as William Champion, age unknown, of Marion, Iowa. Champion owned the Linn County Penny Saver, a local shopper newspaper.

Also killed was the pilot's wife, Nancy Sue Champion, 36, and their three children, Grant, 12, Matt, 10, and Caroline, 5. The last victim was Champion's sister, Phyllis Jean Beitz, 50, of Plant City, Fla.

Exec Charged In Kinky Sex Plan

HARTFORD, Conn. (UPI) — An E.F. Hutton & Co. executive was described by police Friday as the front man for a sado-masochistic pleasure parlor with national clientele that paid as high as $250 to be beaten and whipped.

Martin J. DeGennaro, 53, of Woodbridge, a vice president and account executive for the investment firm in New Haven, was charged Tuesday with promoting and patronizing a prostitute known as "Lady Carla."

DeGennaro, a father of four, was released on $1,000 bond pending an appearance Sept. 24 in Hartford Superior Court.

Lady Carla or Holly Violissi, 24, drew customers from around the country through such national magazines as Smut, Enslave and Bondage, said Police Lt. Michael Conroy.

Police arrested Violissi June 12 when they raided the parlor and found whips, chains, saddles and various items of leather and rubber clothing.

Policeman Aids In Reviving Boy Fished From Pool

Mouth-to-mouth resuscitation by a police officer during a driving rainstorm helped save the life of a 15-month-old toddler who was found floating in a motel pool Thursday.

Ronnie Leger Jr. was in stable condition and improving today at Orlando Regional Medical Center following the rescue efforts of Sanford officer Gary Harrell. The boy was transferred to ORMC after emergency treatment at Central Florida Regional Hospital, Sanford. ORMC spokesman Joe Brown said the baby was "howling, screaming and showing all the signs of a healthy young kid."

Sanford Police Chief Steve Harriett said Harrell and officer David Semones were eating dinner at Taco Bell, U.S Highway 17-92, about 7:05 p.m. when a drowning was reported over the police radio at the nearby Fountain Lodge motel.

The officers dashed through heavy rain and found the boy's father and a friend giving the child mouth-to-mouth resuscitation, Harriett said.

When Harrell heard the boy gurgle, he took him from his father, drained the youngster's lungs by holding him upside down, then continued resuscitation. The boy began breathing on his own and an ambulance took him to the hospital.

The baby was found bobbing in the motel pool after his parents began looking for him after discovering he wasn't where they had left him sleeping.

The parents, Ronnie and Candy Leger, had checked out of the motel and could not be reached for comment.

"I'm kind of proud of those guys for acting so properly," Harriett said.

Man Shot Twice In Back Critical; Police Arrest 1, Seek Accomplice

A Midway man shot twice Friday afternoon was in critical condition Saturday as lawmen made one arrest in the case and looked for a second assailant.

James Anthony Bradley, 21, was in an intensive care unit at Central Florida Regional Hospital with two bullet wounds in his back, according to sheriff's department and hospital reports.

He was wounded following a foot chase down a Midway street.

Witnesses told a sheriff's investigator Bradley was running down the street around 7:58 a.m. Friday with two men chasing him. One man was carrying a stick, the second a gun.

Three or four shots were fired, witnesses said. Two slugs hit Bradley who continued to walk a some distance before collapsing. The men got into a yellow Capris and drove away.

No motive was given for the assault.

Bradley, from his hospital bed, told sheriff's deputy Willie Chandler he thought the men, two brothers, were from Altamonte Springs. He said he thought one of the men was named Ed. A woman who lives on Center Street gave the deputy a lead and told him she dated an Altamonte Springs man named Ed who had a brother. The deputy talked to Bradley again who then remembered the man's last name.

Deputies went to an Altamonte Springs address and confronted the man who reportedly carried the stick during the assault.

Arrested Friday at 3:05 p.m. and charged with attempted murder was Ed Howard Jr., 18, of Apt. #7, 555 North Lake Blvd., Altamonte Springs. He was being held Saturday in lieu of $10,000 bond.

Lawmen are still looking for the gunman.

PHONE TAP

A Longwood woman told a sheriff's deputy she thinks her phone is tapped because she works for a national defense contractor.

Mary G. Brown, a manager for the Lockheed Corp., told a deputy she believes someone has been tapping her telephone since June.

She said everytime she uses her phone she hears an unusual noise. She said the person she is talking with can hear the noise also. She said she called the telephone company and they told her to call the sheriff's department. The sheriff's department is investigating.

BUROLARIES & THEFTS

Two toy poodles with a combined value of $1,000 were stolen from the home of June Bertrand, 45, of 194 Sorrento Circle, Winter Park, Wednesday. Deputies have the name of a suspect.

Jacquelyn Berry Costa, 24, of 1436 Fieldcrest Drive, Winter Park, reported to deputies that a $2,000 video recorder and other items including jewelry and a pistol were stolen from her home Wednesday.

Kidnap-Murder Suspect Spotted, Eludes Police

OCALA (UPI) — Dozens of FBI agents and deputies with dogs searched early Saturday for a kidnap-murder suspect who fled on foot when he returned to a rural trailer park and spotted a police surveillance team.

The suspect, Ronald Lloyd Bailey, 26, is charged with the first-degree murder of a 13-year-old boy abducted Aug. 31 while riding his bicycle near his home in the Brighton area of southeast Michigan.

Bailey was last seen Friday about 8 p.m. when he returned to the Big Ridge Acres mobile home park where he had been spotted earlier, said Deputy Linda Fulford of the Marion County Sheriff's Department.

Fulford said about 50 deputies, FBI agents and officers with dogs were searching the area.

"We have cordoned off the area and are stopping everyone at the entrance and exit roads," Fulford said. "We plan to continue the search through the night. We don't have any reason to believe he is not still in the area."

Witnesses said the victim, Shawn Moore, was shoved into a Jeep by a man matching Bailey's description. Bailey's 1985 silver-blue Jeep Cherokee, which was impounded by police, also matched the description of the kidnap vehicle, said Michigan State Police Lt. Roger W. Bittel.

A murder warrant for Bailey's arrest was issued Friday shortly after police found the body of a young blond male believed to be Moore along a trail in some woods in rural Gladwin County, Mich., about 150 miles northwest of Brighton.

The woods are near a cabin where Bailey is believed to have spent the Labor Day weekend with friends, police said.

A Brighton police task force questioned Bailey for six hours Wednesday before releasing him under "limited surveillance," police said. Nine hours later he flew to Florida.

He was first spotted at the Big Ridge Acres mobile home park south of Belleview Thursday night, Fulford said.

"He was under surveillance at the time but a warrant had not been issued, so he could not be arrested," she said.

When police and the FBI returned Friday with the warrant, Fulford said, Bailey had left the trailer home. She did not know who owned the trailer.

Bailey returned to the trailer park Friday night, but fled on foot when he saw a team of surveillance officers, Fulford said.

Court records obtained by the Detroit Free Press indicate that the suspect had a history of sex offenses involving boys, and was convicted of kidnapping a 12-year-old Livonia boy on a bicycle at knife-point in January 1976. He was sentenced to five years' probation after pleading guilty in that case.

Court records in Marion County indicate the suspect also has a criminal record in Florida for contributing to the delinquency of two boys, and is wanted for probation violation.

Charity For Dying Children Charged With Misuse Of Funds

HARTFORD, Conn. (UPI) — The state hopes to recover some of the $237,000 raised by a charity to grant the last wishes of dying children but allegedly used to buy jewelry, rent a sex film and cover other expenses.

State Attorney General Joseph I. Lieberman said only $10,000 of the money raised in Connecticut last year by the Genie Project Inc. of Waterbury went to benefit children.

The charity used donations to pay inflated rents and salaries, buy jewelry, make unsecured personal loans to its officers and rent a video cassette recorder and a sex film, Lieberman said Thursday.

"Never in my term as attorney general have I seen a charity case that makes me as angry as this one. What kind of charity would take advantage of dying children for personal profit?"

Consumer Protection Commissioner Mary M. Heslin said the state is taking legal action to shut down the Genie Project and recover some of the money raised by the charity, which has been banned from soliciting money.

'Never in my term as attorney general have I seen a charity case that makes me as angry as this one. What kind of charity would take advantage of dying children for personal profit?'

Officials at the Genie Project, which the state said helped five terminally ill children last year, could not be reached for comment.

The charity raised money for the stated purpose of granting the final wishes of children with terminal illnesses, Lieberman said, and did send some dying children to Disney World.

"But I cannot help but think of the dozens of other children who died over the past few years who could have had their last wish granted had greed not gotten in the way," he told a news conference.

Lieberman, noting the charity raised $237,000 and spent only $10,000 to benefit children, said, "That's only 4 cents out of every dollar."

He said the officers of the Genie Project paid themselves more than $27,000 in salary in the 1983-84 fiscal year and gave themselves $16,000 in personal unsecured loans using charity funds.

Charity funds also were used to pay rent at about three times the market rate for part of the officers' home and to buy $8,000 worth of jewelry from a distributorship the officers operated, Lieberman said.

Funds from the charity also were used to rent a video cassette recorder and a cassette of the X-rated movie, "Sex Games," Lieberman said.

He said the alleged misuse of funds was uncovered by the public charities unit operated by the attorney general's office and the Department of Consumer Protection.

Hospital Offers Program For Cancer Patients, Families

I Can Cope, a free patient education program about living with cancer, will be presented by South Seminole Community Hospital and the American Cancer Society on Tuesday evenings, October 8 through November 19. The classes will be held in the Private Dining Room at South Seminole Community Hospital, 555 State Road 434, Longwood, from 7 to 9 p.m.

The information and insights offered in I Can Cope classes help patients, families and friends with the day-to-day issues of living with a chronic disease like cancer, according to hospital officials. The eight-week series features doctors, nurses, social workers and other health care professionals who will provide factual, straightforward cancer information and answers to questions about human anatomy, cancer development, diagnosis, treatment, side effects, new research, communication, emotions, sexuality, self-esteem and community resources.

"Living with cancer can be one of the hardest challenges anyone faces," said Lisa Smith, Director of Education at South Seminole Community Hospital. "I Can Cope can help these patients meet this challenge by clarifying cancer facts and myths."

Sporadic power outages were reported by Florida Power and Light in Seminole County's north end as a result of Friday afternoon's thunderstorm.

Florida Power Corporation, which serves the south end of the county, had lines down in 11 areas leaving 1200 customers without electricity Friday.

Y'all In The Dawg House

Some Southerners Learning To Speak More Like Yankees

By Bill Lohmann
UPI Feature Writer

ATLANTA (UPI) — Some Southern folks reckon y'all heard 'bout enough of dawgs and young'uns and awl — the kind you put in your veehckle — so they're fixin' to set a spell and gussie up the way they talk gist a bit.

They are adding a few letters, dropping a few syllables and trying like heck to say, "Right here" — instead of "rat cheer." "It's just a matter of self-improvement," said Gary Harris, 45, an Atlanta lawyer who enrolled in a "How To Lose Your Southern Accent" class. "It's not so much that I don't want to be a Southerner anymore, but I just want to speak better." The drawl is a fixture of Southern life. Often maligned and frequently mimicked, it is always an ear-catcher north of the Mason-Dixon line. More than a few Southerners can recall a childhood trip to New York or Pennsylvania or Michigan, where they were constantly hounded by Northern pals to "say that again." As a result, Southerners always have been defensive and protective of their accent — and proud. The drawl is to the South what the Statue of Liberty is to New York City. It's the first thing you encounter when you visit there.

While some speech teachers would just as soon erase "y'all," "yonder" and "a mess of grits" from the language, not all take that approach.

Sandy Linver, president of Speakeasy Inc., an Atlanta firm that conducts public speaking seminars for executives across America, encourages clients to clean up their bad habits — but retain their accent, Southern or otherwise.

"If you start fooling around with accents, you're asking people to change a basic part of themselves," said Linver, who still bares a hint of her Canadian upbringing in her speech. Inman-Ebel agrees. "It's almost easier to learn a foreign language than to unlearn an accent," she said, "because it becomes such a part of you."

Billie Sue Knittel, 28, an Atlanta native, enrolled in a class to shape up her speaking ability at the urging of her employer, a dentist, who shuddered every time she answered the telephone.

"He's a Yankee, and he said I talked too Southern for him," Knittel said. "I have some trouble with vowels. Words like 'fillings' give me problems. I was calling them 'feelings.'"

Shelly Friedman, a speech pathologist, has been teaching Knittel, Harris and others since she started her classes earlier this year.

"When I first started teaching this, I didn't think anyone would be interested," Friedman said. "But I've been surprised. I just got a letter from a man who heard about the classes and wants to franchise them."

Friedman, a native Ohioan, says she teaches "general American dialect" but stops short of pushing her students to abolish their Southern accent altogether.

"I want them to keep what they've got. I just want to trim the edges a little," she said.

Friedman said the Southern drawl is typified by vowels being held too long and "g's" being chopped off the end of words. Articulation is the biggest problem. "The first thing I tell people is they have to open their mouths," Friedman said. But changing deeply embedded speech habits is a difficult task.

Adults strain in Friedman's classes with an array of sounds. A common practice phrase comes out, "Hal hal brain cal." There are different accents within the South. In parts of Virginia and North Carolina, "A mouse in the house," sounds a lot like, "A moose in the hoose."

She says good grammar, proper body language and the right delivery can turn an accent into an asset rather than a liability.

"I believe we should be the best of what we are," Linver said. "But if accents disappeared, it would make life much less interesting to me."

Books Tell How To Speak Southern

By United Press International

The Southern vocabulary is similar to the rest of the nation — it only sounds a little different.

Two books, How To Speak Southern and its sequel, More How To Speak Southern — both published by Bantam Books — capture hundreds of classic Dixie phrases and pronunciations.

The author of the books, Steve Mitchell, a native North Carolinian, once said he compiled the works for "all Yankees in the hope that it will teach them how to talk right."

A sample:

Ah — The thing you see with.

Alg — Which came first, the chicken or the alg?

Am — An electrical instrument used to remove wrinkles from clothing.

Can Music Make Riding N.Y. Subway Enjoyable?

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Metropolitan Transit Authority is offering a subway serenade — music to soothe the savage straphanger.

Subway riders at eight stations around the city were treated to the sound of music, courtesy of street performers and musicians recruited from various city music schools under a new MTA program, Music Under New York, that began Thursday.

"They say music soothes the savage beast and what's more appropriate than music in the subway where we sometimes become savage beasts?" MTA Chairman Robert Kiley said at the opening ceremonies.

The program, kicked off at the Grand Central and Times Square shuttle stations, is an attempt to make the subway system more pleasurable, he said.

IN BRIEF

Security Chief Says Kidnapping Evidence Points To Leftists

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (UPI) — A government official Friday publicly stated for the first time that leftist guerrillas were probably responsible for the kidnapping of President Jose Napoleon Duarte's daughter.

Col. Rinaldo Golcher, director of the Treasury Police, also told reporters two U.S. advisers were working on the case. He would not identify them or say what agencies they represented.

Duarte's oldest daughter, Ines Guadalupe Duarte Duran, and another woman, were abducted Tuesday by unknown gunmen who killed one of her body guards and wounded another.

Golcher said three stolen vehicles used in the kidnapping, including a minibus used in the getaway, were recovered by police. But he said no further progress had been made in determining the fate of Ines Guadalupe.

In the time since her abduction, no group has claimed responsibility for the action.

Immigration Bill Unsettled

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Friday defeated an amendment to increase the number of illegal aliens eligible for legal U.S. residence under a bill that seeks to keep others out by making it unlawful to hire them.

The amendment, offered by Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., would grant amnesty to aliens who entered the United States illegally before 1981 instead of 1980 as proposed in the pending bill. It was crushed 65-26.

The Senate, in its third day on the bill, was unable to finish work on the bill and put it aside until next week. A final vote was not expected before Tuesday.

The Kennedy amendment was turned down even though he noted the 1981 date was agreed to last year by House and Senate negotiators before talks broke down over other issues.

"If it was good enough in October, it should be good enough now," Kennedy said.

The amendment was opposed by the bill's sponsor, Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., who said it touched upon "the toughest part" of the bill and would be viewed as a signal of "continuing repeal" of U.S. immigration law.

Blacks, Whites Meet For Talks

LUSAKA, Zambia (UPI) — A group of prominent white South African businessmen met Friday with leaders of the outlawed African National Congress — the main guerrilla group fighting apartheid in South Africa.

Tom Sebena of the ANC in Lusaka said the meeting, held at the Mfuwe Lodge in eastern Zambia, provided a new channel of communication between the black nationalist ANC and white citizens of South Africa.

"It is an open meeting for two groups that have never spoken to each other before. It would be ungentlemanly to present them with a straight agenda and say this is what we want to discuss with you," Sebena said.

"We all must have open minds. The ANC wants to put over our point of view on the situation within the country and what we see for the future in a black-ruled South Africa," Sebena said.

'Ambassadors Of Good Will'

Longtime Golden Age Games Enthusiasts To Light Torch

By Jane Casselberry
Herald Staff Writer

Kay Thomson, 61, of Lake Mary, and John Kane, 75, of Sanford, have been selected to be torchbearers to light the flame at the opening ceremonies for the 11th Annual Golden Age Games to be held Nov. 4-9 in Sanford.

Jack Horner, president of the Greater Sanford Chamber of Commerce, which co-sponsors the event, said the honorees have been active in the Games for many years, both as members of the executive committee and as participants.

"They have spent so much time working for the Games," he said. "Wherever they go they are our ambassadors of good will promoting the Games, including a lot of television appearances."

Horner announced their selection Wednesday to the Games Executive Committee, meeting for the first time since May. Horner presided at the meeting in the absence of chairman Jim Jernigan who was away attending a conference. Horner and Jernigan picked the pair for the honor.

The Games' Overall Women's Champion in 1980, Mrs. Thomson has won 111 medals since 1978 in decathlon, track and field, canoeing, bike racing, race walking, leisure walking and other events. She is talking about entering the triathlon this year.

She was not old enough to enter the Games until 1978.

"I saw the people competing in the Games on television and I couldn't wait until I turned 55 so I could enter," said the lean and tan grandmother. "I thought it was great that Sanford thought about the Golden Ages. It gives you something to look forward to, an incentive to take care of yourself and train to compete with your peers."

Kane

Thomson

Kane, who represents the Over 50 Club on the executive committee, has been active on the committee and as a Games participant since 1974. The club sponsors the midweek dinner-dance.

He and his wife, Minnie, were the grand marshals for the parade that kicked off the 1981 Games. They help in many ways from the mailout of Games, information to soliciting ads for the record book. Kane participated in track and field, the dance contest, pancake race, and bowling, winning a total of 26 medals. He ran competitively until he was 71 years old. He and his wife won medals for their dancing until he suffered a heart attack and had to give it up.

Between 800 and 900 entries have been received for this year's event, according to Virginia Longwell, executive assistant in the chamber office. She said that 275 have been received for the golf tournament at the Mayfair Country Club Golf Course alone, necessitating the closing of entries for Tuesday, but Thursday is still open.

Local golfers 55 or older, who may have been procrastinating, are advised to get their entries in soon or they may be left out.

Cracking The Code Of The Common Cold Virus

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Purdue University scientists say they have cracked the code of a common cold virus that "makes it possible to think about" a cure for the cold and other viral ailments.

Biology professor Dr. Michael Rossmann, who headed the project, said the findings could lead "in a few years" to treatment for cold and other viral diseases that have stymied researchers for decades.

"It is the first time that anybody has been able to see the three-dimensional atomic arrangement of an animal virus," he said Wednesday.

"It means for people nothing at this instance. There's no cure for the common cold, no cure for other viral diseases. But it makes it possible to think about cures for all sorts of viral diseases, not just the common cold."

The Purdue team analyzed human rhinovirus-14, one of the 100 or so known strains of the common cold virus.

Doctors now can only treat the symptoms of most viral diseases, such as measles, chicken pox and hepatitis. If vaccines or other preventive measures fail to keep a patient from contracting the ailment.

Rossmann, who reported the discovery at news conference sponsored by the National Science Foundation, said the Purdue findings might help fight polio, hepatitis A and foot-and-mouth disease, which attacks livestock. His findings are to be published in Sept. 12 edition of the British scientific journal Nature.

Whether a vaccine can be made against cold viruses is doubtful, he said, but there may be other ways of preventing colds. He said a drug company was working on this angle, but he declined to elaborate.

The researchers used super-powerful X-rays from an atomic particle smasher at Cornell University and Purdue's supercomputer system to inspect the structure of a cold virus.

The team found the coat of each virus contains sites that can locate and attach themselves to cells in the host's upper respiratory system, causing sniffles, sneezes and general misery.

Working with scientists at the University of Wisconsin, the Purdue team found the virus also has at least four other sites where the host's antibodies can attach to the virus.

This explains why cold viruses can change so rapidly to resist antibodies from the host's immune system, yet retain the right sort of receptor structure to remain firmly attached to host cells, Rossmann said.

Altamonte Commission Has 2 Candidates So Far

Eddie Titen, 610 Hermit's Trail, Altamonte Springs, is the only candidate so far who has qualified for the district three city commission seat, but qualifying for the race does not end until Sept. 23.

District one is also on the ballot for the Nov. 5 election and incumbent Dudley Bates qualified for that seat Friday afternoon. Bates is running for his third term because he feels this is a "critical time for the development of Altamonte Springs mainly in the sense of the comprehensive plan." Bates said he has chaired the steering committee for the comprehensive land use plan for two years and wants to see the project through. That plan is scheduled to go into effect April 15, 1986.

Bates is a general manager for Koger

Properties, a Jacksonville-based company with offices on McGuire Boulevard, Orlando. He received a bachelor's degree in business administration with double majors in economics and finance from Auburn University in 1965.

Titen, of Titen & Dumke, Inc., 140 N. Westmonte Dr., Altamonte Springs, is a general contractor specializing in commercial buildings and interior design. He received a masters in architecture from the University of Florida and a bachelor's in design. Titen said he has done special studies in urban planning and St. John's River water management.

"Altamonte Springs and (surrounding cities) need to work hand in hand with regards to planning, growth, and law enforcement," Titen said. "They need someone like me to insure responsible planning."

District three incumbent Bruce Furino said he will not seek re-election because he does not have the time to devote to the office. Furino ran unopposed in a special election last year held to fill one year remaining in Bette Griffith's term. Ms. Griffith resigned from that position.

Commissioners are elected for two year terms on a non-partisan basis and are paid $300 a month. Qualifying papers can be obtained from the city clerk's office in city hall, 225 Newburyport Ave. Qualifying closes at 5 p.m. Sept. 23.

Downtown Development Group To Reorganize, Elect Officers

Board members and officers will be elected at a reorganizational meeting of the Sanford Development Corporation to be held Tuesday at 8 a.m. at the Greater Sanford Chamber of Commerce, 400 E. First St.

Sara Jacobson will review the original plans and objectives for redevelopment of the downtown. The SDC has remained relatively inactive for the past few years while the proposed downtown streetscape project was held up in the courts and subsequent planting took place, said SDC President Don Knight. "Now that the plants are finally in the ground, and the downtown area is looking so much better, it is time for the SDC to formulate plans to take us into the next phase of downtown redevelopment."

"We hope firms that have supported the plan or been a member of SDC in the past, will join us in our renewed efforts," Knight said. "We hope those who are new in town will join us in planning for the future."

At the meeting Knight will explain work projected for the coming year including off-street parking, extending street improvements, attractive signage and street furniture, preservation of the downtown Historic District, and maintenance of the streetscape.

Mayor Bettye Smith will discuss ways the group and the city can work together.

All persons interested in participating in the program are invited to attend, Knight said.

Tax Lesson Package Free

"Understanding Taxes," a complete, free education package, is now available, according to the Internal Revenue Service. The program teaches high school students throughout the country historic, economic and contemporary issues in federal, state and local taxes.

Students learn the "how to" of taxation, how to prepare their own returns through line-by-line explanation of the simplified Form 1040A and Form 1040EZ.

Students' course books, teachers' manuals, workshop materials, and some audiovisuals are supplied free by the IRS. Teachers do not have to be skilled in tax law or economics to teach this course suitable for history, economics, math, government, civics and other high school curricula.

Anyone interested in learning more about the program may call the Taxpayer Education Office at (904) 791-2514 or the toll-free tax information number, 1-800-424-1040. Materials for a January 1986 delivery should be ordered prior to October 1, 1985.

Stress Expert Says Anxious Travelers Can Beat Fear Of Flying

GAINESVILLE (UPI) — The record number of 19 airline disasters this year is fueling airline passengers' fear of flying, but a stress expert says there are ways for people to overcome that anxiety.

"Obviously, if you're reading about a lot of planes crashing, you're going to have more stress," Dr. Jim Archer, author of "Managing Anxiety and Stress" and director of the University of Florida's counseling center, said Thursday.

"Fear of flying could interfere with a career if a person travels a lot. Some people could be paralyzed with fear just by going to an airport."

Fortunately, there are successful stress management techniques that can help people overcome those fears, Archer said.

"Stress management techniques are some of the easier types of psychological counseling to do," Archer said.

Archer recommends that frightened passengers try to visualize pleasant images — anything that will take their mind off of airplane crashes.

"If you're thinking about all those people going down on those planes, you need to stop and switch to thinking about images that are pleasant. Tell yourself it's very unlikely your plane will crash, and there are lots of safety features on the plane," Archer said.

The closer a person gets to a stressful situation — in this case an airport terminal — the more intense the symptoms of stress may become, Archer said. Nervousness may translate into physical symptoms of stress such as sweating, nausea, shaking and muscular tension.

"Physical stress often feeds on itself in a cycle. When you become aware you are stressed, it can increase the amount of stress you are feeling," Archer said.

"If a person is in an airport and feels uneasy and nervous, he or she ought to sit down and take a few deep breaths to relax. Anything you can do to reduce the physical stress cycle will help reduce emotional stress."

IN BRIEF

Cardinal President To Visit U.S.S.R. For Housing Tour

SANFORD — Modular Housing Pioneer Austin Guirlinger is representing manufactured housing on a trip to the Soviet Union this week as part of a technology exchange program.

Guirlinger, founder and president of 31-year-old Cardinal Industries, Inc. of Columbus, Ohio, was one of six U.S. business executives selected by Housing and Urban Development Secretary Samuel R. Pierce to make the special trip.

The U.S. delegation will visit the Soviet Union Sept. 11-22. It will meet in Moscow with Sergey V. Bashilov, head of the Soviet national housing agency, and with other Russian housing officials.

The group also will inspect housing in several Soviet cities. Guirlinger said he is looking forward to the trip.

Guirlinger was selected for the trip because of the great interest in manufactured housing in the Soviet Union and because of Cardinal's leadership position in the housing industry, said Robert Nipp, HUD director of press relations.

"Housing is a world-wide concern," says Guirlinger. "Exchange programs such as these are very beneficial in that they provide viable ideas and solutions for tomorrow's housing problems. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to share our experience and expertise."

For Guirlinger, the exchange with the Soviets will not be his first. Soviet housing officials have visited Cardinal's housing factory in Columbus three times in the last five years.

Guirlinger also traveled to Japan in 1983 as part of a U.S. delegation which toured manufacturing housing plants there and has reciprocated by having Japanese housing officials at his factories.

SBA in October 1983 began keeping records of "Answer Desk" calls by state. From this start through June, 3,729 "Answer Desk" calls have been received from Florida, McAllister said.

Experts from SBA's Office of Advocacy in the Agency's Washington, D.C., headquarters are prepared to take calls from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. EDT each working day. The toll-free answer number is (800) 368-5855. In Washington, D.C., the number is 653-7561.

South Africa Economic Crisis May Force Reform Where Political Pressure Failed

By Michael Babad
United Press International

Unprecedented financial pressure on South Africa may succeed where years of political pressure failed in forcing change in the system of racial segregation known as apartheid.

At least 700 people have died in a year of unrest in South Africa where apartheid forbids the black majority from voting or holding office and restricts education, occupation and salary.

The resulting international uncertainty over the fate of the white minority government has created an economic state of emergency.

Analysts say mounting financial pressure may force eventual, if not immediate, change where international political influence has failed.

Several Western governments have imposed economic sanctions. President Reagan, who has long opposed "punitive sanctions," announced a dramatic reversal of his administration's policies toward South Africa on Monday. The President signed an executive order adopting many of the trade and financial sanctions sought by Congress saying his policy of "constructive engagement" should now be termed "active, constructive engagement."

Investors have pulled several billion dollars in capital out of the country.

Simultaneously, there has been a swell of divestment from companies in the United States doing business in South Africa.

International bankers have refused South Africa financial support, creating a short-term debt crisis for the country.

Fundamental?
"I think there is no question there will be reform," said Willard R. Johnson, a political science professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "The question is whether that reform will be fundamental."

South Africa already was in the throes of 3½ years of recession, with inflation running at about 15 percent, when its current financial troubles began.

An estimated 18 American firms pulled out of South Africa this year. A short-term credit crisis arose when several U.S. banks declined to roll over their $2 billion share of $6 billion in short-term credit lines that had matured, forcing authorities to suspend for four months principal payments on the nation's $22 billion foreign debt.

Gerhard de Kock, governor of South Africa's central bank, making the rounds of banks in Europe and the United States, has said unless banks agree to refinance, the country "may very well swap gold in the very near future" for dollars to get through the crisis. South Africa's gold reserves were slightly over $2 billion at the end of July.

The South African currency, the rand, sank last month to an all-time low of 35.05 cents U.S., prompting a temporary shutdown of the Johannesburg Stock Exchange and a suspension of foreign exchange trading. Stiff exchange controls are considered likely.

No Support
The flight of capital from South Africa was greater than the massive withdrawal of money after police killed 69 people at Sharpeville, south of Johannesburg, in 1960, when investors pulled out between $40 million and $50 million in a matter of days, MIT's Johnson said in an interview.

"I do not think the South Africans are ignoring the seriousness of this threat," Johnson said. "... They have been able to weather a number of crises well primarily because they have had that kind of emergency support in the financial communities of Europe and America. And that they're not

Experienced, Certified Auto Technician

Sanford Gulf Service, 2518 French Ave., has named Christopher S. Petris, Jr., 30, general manager.

Petris has been employed at the service station as service manager since January. Before joining Sanford Gulf, Petris was shop foreman at Sun State Ford and service manager at Seminole Ford. He attended school in Miami.

According to Sanford Gulf getting that now, I think, really is significant."

Observers could not put a firm amount on the flow of capital out of South Africa but estimate it has exceeded $2 billion.

"It's serious but it's not catastrophic," said Richard Hull, a senior adviser with the firm of Frost and Sullivan Inc. and a professor of African history at New York University.

The financial crisis has brought "more eloquent pressure" on President Pieter Botha's government and will force him to work more closely with business, which has taken a "reformist attitude," Hull said.

Key Move
"The key move seems to have been the Chase Manhattan Bank, when they refused to roll over their short-term loans," he said in an interview.

The withdrawal from South Africa of several American companies, Hull said, is not "a significant departure — yet."

Hendrik Steyn, consul for commercial affairs at the South African consulate in New York, said he had seen reports that only five or six of the American firms took their investments with them.

"It is really not as serious as it appears to be," he said.

The most significant pullout, according to Johnson, was by the U.S. financial services and commodities firm of Phibro-Salomon Inc., with South African assets of between $400 million and $500 million. It is 15-percent owned by an affiliate of Harry Oppenheimer's Anglo American Corp., the South African mining giant, Johnson said. "It is rare that you would get a major move against the largest single stockholder without it being public knowledge."

It is believed concern for Phibro-Salomon's U.S. underwriting business played a part in the decision to withdraw. There is a mounting municipal boycott underway in the United States, with cities and states placing restrictions on companies that underwrite securities if they have South African ties.

Observers said the company, in closing its Derby Minerals subsidiary in Johannesburg, was ending many long-standing contractual relationships with both the government and private sector which could make it impossible to do business again in South Africa.

"You also find other evidence of the South African business and upper middle class elements pulling out," Johnson said. "Houses are on sale at a bargain so I think they've come more or less to the end of the road in terms of... getting the benefit of the doubt in western investing and lending circles."

Shutdowns
Johnson said he expected more corporate shutdowns, or at the least slowdowns.

More than 300 American firms remain in South Africa — with some $2.5 billion invested — and some say that while they oppose apartheid they cannot just abandon their operations.

"We signed the Sullivan Principles (developed by the Rev. Leon Sullivan of Philadelphia in the late 1970s to act as a code of conduct for American-owned companies in South Africa) two years ago and our objectives there are the same as in any other country where we operate: that is simply to be a good employer and good citizen," said H.M. Ryan, director of investor relations for Dresser Industries Inc., a major multinational which employs up to 600 blacks in South African mining and construction.

Banks
Banks appear to hold the key to the solution of South Africa's short-term economic crisis; witness the de Kock mission to bankers in the United States and Europe.

U.S. banks have some $3.5 billion in loans outstanding; British banks about $5.5 billion, and German and Swiss banks also have large exposure.

South African default on its foreign debt would present Western nations with the dilemma of bailing out a government whose system they detest, although it could force political concessions and even topple the Botha regime.

Virtually all major United States lenders have stopped loans to the South African government. Many U.S. banks also have stopped lending to the private sector. Many who continue to lend say suddenly stopping the flow of funds to corporations would harm blacks and hinder the fight against apartheid.

"Basically, we believe that peaceful change has the best chance of occurring in a healthy economic environment," said a spokesman for San Francisco's Bank of America, which stopped public sector loans to South Africa five years ago.

In London, Barclays Bank, long a major force in South African banking, said it would reduce the proportion of its holdings in its South African subsidiary and eventually drop the use of its name there, a move which is believed to have prompted some others to reduce their exposure.

Divestiture
A spinoff in the fight against apartheid is the divestiture of money from American firms doing business in South Africa. Billions of dollars in investments, such as pension funds, have been divested from American firms and legislation requiring some form of divestiture has been introduced in 29 states.

Late last month, for example, New Jersey Gov. Thomas Kean signed a bill requiring withdrawal of more than $2 billion in state pension funds invested in some 60 companies.

In Colorado, a state policy bans all state investments in companies doing business with or in South Africa.

And in Michigan, a plan to divest more than $2 billion in state pension money has particular significance because it could affect major companies such as General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co.

Other legislatures, such as Iowa's, have proposed laws for divestiture in companies not adhering in South Africa to the Sullivan Principles.

Officials of the United Nations pension fund of about $4 billion, said last month they had withdrawn all holdings from companies doing business in South Africa. While the policy had been mandated more than 10 years ago, the fund sold off its remaining shares only in early August.

The U.N. also named a panel to examine the "activities and operations of transnational corporations in South Africa and the extent to which they contribute to and sustain the system of apartheid."

It will look into the operations of some 1,000 firms, including 406 American-based, 364 British and 142 West German. There are 31 Swiss firms, 24 Australian, 21 Canadian, 20 French, 18 Swedish and 17 from Holland.

As South Africa becomes more the focus of world attention, pressure grows on corporations and governments alike.

The 15-nation U.N. Security Council has approved voluntary sanctions that include a ban on new investment in South Africa while France and Australia have initiated economic sanctions and the Canadian government has announced mild measures.

In the United States, President Reagan, on a collision course with Congress, did an about-face and adopted most of the economic sanctions contained in a measure already approved by the House. A measure the president promised to veto.

The president, who faced a potentially embarrassing confrontation with Republicans in the Congress, signed an order banning the sale of computers to South Africa security agencies; banned most loans to the South African government; proposed a possible ban on U.S. imports of the Krugerrand, South Africa's popular gold coins, and prohibited the export of most nuclear technology.

Condemned

In South Africa, President Botha condemned the White House announcement, saying the move would "diminish the ability of the United States to influence events in southern Africa."

Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu, the Nobel Peace laureate, rejected President Reagan's move as wholly inadequate. "The South African government is laughing all the way to the bank. They know it's not even a flea bite."

Despite Botha's insistence that no country would dictate policy to Pretoria, there were two significant developments in South Africa just three days after the president's announcement.

A parliamentary commission Thursday recommended the white-minority government scrap one of apartheid's cornerstones, the controversial "pass laws" designed to keep blacks from migrating to cities.

The recommendation came one day after Botha announced plans to grant South African citizenship to blacks in four tribal homelands — a move one white opposition leader said signaled "the end of the apartheid dream."

Trade

Trade between the United States and South Africa dropped this year.

South African exports to the United States fell to $1.07 billion in the first six months, compared to $1.51 billion in the first half of 1984. The Commerce Department attributed the drop to a decline in U.S. sales of Krugerrands.

Similarly, American exports to South Africa fell in the first half to $675 million from $1.28 billion in the same 1984 period, reflecting chiefly a drop in corn shipments and a sharp decline in the value of the rand.

South African trade with some other nations has fallen as well.

In Canada, where trade with South Africa dropped steadily from a peak of about $400 million in 1980 to a projected $250 million this year, the year-old government has promised more sanctions.

The socialist government in Greece has slapped an embargo on South African meat and related products, and coal exports to Greece.

The prime ministers of Finland and Sweden also have called for mandatory sanctions. A joint statement signed by the two leaders and the former leaders of Denmark and Norway called for a halt to all investments and a ban on all loans to South Africa.

Brazil, which has no substantial links with South Africa, has made a ban on petroleum and arms exports formal.

Close Ties

Other nations, however, maintain close economic ties with South Africa. Israel, for example, counts South Africa as its third largest trading partner. Ten Israeli companies invested more than 20 million rand in South African firms in 1983 and 1984, and trade between the two reached more than $200 million in 1983, the last period for which statistics were available.

Similarly, ties are strong with Chile, which traded $80 million in goods with South Africa last year.

UCF Student Government Elections Set

Student government elections are slated for Sept. 23, 24, 25. Thirty senate seats are up election. Here is the election schedule: area campuses (Daytona South Orlando and Brevard) will vote on the 23rd and the main campus will vote on the 24th and 25th.

John Philip Goree, vice president of business affairs, has decided to retire. Goree, who lives in Oviedo, has been with UCF since 1966 and was the first staff member to be hired at the school. UCF President Trevor Colburn accepted Goree's resignation with regret and said, "UCF will long be in your debt for your many contributions."

Students have taken to writing letters to the Department of Transportation because traffic is so snarled around UCF. Turn signals and wider lanes are needed on Alafaya Trail to accommodate the school's commuters.

About 1,900 students waited for two hours to see Dr. Ruth Westheimer speak Monday in the Gym. Westheimer's plane was delayed by bad weather in New York, but that did not dampen the crowd's enthusiasm.

Westheimer, host of TV's Good Sex! and author of several books, told the crowd people need to be very careful in choosing their sexual partners. Westheimer believes science and medicine will find a cure for Herpes and AIDS, but until then people who have either or both diseases need to tell their partner before it is too late.

UCF President Trevor Colburn said the school's 39-37 football victory over Bethune-Cookman college "is the greatest in the school's history." Field goal kicker Eddie O'Brien booted a 55-yard shot with 3 seconds left to play to win the game and set a school and stadium record. For the first time in four years, the Mayor's Cup Trophy, handed out by Orlando Mayor Bill Frederick, will sit in UCF's trophy case.

Left turn lanes will be built on State Road 426 at its intersections with Tusawilla Road, Dean Road and Chapman Road, according to the State Department of Transportation. Traffic signals will also be installed at the Tusawilla Road and Dean Road intersections.

Back To School Hot Topic At Seminole

Getting back into the school scene faced many students around Seminole County on Aug. 26. Giving up the luxuries that summer offered hits many students as a trauma.

Here at SHS, the halt to days at the beach, staying out till all hours, or waking up past noon have taken a little getting used to.

One thing that no one is getting used to is the heat. The 1300 wing does not have an air conditioning unit. The unit was ripped out at the end of last year with the intention of replacing it before the new school year began.

The people at the county office can't supply any answers as to where the new unit is or its day of arrival. One day the new unit is on its way to Sanford on the back of a truck, and the next day it hasn't even been built yet.

Lee Davies, a math teacher in the 1300 wing, tries to make her students appreciate the situation. Although her room has reached a record high of 95 degrees, she humored her students by saying, "Look at it this way; you don't have to buy a membership to the local spa to sit in a sauna for an hour each day."

If the students in the 1300 wing can beat the heat, the 1985-86 school year should be a superb one. A.W. Epps, principal, and Mrs.

Debbie Mahaney, dean of students, both agree that the year has been a success so far.

Average Students Shortchanged, Study Claims

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The average American high school student is being short-changed by the practice of devoting most classroom time and resources to talented or problem youngsters, a new study concludes.

While gifted or troubled students are often funneled into special programs, the majority of youngsters — the "unspecial" ones — are given minimum attention, the report says.

The study, "The Shopping

Mall High School: Winners and Losers in the Educational Marketplace," is part of a five-year investigation, "A Study of High Schools," sponsored by the National Association of Secondary School Principals and the National Association of Independent Schools.

The investigation, which involved interviews with 1,500 students, teachers and parents at 15 schools nationwide, produced the first of three books last year. "Horace's Compromise" by TheodoreSizer, the project's chairman.

"The Shopping Mall High School," released as a book, was written by educators Arthur Powell, Eleanor Farrar and David Cohen. The final book, a history of high schools since 1940, is to be published in the spring.

Powell, Farrar and Cohen, in unveiling their book at a news conference Wednesday, used the analogy of a shopping mall to describe the structure and functions of America's high schools, ranging from vast parking lots to specialty shops.

Sites For Hazardous Waste Transfer Proposed To Board Of Adjustment

Hazardous Waste Consultants Inc., is slated to ask Seminole County's Board of Adjustment Monday for permission to put a hazardous waste transfer station on two different sites.

The meeting is to begin at 6 p.m. in room W120 of the County Services Building, 1101 E. First St.

One site eyed by the hazardous waste firm is a part of Entzminger Farms between Seaboard System Railroad and Old Sanford-Oviedo Road. The other site is near the east line of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad and St. Gertrude Street on the northwest corner of First and Riverview Avenue.

The Seminole County Board of Adjustment hears requests from property owners for special exceptions and extensions concerning zoning, buffer areas, and variances.

The Hazardous Waste requests are listed 42 and 43 on a 46-item agenda. The board does have the right to consider agenda items out of order, however.

Tuesday the firm withdrew an appeal to the Seminole County Commission for permission to operate the hazardous waste transfer station on agriculture zoned property on Silver Lake Road because of overwhelming public opposition to the request. Both of the sites the board of adjustment will be considering are zoned industrial.

The company was operating the transfer station on west S.R. 46 but lacked the proper zoning and permits to do so.

School Construction Bill Flap In State Supreme Court Hands

TALLAHASSEE (UPI) — One side calls it a "constitutional crisis"; the other calls it a "semantics game". But the dispute between House leaders and Gov. Bob Graham over a $232 million school construction bill is now in the hands of the state Supreme Court.

The dispute centers on Graham's use of the line item veto to kill projects worth $5.8 million in the Postsecondary Education Capital Outlay bill.

Barry Richard, a lawyer for House Speaker James Harold Thompson, asked the court Friday to overrule the vetoes, saying they threaten the very framework of Florida government.

But a lawyer for Graham defended the governor's action as a legitimate effort to stop legislative leaders using the bill to trade favors and reward their friends.

The governor's authority to veto individual items in general appropriation bills is unquestioned. The justices must determine if the PECO bill, this year passed separately from the general appropriations bill, is nevertheless an appropriations bill itself.

The justices did not say when they would rule.

No Bond For Car Bomb Suspect

NAPLES (UPI) — A judge denied bond for accused murderer Steven Benson, saying the state had evidence against him "sufficient to sustain a jury verdict of guilty."

In a 10-page decision Friday, Collier County Judge Hugh Hayes said the evidence against Benson included a report by a fingerprint expert with the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms matching Benson's fingerprint with those found on two receipts from a Naples supply store.

Investigators allege that Benson bought material at Hughes Supply, Inc. to make two pipe bombs that killed his mother, tobacco heiress Margaret Benson, and his brother, Scott, and seriously injured his sister, Carol Benson Kendall.

An artist's sketch of the man who bought the materials, made from a store employee's description, "is strikingly similar to Steven Wayne Benson," Sheriff's Lt. Harold Young said in an arrest affidavit.

Man Charged In Family's Murder

PORT ST. LUCIE (UPI) — Police in Port St. Lucie issued two arrest warrants Friday, charging James Brown with the first-degree murder of his wife and 2-year-old son.

Brown, 37, confessed to Savannah police Thursday that he killed his wife, Carolyn, and three children and dumped their bodies in Belle Glade, and along Interstate 95 in Georgia.

Brown told officers he left the bodies of his 10-year-old daughter, Sheketa, and 6-year-old son, Barry, near Interstate 95 in Glynn County between Brunswick and the Florida line.

Police in both states have not been able to find any bodies, but the search is continuing, police said.

Tit For Tat: Moscow Expels 25 Britons

MOSCOW (UPI) — The British embassy said today the Soviet Union expelled 25 Britons in retaliation for Britain's expulsion of 25 Soviet officials, identified as KGB agents by the defecting chief of Soviet intelligence in London.

British Ambassador Sir Bryan Cartledge told reporters he was called to the Foreign Ministry and informed by Vladimir Suslov, head of the second European Department, that the Britons — including 18 diplomats, five journalists and two businessmen — had three weeks to leave Moscow.

Suslov said the move was in response to the expulsion Thursday of 25 Soviets, including six diplomats, named by London KGB Bureau Chief Oleg Gordievski whose defection was announced the same day.

Cartledge said Suslov called the expulsion of the Soviet officials "hostile and malicious" and informed him they would expel the Britons "for acting in a way incongruous with their duties here."

"I told Dr. Suslov that the charges were totally unjustified and without foundation," Cartledge said.

Among the expelled British diplomats were three first secretaries, two second secretaries and other embassy staff.

The reporters included a correspondent from the British news agency Reuters, the British Broadcasting Corp. and the Daily Telegraph newspaper.

Gordievski held the rank of counsellor at the Soviet Embassy and British officials said he recently became head of the KGB's important London bureau.

private farmer-owned, cooperative Farm Credit System, which is large enough to be the nation's fourth largest bank and holds one-third of the nation's farm debt.

The first morning of hearings featured about 20 members of Congress, all outlining the problem or suggesting solutions to the farm credit crisis.

Last week, Donald Wilkinson, governor of the Farm Credit Administration, said federal help would be needed within 18 to 24 months.

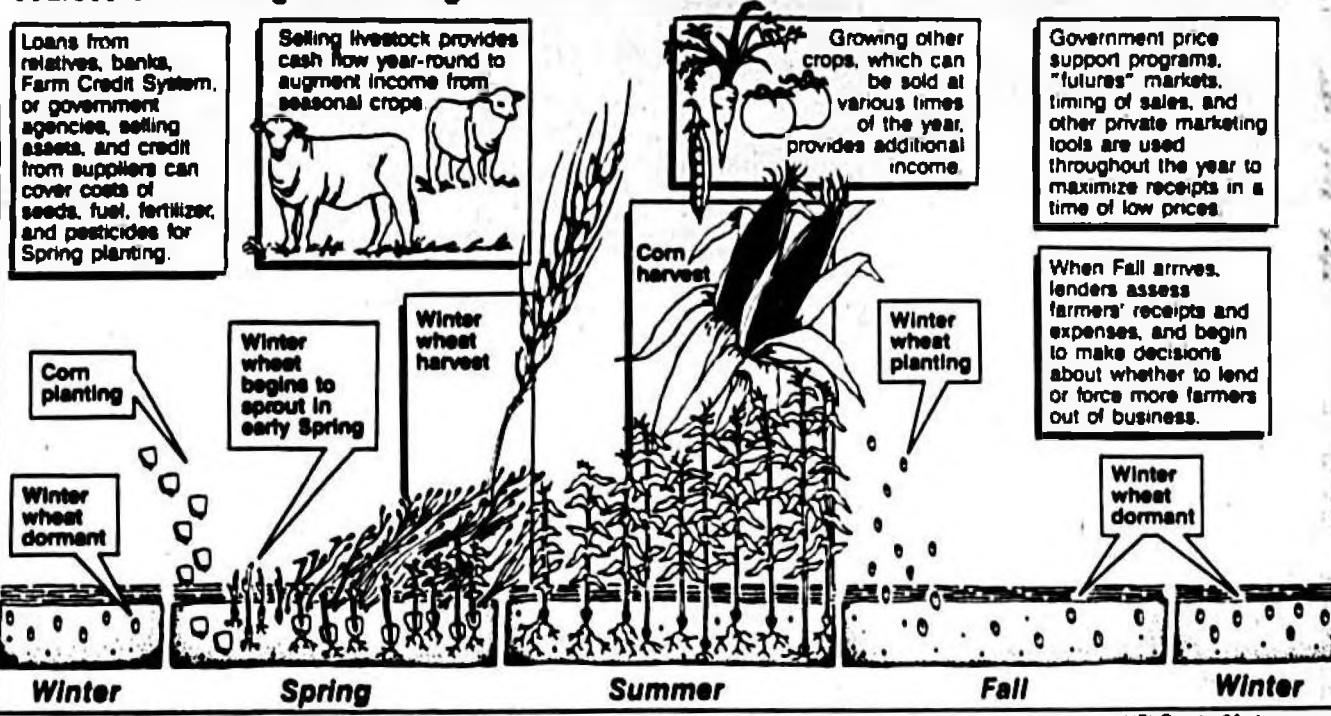

Lack of bipartisan action to solve the problem within six to eight months "will make the 1930s look like a mere seasonal adjustment," said Rep. Ron Marlenee, R-Mont.

Rep. Cooper Evans, R-Iowa, who has been insisting for months that a federal effort was needed to save the Farm Credit System, said the system's reluctance to seek help has been at the expense of farmers.

Evans blamed the system's financial problems on its having set out in the 1970s to monopolize agricultural lending with aggressive practices and by being so slow to turn to Congress for help.

He also charged the ad-

"The administration and the Congress must act now," he said. "We are already at least six months too late."

...Bond

businesses and other civic organizations.

Said Mrs. Morris, "Our first priority will be to educate the voters of Seminole County about the need for this bond issue. Our county has one of the fastest growing school age populations in the state. In the next five years it is projected that the school age population in Seminole County will swell by more than 6,000 students. This money will go to improve our existing 41 schools and to buy property for new ones. What has really impressed me about this proposal (bond issue) is that our property taxes will not increase for the first four years of the bond and could even decrease in the following years."

After the four-year "deferred payment" period, said Mrs. Morris, the cost of the bond would then be absorbed by the increase in population (and increased tax base from new construction) anticipated for the county. Most of that population will be younger and, she said, those are the people who should be paying for school improvements because those young couples are the folks who will be bringing school-age children to the county.

Karen Coleman, spokesman for the school board, said there are only three alternatives for future growth in the school system. "We can either sit back and do nothing and let construction plans wait; or we can vote for property tax increases and pay for construction in a piecemeal fashion; or voters can approve this bond issue and have the property tax rate stay at the present $1.50 per $1,000 assessed property value for the next four years."

The most important use for the money, according to Mrs. Coleman, will be the improvement of existing facilities, (such as adding kitchens, lunchrooms and auditoriums) and the purchase of property for a new high school. She said 50 acres is needed for construction of a new high school and that real estate is becoming increasingly expensive in the county and tracts of that size are hard to find.

Another needed project, said Mrs. Coleman, is a district service center for centralizing maintenance and transportation. That project, already approved by the board, will cost $6 million.

"We can't afford to do nothing about our schools," Mrs. Coleman said. "This bond issue will allow us to keep schools up to date for at least five years or until the new growth catches up to us. We are compelled to put this issue before the voters of Seminole County to permit them to make this important decision. That is why the work of the steering committee is so vital."

have systems like one Mann proposes. "If museums can do it, I don't see why a city couldn't do it," he said.

Old-time trolleys can be picked up for about $35,000. Add $20,000 for switching equipment and fill in a few blank spots in Sanford's existing railroad tracks, with overhead wiring added at $5 a foot, and Sanford would be home to a tourist attracting trolley, he said.

Mann is gearing up to present his idea to city officials but he isn't sure just when he'll make his pitch.

"We can have a modern system by beginning with a tourist attraction by adding 3,000 to 4,000 feet of track downtown from the Civic Center to City Hall," he said. "From there it would turn south toward First Street and west of Sun Bank is an old railroad right-of-way.

"The nucleus would be a tourist attraction, with historic cars and everything at a bargain basement price.

"At first it might be just for weekend excursions and then could expand to the concrete plant on Third Street. Beyond that plant is a little used railroad right-of-way that goes southwest and crosses French Avenue at Scotty's and onto the park on Ninth Street. Then the track is abandoned for 1,000 feet and picks up in Goldsboro. At that point if you get the right to use that track and add 1,000 feet the 'museum' line would become a mass transit line," Mann said.

That would link Goldsboro, a predominantly black area, to downtown, and Mann said blacks are traditionally heavy users of mass transit.

The system at that point would be a mix of a romantic ride through downtown for joyriders and a practical way for some to travel into town, he said.

Ten years down the track, Mann said, the Goldsboro link might extend on the tracks that run to 25th Street and cut into the Seaboard Railroad main line at Airport Boulevard. There a park-and-ride station might be added, allowing motorists to park their cars and ride the trolley into the business district.

"As Sanford grows parking is going to be more and more a premium," Mann said.

With that link into the Seaboard rails it would be a small feat for Sanford's trolley to roll on to Orlando's airport, he said.

atop a giant SS-9 rocket booster.

Administration officials dismissed the Soviet threat, arguing that Moscow has had its own working ASAT since 1977.

In a send-off meeting for U.S. negotiators, President Reagan challenged the Soviets Friday to turn their hints of substantial arms reductions into "concrete proposals" at the next round of talks in Geneva, Switzerland.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said the negotiators are permitted "to discuss" space defense weapons in Geneva. "We believe the ASAT (defense) can be an incentive to reach agreements."

But critics have charged the ASAT tests will fuel the arms race with the Soviets and carry it into space — a theme made familiar in arguments against the vastly more complex "Star Wars" defense program. A federal judge in Washington refused a plea Thursday by members of Congress and a group of scientists to stop the test.

"Today's needless ASAT test is a prelude to an arms race in space," said Rep. George Brown, D-Calif., one of the most outspoken opponents of the test. Brown added the test "may be a fatal blow for the Geneva summit meeting."

Howard Ris, executive director of the Union of Concerned Scientists, said, "The U.S. didn't just shoot down a satellite today — we shot ourselves in the foot.

The ASAT test could ignite an arms race in space which ultimately will weaken U.S. security."

The industry reported the sales surge earlier in terms of the number of units sold, not dollars taken in.

When measured by the number of additional cars sold, the buying spree was an even more dramatic turnaround, accelerating sales by more than 70 percent over a similar period a year earlier.

Department stores also had a good month, increasing sales by 3.3 percent after July's 1.1 percent increase.

The category of construction supplies stood still, however, showing no improvement at all after several months in which it was the strongest sector of retail sales.

Sales climbed only a weak 0.2 percent in July and would have been up only 0.4 percent in August were it not for the auto boom.

However, some analysts warned that past experience with special automobile incentive programs has shown that the industry often pays a price for the improvement — slower sales when the incentives end. In this case that could hurt the introduction of 1986 models unless the special deals are extended.

Apopka Dominates Rams, 21-0

By Chris Flister
Herald Sports Writer
APOPKA — Desperately seeking muscle.

That's what Lake Mary's Rams may be doing after being totally overpowered by Apopka's Blue Darters Friday night.

Apopka dominated the line of scrimmage both offensively and defensively, and Charles Dowdell allied through the rain and the Rams' defense for 152 yards rushing as the Darters roared to a season-opening 21-0 victory before 5,000 fans at Apopka High.

"They were just too good for us," explained coach Harry Nelson after the Rams fizzled in the drizzle. "If we played them 10 times we might upset them once. We took a lickin', but we're going to try to keep on tickin'."

Lake Mary will have to do a lot more tickin' in its next outing as it goes up against DeLand in a District 5A-4 matchup. The Rams will certainly need more than the 46 yards rushing and 60 yards passing they were held to by the Darters. Lake Mary was without sophomore John Curry who Nelson said had a "slightly" sprained ankle.

Meanwhile, Apopka coach Chip Gierke said he was disappointed in how sloppy his team performed. The Blue Darters battle Winter Park next week in a District 5A-5 game.

"We can't beat Winter Park if we play like we did tonight," Gierke said. "We were awful sloppy. Some of it may have been due to the conditions, but overall, I was still a little disappointed."

Outside of Dowdell's 152 yards, Apopka had just 71 more yards of total offense. Gierke also wasn't pleased with the seven penalties for 85 yards his team committed.

Apopka did all of the damage in the first half while Lake Mary managed just three first downs, two of those coming on Apopka penalties, and never drove any further than the Apopka 47-yard line.

Ray Hartsfield took the opening kickoff for Lake Mary, found a nice little hole and bursted out to the 35. After a two-yard gain by Brett Mollie, quarterback Shane Letterio was sacked for a 10-yard loss. But a facemask penalty on the play gave the Rams a first down on their own 44.

After a run for no gain on first down, Letterio dropped back to pass on second. He was looking for Hartsfield but the senior slotback slipped and Apopka's Earl Clayton stepped in for the interception and returned it to the Lake Mary 37.

The Darters then put the ball in Dowdell's hands on five consecutive plays and the fifth was a four-yard touchdown run with 8:08 left in the first quarter. Dowdell also had runs of 5, 12, 6 and 10 yards on the drive.

The snap for the conversion kick was bad and kicker Scott Reynolds was smothered trying to run for the two points.

On its next possession, Lake Mary lost 11 yards on two plays. Mollie bulled for 10 yards on third down but it wasn't enough for the first down. Bobby Culppepper then shanked the first of a few punts on the night. The punt went for 24 yards and Apopka took over at the Lake Mary 43.

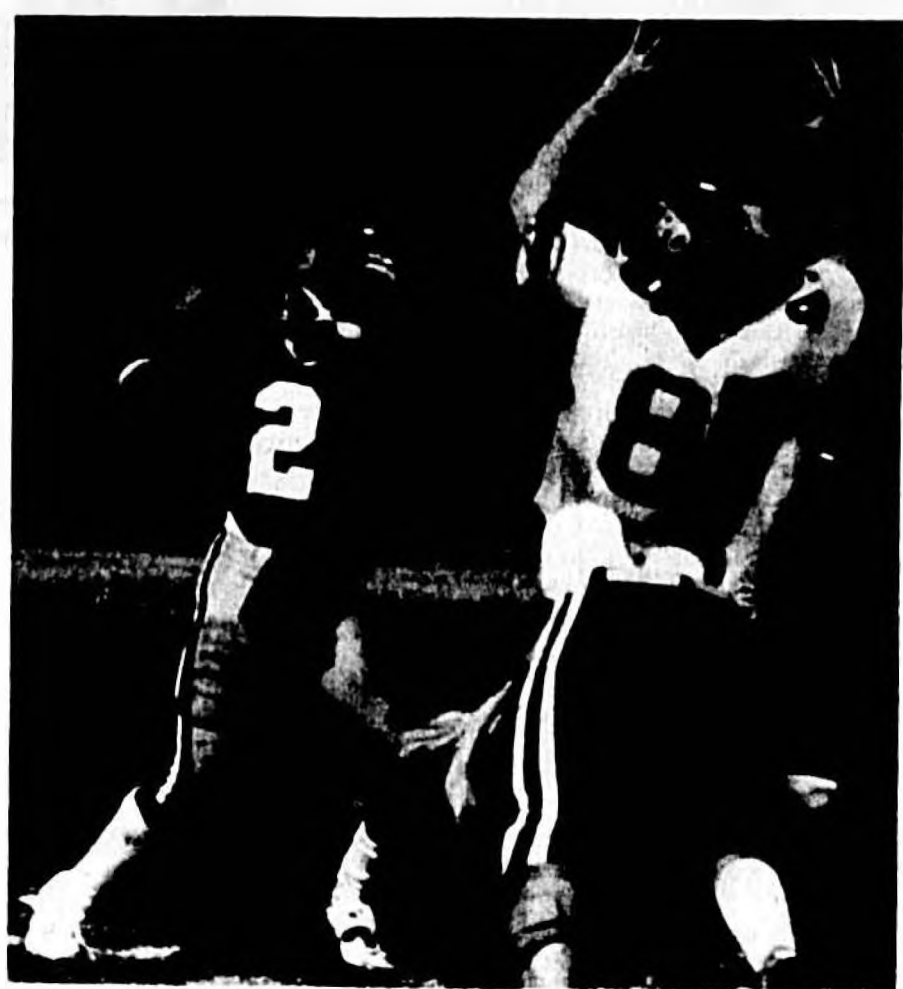

Apopka couldn't get anything going and Kevin King punted the ball to the Lake Mary 11. Again, the Rams couldn't budge the Apopka defense and Culppepper was called on to punt. This time, he let loose with a 35-yarder but Clayton ran it back 13 yards to the Lake Mary 38.

The Darters went right back to Dowdell as the 5-11, 188-pound senior gained four yards on first then burst for 11 on second down. A bobbled snap by Usarey and a run for no gain gave Apopka a third and 10 on the Lake Mary 27.

Usarey then got good protection and he lofted a pass in the direction of Keith Johnson. Johnson ran under the pass and leaped up between two defenders to grab the ball and he fell into the end zone for a touchdown. Usarey then passed to Dowdell for the two-point conversion as Apopka took a 14-0 lead with 31 seconds left in the opening quarter.

After the kickoff, Lake Mary got one first down before being forced to punt. But the Rams got the ball back when a Darter ran into Culppepper for a roughing

Astronaut Turns Tribe Mistakes Into 24-0 Win

By Sam Cook
Herald Sports Editor

Pick a mistake. Any mistake. Fumbles? There were six. Interceptions? There were three. Blow coverages? There were two. Penalties? There were seven.

Mistakes — wet ones and dry ones — were the undoing of Seminole's Fighting Seminoles Friday night as they lost a 24-0 decision to Titusville Astronaut in the opening football game of the season before a rain-drenched 2,500 fans at Seminole High's Stadium.

"We mistaked our way right out of the game," Seminole coach Dave Mosure said about his debut. "How many passes did we drop? We even dropped kickoffs."

The Seminoles dropped their share of each but another big factor was something both coaches deemed critical before the game — the early score.

"I thought we would be in for a four-quarter barnburner," Astronaut coach Jay Donnelly said. "But that early score was the difference. Then, the weather (rain) was the difference."

Mosure agreed. "That quick score was the positive factor that we needed," he said. "When they got it, it was a confidence builder for them."

And the War Eagles got it in a hurry. Wilber Rodwell returned the opening kickoff to the

Football

Astronaut 26, then ran for a yard to the 27. Greg Hovis, who led all rushers with 78 yards in 12 tries, followed on a trap play which he broke for 30 yards to the Seminole 43.

The crusher was next. War Eagle quarterback Clark Cook faked into the line and dropped back to throw. Hubert Williams had slipped behind two Seminole defenders. Cook tossed a high strike and Williams gathered it in to complete a 43-yard scoring play. Roy DeYoung kicked the PAT with 10:37 left in the first quarter for a 7-0 lead.

"They looked for us to run and we just went up top," Donnelly said. "Cook laid it right on the money."

While the War Eagles' strike came quickly, Seminole went about its first possession with methodical precision. Fullback Eddie Banks picked up three. Wayne Willis slashed for five and Willie Evans bolted for three and a first down at the Seminole 36.

An offside penalty stalled the progress but sophomore Curtis Rudolph powered for eight yards and Willis took a pitch and bounced off two

Smith Turns Out Lights On Patriots

Lions Recharge After Power Failure For First SAC Victory

By Tim Horn
Special to the Herald

Head coach Fred Almon will probably see to it that his Lake Brantley Patriots never again open up another football season at home on a Friday the 13th. If Almon ever had reason to believe in the old superstition that this one day is an omen of bad luck, it would certainly be now.

Everything that could possibly go wrong for a team in its own stadium did Friday night as the Oviedo Lions and fullback Andrew Smith surprised the Patriots, 21-7, in the first game of the new Seminole Athletic Conference at Lake Brantley's Tom Storey Field.

Field conditions were miserable throughout the game due to a steady rainfall and early during the second quarter, with the game still scoreless, an area-wide power outage turned the whole stadium into sudden pitch darkness.

"We were so emotionally high before the lights went out," said Lake Brantley head coach Fred Almon. "When the lights went out, so did we. I can see they just wanted the game more than we did."

The blackout lasted for 40 minutes and although Lake Brantley did score a quick touchdown when the game resumed for a 7-0 lead, the interruption seemed to have an effect on the Patriots as Oviedo totally outplayed them from that point on to earn a rather surprisingly easy victory.

Leading the Lions charge was senior Smith, who was virtually unstoppable in the second half. Smith wound up with 194 yards rushing — 179 in the second half — on 28 carries and scored 2 touchdowns.

He said he wasn't surprised at all with such an outstanding performance in the type of field conditions that existed. "No I'm not surprised, I have a lot of confidence in myself," he said. "But I couldn't have done it without my offensive line. All the credit goes to them. Those guys opened up all the holes for me. My coaches get a lot of credit too, they are really great."

Smith said the win will give the Lions a real boost now.

"All we needed was a win like this over a strong team like Lake Brantley to lift us up. We are on the move forward now," he said.

Oviedo head coach Jack Blanton, who was an assistant coach at Lake Brantley for seven years, said he was very proud of all the Lion players.

"We played our hearts out tonight," he said. "The players knew that I had coached here for many years so they wanted to win really bad. Everybody did such a good job tonight, I am just so proud of them."

Blanton was especially pleased with Smith's performance.

"He (Smith) can really run the ball, can't he?" Blanton said. "He started to run the ball real well in the last four games of last year so we decided to keep him running in that same type of offense for this year. He just really looked good tonight."

After a turnover-plagued first quarter, Oviedo mounted the first real drive of the game in the second 15 minutes. After an unsuccessful fourth down run by Lake Brantley reserve quarterback Andy Dunn on a fake punt attempt, Oviedo took over at the Lake Brantley 40 yard line. On first down, Oviedo quarterback Jeff Morrow hit wingback Carnelle "Jive" Green for five yards and then Smith broke up the middle on second down for five more and an Oviedo first down at the Lake Brantley 30.

On first down from the 30, Morrow found Green wide open at the 10 yard line and Green was able to either his way down to the five. Two running plays later, Smith was into the end zone.

But the touchdown run was crased due to a clipping penalty which pushed Oviedo back to the 17. Before the next play could be run, with the clock showing 10:19 left to go in the second quarter, the lights went out.

When play was finally able to resume, two incomplete passes forced Oviedo to attempt a 37 yard field goal. But the Oviedo holder, Willie Gainey could not handle the snap and Lake Brantley took over at the 20.

Dunn replaced starter David Dellfacco at quarterback but could not get anything started for Lake Brantley on offense and Dellfacco punted the ball back to Oviedo.

Morrow drove the Lions down into field goal range, but Gordon King missed wide to the right on a 28 yard attempt and the game remained scoreless.

Schnitker Bulls Hawks Past Edgewater, 23-13

By Chris Flister
Herald Sports Writer

Mark Schnitker bulled for 177 yards and two touchdowns Friday night as Lake Howell's Silver Hawks downed Edgewater's Eagles, 23-13, at Orlando's Double E Stadium in what coach Mike Bisceglia said was, "the best opening-game performance since I arrived at Lake Howell."

The Silver Hawks were the only Seminole County team to beat an out-of-county opponent on opening night of the 1985 prep football season. Elsewhere, Seminole was blanked by Titusville Astronaut, 24-0, Lake Mary was shut out by Apopka, 24-0, and Lyman was edged by Boone, 14-7. In the first Seminole Athletic Conference game, Oviedo surprised Lake Brantley, 21-7.

Lake Howell opens play in District 5A-5 next week at home against West Orange.

"We're going to have to work hard and be ready for West Orange." Lake Howell's Terry Gammons said. Gammons was another key player in the Silver Hawks' offensive attack which rolled up 347 total yards, 252 on the ground.

Football

Lake Howell took a 6-0 lead in the opening quarter with the running of Schnitker leading the way. The key play in the drive was a 50-yard run by Schnitker on a draw play. The play started on the Lake Howell 35 and ended on the Edgewater 15.

"Steve Trier (junior center) knocked a guy over backwards," said Hawks' assistant Mike Bouch. "It was pretty, he must have knocked him 10 yards. I can't wait to see that one on the films."

Schnitker finished off the drive with a one-yard touchdown run for a 6-0 Lake Howell lead.

"The strong side of the offensive line was blowing open holes," Schnitker said.

Lake Howell upped its lead to 13-0 in the second quarter when quarterback Mark Walnwright hit glue-fingered slotback Bill Wasson for an 11-yard touchdown pass. Jeff Phillips kicked the extra point.

Edgewater drew to within 13-7 before the first half was over when Mark Franklin broke loose for a 30-yard touchdown run.

Boone's 4th-Quarter Score Extends Lyman Skein To 13

ORLANDO — Turnovers. Penalties. Mistakes.

The three things that make football coaches angry and football players cringe. These were the things that cost Bill Scott's Lyman Greyhounds a victory Friday in their season-opening game against the Boones Braves at Boone High.

"We had a couple of shots in the fourth quarter," Scott said after the game. "But we turned it over and missed a few tackles on the other end."

The setback was the 13th consecutive loss for the 'Hounds who lost all 10 games last year.

Scott said he hopes to fare better next week against Mainland at Daytona Beach when Lyman opens its District 5A-4 schedule.

"All we can do is keep working on our speed, tackling, and (eliminating) turnovers," Scott said. "We moved the ball several times but mistakes kept hurting us."

Football

Halfback Richard Schad, who plowed for 90 yards in 20 carries, and Jerry Clark, who scored both Boone TDs, were too much for the Greyhounds to contain.

Boone took advantage of a fumbled punt by the 'Hounds to set up its first score. Braves' quarterback Clark called on Schad, his bread-and-butter man, time and time again. It was Schad left, Schad right, and Schad up the middle until the ball was on Lyman's one-inch line.

On fourth down, however, Clark call his own number and slipped past a tightening Lyman defense for the score. Ted Kent kicked the PAT and Boone had a 7-0 lead with seven minutes remaining in the quarter.

After a lackluster offensive showing in the first quarter,

Colbert, Sanders Share Lead At Greater Milwaukee Open

FRANKLIN, Wis. (UPI) — Veteran Jim Colbert and young Jeff Sanders are tied for the lead after the first two rounds of the $300,000 Greater Milwaukee Open, but the crowds' attention is on the golfer chasing them.

Colbert and Sanders, a little-known pro, shared the second-round lead Friday at 9-under-par 135. But among the many players bunched behind them is Jack Nicklaus, making his first pro appearance in the GMO.

Nicklaus shot a second-day 69 to go with his opening day 70 on the 7,010 yard Tuckaway Country Club course, which is a par 72, and he was just four strokes back going into today's third round.

Although a lot of golfers were in front of him, the crowds were on Nicklaus' side and he drew the largest galleries of the day.

"I'm in a good spot," Nicklaus said. "There's not that many people ahead of me. I've got a good shot at winning."

Colbert, who led after the first day with a 6-under-par 66, followed with a 3-under-69. Sanders, who had been tied with 11 other players for second after the first round at 68, shot a 5-under 67 to go 9-under.

Greg Twigg, a second-year pro, shot a second-straight 68 and was one shot back at 136.

Another shot back at 7-under 137 were George Burns, with rounds of 69 and 68, and Joey Sindelar, who had 68 and 69.

At 138 were five players including veterans Roger Maltbie and Dan Pooley, who shot a 6-under-par 66 to climb into contention after an opening round of par 72.

Nicklaus easily made the cut, which was at 1-over par 145 along with 71 other players, but his son, Jack II, did not. He had a second-day 73 but finished with with 153.

Tied with the elder Nicklaus at 139 four strokes back were four other players including Andy Bean and Bobby Clampett.

REINHARDT LEADS LPGA

KENT, Wash. (UPI) — If Alexandra Reinhardt remains this calm and collected, she may do some big-time collecting in a $200,000 LPGA tournament.

Reinhardt fired a 1-under-par 71 Friday to take sole possession of first place with a two-round total of 6-under-par 138, one shot better than LeAnn Cassaday, who carded a 3-under-par 69 in the second round.

Reinhardt, who had seven birdies in the opening round, sank a 15-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole Friday to drop below par for the round. She recorded four birdies and three bogeys for the round.

"All in all, I'm just pleased I didn't skyrocket," said Reinhardt, an 11-year LPGA veteran. "Whenever I made a bogey, I was able to come back and get a birdie to cancel it out. I had some good birdie opportunities I missed."

the kicker penalty. That gave Lake Mary a first down on its own 46. In two plays, the Rams lost one yard and a third down pass from Letterio to Byron Washington was not enough for the first down. Culpepper's next punt went off the side of his foot and out of bounds. The distance was nine yards. Later, he would shank another one, this time for six yards.

"Our specialty teams didn't do very well at all," Nelson said.

The teams traded possessions before Apopka took over again on its own 25 with 5:20 left in the first half. And the Darters went right back in Dowdell. With runs by Dowdell of 10, 12, 14 and 13 yards paving the way, Apopka drove down to the Lake Mary 21 with 2:50 left in the half. Ussrey then hooked up with Johnson for a 13-yard gain to the eight. On the next play, Dowdell bolted for an eight-yard TD. Reynolds added the conversion kick for a 21-0 Apopka lead with 2:00 left in the half.

Lake Mary then chose to run out the clock and not give Dowdell another chance to get his hands on the ball.

Early in the second half, Lake Mary had its longest single gain of the night when Letterio found Washington down the sideline for 40 yards. That gave the Rams a first down on the Apopka 38, but Ray Hartsfield was dropped for an eight yard loss on first down and two incomplete passes by Letterio ended the drive.

Most of the rest of the half was played between the 30 yard lines as the only scoring threat was put together by the Rams late in the third quarter.

With a 10-yard run by Letterio and a 10-yard pass from the junior signal caller to Anthony Hartsfield leading the way, Lake Mary got down to the Apopka 26 yard line. A personal foul penalty against the Darters put the Rams on the 11.

Molle then went for four yards to the seven but Letterio was dropped for a loss on second down. Letterio's third-down pass was incomplete and he came up short of the first down on a fourth-down keeper. That put an end to the last ray of hope Lake Mary had for a comeback.

"We didn't execute very well tonight," Nelson said. "The guys messed up on our best chances."

The Rams' leading rushers for the game were Letterio and Molle, who both gained 26 yards on nine carries.

In the passing department, Letterio completed 4 of 16 for 60 yards and was intercepted once in his varsity debut.

Slack, Lantrip Aid UCF Win

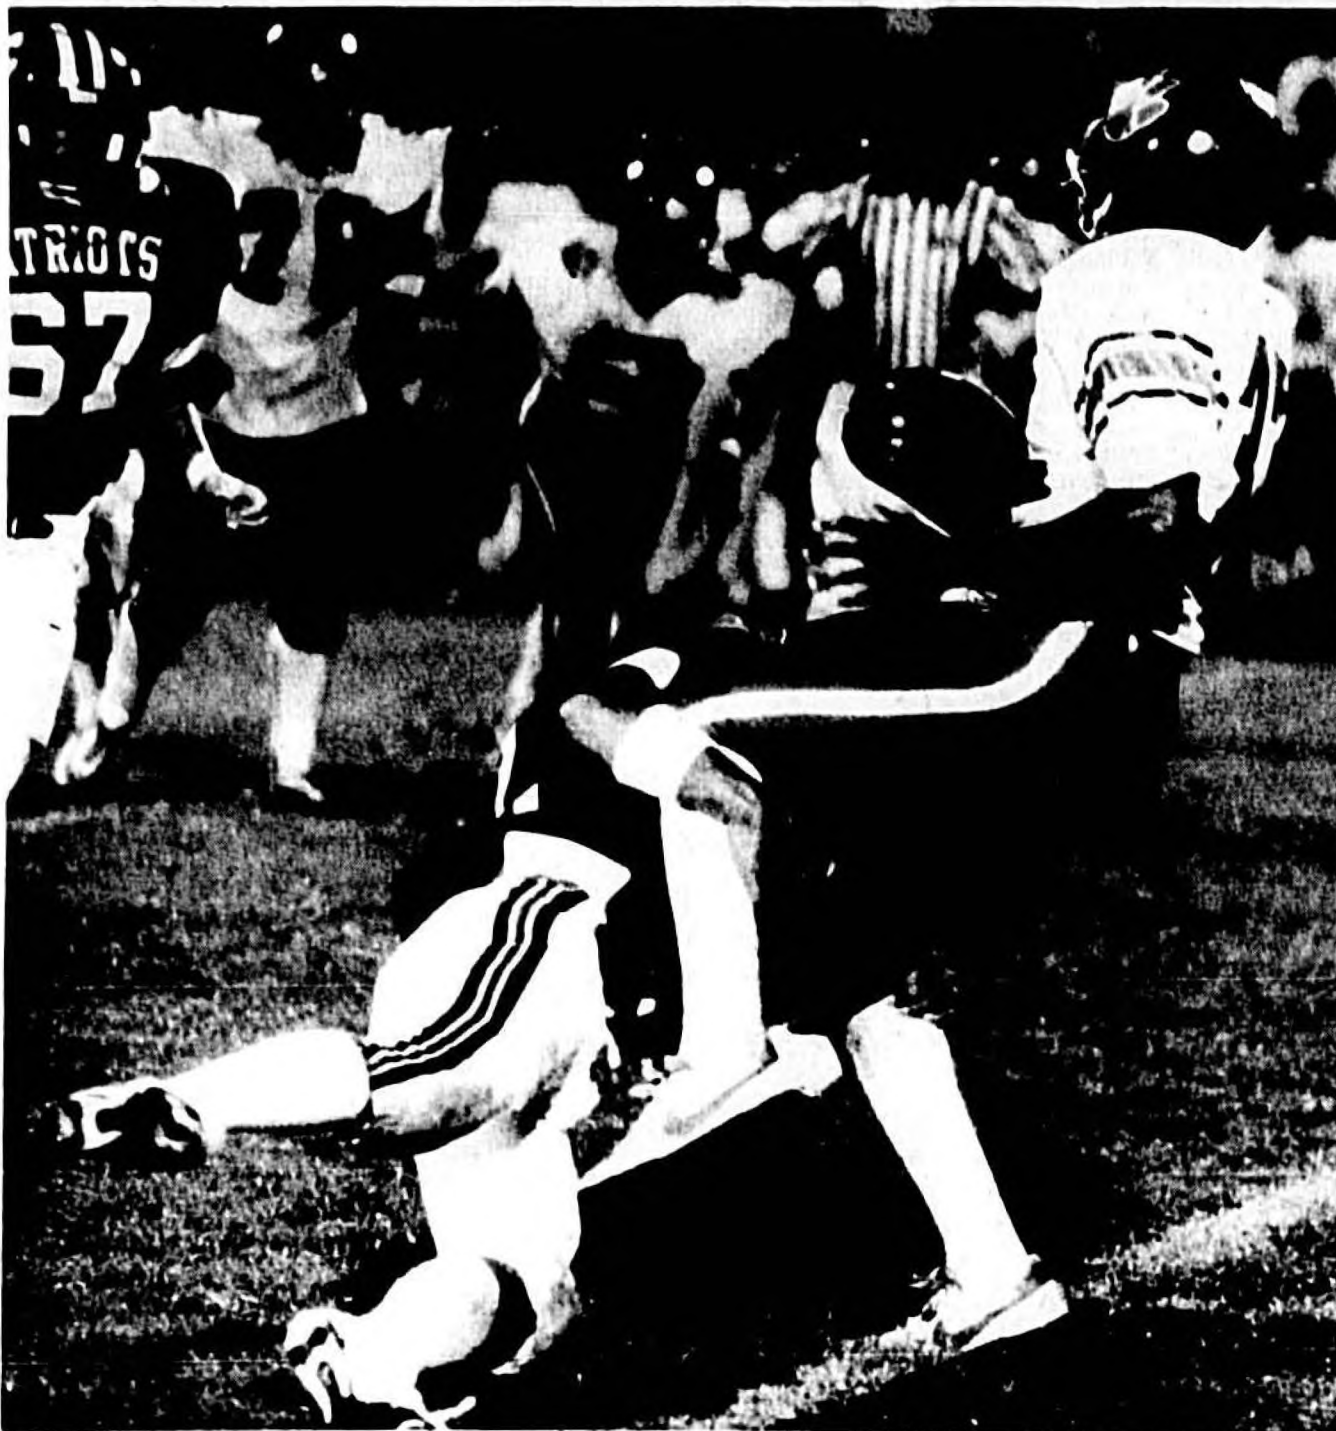

ORLANDO — The University of Central Florida Knights bolted to a 24-7 lead then held off a closing run by Southeastern Louisiana to post a 27-21 victory Friday night in college football at Orlando Stadium before 7,142 fans.

The victory was the second in a row for first-year coach Gene McDowell's Fighting Knights and improved their record to 2-0. UCF now has a week off before going to Normal, Ill. to play Illinois State.

Elgin Davis scored on a three-yard run in the first quarter for a 7-0 lead. Poe White slipped in from four yards out and Eddie O'Brien booted the PAT for a 14-0 lead.

After SEL rebounded for a score, backup QB Darin Slack hurled a 35-yard scoring strike to former Lake Brantley standout Mac Lantrip. Slack played at Lake Howell High. O'Brien added the PAT and later kicked a 34 yard field goal for a 24-7 halftime lead.

O'Brien booted a 25 yard field goal with 3:06 left in the third quarter to complete the UCF scoring.

Secondary Is First Concern For Bennett

Football

TAMPA (UPI) — The secondary is first in the mind of new Tampa Bay Coach Leeman Bennett heading into Sunday's game against the Minnesota Vikings.

Bennett's regular-season debut as Buccaneers coach ended in disappointment last Sunday as Chicago overcame a 28-17 halftime deficit en route to a 38-28 triumph. Jim McMahon completed 23-of-34 passes for 274 yards and two touchdowns against the Buccaneers and Bennett doesn't like the passive play of his defensive backs.

"Our corners at times played without confidence," said Bennett. "They didn't challenge the receivers enough, almost as if they were afraid of getting beat."

The Vikings' secondary enjoyed a spectacular opening week, keying a 28-21 upset of San Francisco. Strong safety Joey Browner had three of five fumble recoveries by Minnesota and cornerback Rufus Bess forced three fumbles, recovered one and added an interception to earn NFC Defensive Player of the Week honors. The Vikings, outgained 489-268 in total yardage, forced seven turnovers from the NFL champions.

"It gave me a good feeling," says Minnesota Coach Bud Grant of the stunning victory. "It not only gave the players a lot of confidence, but establishes the credibility of the coaching staff with the players. I realize it was a victory over the team that won the Super Bowl, but it's not something we're going to dwell on because you don't live in the past."

The Buccaneers, field-goal favorites for the 4 p.m. EDT game, played perhaps the best opening half in franchise history at Soldier Field.

James Wilder, who finished with 166 yards against the Bears' punishing defense, ran between the tackles with abandon and Steve DeBerg threw a pair of TD passes. The offense self-destructed after intermission with turnovers and penalties.

"Too many mental errors happened in that second half," Bennett said. "Still, we should have gained some confidence from moving the ball quite well at times against the league's No. 1 defense last year. Minnesota did something Sunday that only Pittsburgh could achieve last year."

Top draft choice Ron Holmes, hobbled by an Achilles tendon injury suffered a month ago, will get his first start at right defensive end for the Buccaneers. Wilder, who needs just 14 yards to surpass Ricky Bell as the top rusher in club history, is nursing a bruised shoulder but will play.

...Lyman

Lyman began to move the ball in the second quarter after safety Scott Radcliff picked off a Clark pass at the Boone 44 yard line. Radcliff, just a sophomore, later picked off a pass in the fourth quarter.

A series of runs by junior Robert Thomas, moved the ball to all the way to the Braves' 10 yard line. But, a penalty on the last run put the ball on the 20.

After the penalty, though, quarterback Darren Boyesen took the drive into his own hands. The 165-pound junior tossed a seven yard pass to Thomas and followed up with a 13-yarder to Tony Williams for the clinching touchdown. Kelly Greene kicked the PAT for a 7-7 deadlock.

The remainder of the second and third quarters was a typical defensive dog fight. A few turnovers here and a couple of bone-crushing sacks by defensive end Ted Smith kept the game close for the 'Hounds. Lyman collected five sacks for the night but Clark produced when needed for the Braves.

And it was needed midway through the fourth quarter. After a spearing penalty aided Boone's final drive, Clark eventually knifed into the end zone from two yards out to give Boone the win. Kent again added the PAT for a 14-8 lead with just 6:03 remaining.

Lyman had two drives thwarted in the final six minutes on a penalty and a fumble.

Thomas finished with 70 yards on 21 carries. Eddie Brown, who was hampered by a sore shoulder, chipped in 16 yards on three tries. Boyesen completed 6 of 14 passes for 57 yards and one TD. Thomas also caught two passes for 37 yards.

...Lions

moved the ball up to the 40, tailback Cornelius Friendly broke loose around the left side and outraced the entire Oviedo secondary to the end zone for a 60-yard touchdown with 2:36 left in the first half. DeLacoco's point after attempt was good and the Patriots had the lead.

But Oviedo came right back to tie the game on a methodically well-engineered 55 yard drive in seven plays by Morrow that ended with Smith scoring from three yards out on the last play of the half. King's successful extra point made it 7-7.

Whether the reason may have been this touchdown-answering drive by the Lions right before the half or the delay in the game, Lake Brantley was never in the game in the second half. Morrow scored on a quarterback keeper from one yard out midway through the third quarter to increase the Oviedo lead to 14-7 and then Smith added the final score of the game on a four yard run with just over two minutes left in the third.

"We are going to have to work harder next week and see if we can bounce back from this loss," Almon said. "We just have to step over it and keep going."

Both the Lions and the Patriots will play difficult opponents next week. Oviedo will play host to Daytona Beach Seabreeze next Friday while Lake Brantley will travel to Orlando Evans.

...Hawks

John Stoll added the conversion kick.

A 30-yard field goal by Phillips was the only scoring in the third quarter and that gave the Silver Hawks a 23-13 lead going into the fourth.

Gammons was the key figure in the Hawks final scoring drive and it proved to be the one that put the finishing touches on the Eagles.

On a third and long, Gammons picked up 30 yards on a screen play from Wainwright to get the Hawks into scoring position at one yard line. Schnitker ran it in from the one and Phillips added the kick for a 23-7 lead.

"It really closed the door," Bouch said. Edgewater would score one more time, on a one-yard run by William Harris, but it was too little too late against a Lake Howell prevent defense.

Behind Schnitker's 177-yard performance, Gammons picked up 28 yards on five carries and Dan Chisholm carried seven times for 20 yards. Gammons was also on the receiving end of three passes for 55 yards while Wasson caught two for 19 and Craig Derrington nabbed two for 15. Wainwright completed 7 of 10 passes for 95 yards.

Defensively, Craig Wagner had six solo tackles and Jeff Harris five.

...Mistakes

tacklers for 13 yards and a first down at the 48.

Sophomore quarterback Jeff Blake then whipped a look-in pass to tight end Sonny Osborn for eight. Rudolph picked up another first down with five more to the Astronaut 35.

Willis picked up two yards on first down but Blake then threw two incompletions. On fourth and eight, Blake zipped another quickie to Osborn. The hard-running junior broke a tackle and then dragged another defender along, fighting valiantly for the first down. He was two feet shy and Astronaut took over at its 26.

Neither team threatened the rest of the quarter until Seminole's Dave Rape made a nice diving grab on a Blake aerial as time ran out at the Seminole 35. Two plays later, though, Blake was intercepted by Rodwell who returned it to the Seminole 36.

Joe Britt turned the corner for 23 yards to the 13 on first down. The Tribe defense, however, stiffened at this point as linebackers Brian Brinson and Rick Kelly made stops on Britt. Cook then fired incomplete.

On fourth down, DeYoung came on to try a 30 yard field goal. His kick was short and to the left but Seminole was flagged for an offsides. Given a reprieve and five yards closer to his target, DeYoung cashed in with 9:15 left in the half for a 10-0 lead.

"We didn't even have a block on," Mosure moaned about the penalty. "That was a big mental mistake."

Midway through the second quarter the rain started to come down and with it came the War Eagles' first big mistake. With just 50 seconds left in the half, a bad snap on a punt resulted in Seminole's first good field position.

Starting at the Astronaut 23, Blake threw incomplete before scrambling for 13 yards to the 10 Impossible Dream?

Scripts Are Written, Music Is Scored, But The Players Have No Place To Play

By Susan Loden
Herald Staff Writer

Joan Wahl is a Winter Springs playwright, producer and actress with a dream for youngsters — a theater for children she'd like to bring to life in Seminole County.

It's a dream that Ms. Wahl, with a degree in theater from the University of Miami, brought with her when she moved from Winter Park about seven years ago. And it's a dream shared by a troop of about 20 adult actors who are just waiting in the wings to be called to the boards to perform for children.

The scripts are written, the music scored, marionettes and puppets have been readied to come to life in fantasy. The only problem is the players have no place to play.

The non-profit theater group with volunteer actors, playwrights and producers has been unsuccessful in its search for a space large enough to hold Ms. Wahl's portable marionette theater that takes up about a 10-by-12-foot space, with additional room for an audience of about 100 children and with restrooms. About 3,000 square feet is needed, Ms. Wahl said.

"It could be anywhere, but I was thinking it would be especially good in Seminole County which really doesn't have much in the way of arts," she said.

Ms. Wahl who as a youngster in upper New York state ran a summer theater in her father's barn, said a barn would make a fine theater for children, or even an abandoned storefront.

Schools and churches are out, Ms. Wahl said, because they can't provide a permanent setting for the theater and schools charge a $40 fee for a single use of an auditorium, plus a custodian's fee. Impossible conditions for Ms. Wahl's dream.

She said she envisions a year-round theater program with three shows scheduled for each Saturday and maybe the same on Sunday, with evening rehearsals. Something that can't be done in a temporary setting, she said. The shows would change monthly.

Ms. Wahl said she isn't proposing a children's theater, where children play the bulk of the roles, but a theater for children, where youngsters will tear themselves away from the television to be treated by a live performance by adult actors, or child actors if the script calls for youngsters. Puppets made by Ms. Wahl and a troop of 23 marionettes, which she bought from the estate of a man who used to travel the country performing with the marionettes, can be called on to entertain and enchant.

The marionette troop is dressed in 18th and 19th century costumes, with such characters as a princess, a king, a witch, a woodcutter — all needed to bring traditional fairy tales to life. But Ms. Wahl said she sees the marionettes breaking out of their traditional roles to act in contemporary plays as well as fairy tales.

"I think it would be very different to bring them into the future," she said. "Of course we would still do the old favorites. We can't do Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs. There are just too many dwarfs."

Clowns and mimes would also be showcased in the theater, which Ms. Wahl sees as an alternative to violent television programming.

"I'm unhappy with what's on television for kids, a lot of blood. There has to be an alternative," she said. "I know parents I talk to and women's groups — they love the idea but they don't want to do anything about it."

"How many things are geared to children on television? They're watching blood and guts and fighting. It's pretty bad. Mothers want something else, but so far they haven't gotten together as a group and said, hey, we want a community theater for our children."

"I've talked to about 60 women, but they're not united as far as gaining sponsors. We need sponsors. Someone to say we love this idea, we'll help you," she said.

Ms. Wahl, who has three grown daughters, said her husband, Sy, doesn't share her interest in the theater. "I think he's a typical man," she said. "The men, the fathers, won't support this. It's simply because they're not interested."

"But if they're interested in

Museum Adds 100-Year-Old Book To Historical Treasures

posters and letters to Lorraine Whiting for exhibit in the Seminole County Historical Museum's county services room.

A 100-year-old book of "WANTED" posters and letters kept by C.J. Anderson, sheriff of what was then Orange County, for the years 1882-1889, has been donated to the Seminole County Historical Museum by Seminole County Sheriff John Polk. This scrapbook, carefully preserved through the years, was presented by Capt. J.Q. (Slim) Galloway on behalf of Sheriff Polk to Lorraine Whiting, curator of the museum.

Mrs. Whiting expressed her gratitude to Sheriff Polk for this historical treasure and noted that the museum will be richer for this contribution to its growing collection of memorabilia of early times in Seminole County. The book will be an exciting addition to the museum's county services room which is devoted to the history of the development of Seminole County's fire and police departments.

The book is a journey back in time to local law enforcement practices and policies of the late nineteenth century. Communication was largely by letter with an occasional telegram. Requests for help in locating "wanted" persons came from all over the United States — from as close as Oviedo and Minnehaha Grove in Maitland to Arkansas and New York City. Many requests came from private detective agencies.

Mrs. Whiting noted that Florida was a popular place not only for escapees but for law enforcement officers as well. One sheriff urged Anderson to hold on to his prisoner until he could get to Florida because he had always wanted to visit there.

Rewards were offered apparently without too much regard for the nature of the crime. Rewards for murderers ranged from $25 to $2,000. The average reward was from $50 to $100 but in all cases a reward seemed to be very helpful in capturing the criminal. A number of letter writers asked what was in it for them if they turned in the "wanted" person.

The accounts of the crimes committed make interesting reading. Only a few of the posters and letters have "captured" written across them by Sheriff Anderson along with the date of capture. One can only wonder about the rest of them.

Descriptions were very detailed since computerized transmission of pictures was far in the future. Not only were distinguishing physical features mentioned such as height, weight, color of hair and eyes but also identifying scars and "mixed up" eyes. Mannerisms were carefully noted. For example, one man was said to "twist his hands continuously," one, "couldn't look people in the eyes" and one "walked with his head stooped downward."

This book will be on display at the "Open House" the museum is giving Oct. 6 from 1-4 p.m. Seminole County residents and visitors are cordially invited to visit the museum at this time. The museum is located in the County Services Center off 17-92 (opposite Flea World).

"Who Succeeds; Who Doesn't"

Losers Have Tunnel Vision; Winners See World In Panavision

By Patricia McCormack
United Press International
Employees who refuse to put in longer hours earn more and feel more successful than workaholics, according to a new survey on success.

The survey — "Who Succeeds; Who Doesn't" — was conducted via questionnaire filled out by 11,000 readers of "Working Woman" magazine and a matching poll of 4,000 mainly male readers of "Success" magazine.

The respondents, most of them categorized as successful or upwardly mobile, also revealed:

— Perfectionists don't advance as far as nonperfectionists, but are happier with their work. Perfectionists hold themselves back by getting lost in a sea of details, frequently missing deadlines.

— Playing hardball is mostly a strategy that gains nothing over people who play fair.

— Women who described themselves as very competitive — and almost as many women as men did (41 to 46 percent) — were over-represented among the rich, the successful and those very satisfied with their work.

— Only 44 percent of women and 45 percent of men listed taking risks as very important to their careers.

— More than half of those who called themselves "basically loyal" to their companies had very successful careers and high work satisfaction. This was true of only a third of those who said they were "free agents."

When asked to cite qualities that made them successful, more than half the respondents listed

'We are often cautioned that if you really want to make it in this world, you have to put work first. Not so, it turns out. Putting career success or making big bucks ahead of such priorities as a good family life or rewarding relationships does not produce greater work success or satisfaction or a higher income for women or men.'

Julia Kagan

hard work, talent or ability, high standards, ambition, perseverance, personality and the need to succeed.

Results of the survey were discussed during an interview with Anne Mollegen Smith, editor-in-chief of "Working Woman," and Julia Kagan, executive editor.

Smith noted that "Working Woman" readers have a median income of $28,800, putting them in the top 10 percent of women earners. Seventy-two percent hold managerial, professional or administrative jobs. Male readers of "Success" are similarly upward bound but, in the typical American pattern, earn more, according to Kagan.

"If you sat next to one of the women at a dinner party, she would identify herself as a journalist or an accountant," Smith said, indicating that they tend to define themselves in terms of their work.

Kagan said the survey was conducted to learn how the women and men viewed success. And if there are sex-linked differences.

"We also looked into some of the strategies people are told to follow to succeed," she asserted.

"We are often cautioned that if you really want to make it in this world, you have to put work first," Kagan said. "Not so, it turns out. Putting career success or making big bucks ahead of such priorities as a good family life or rewarding relationships does not produce greater work success or satisfaction — or a higher income for women or men."

"But the priorities... of the two sexes do differ, with more men indicating money as a priority and more women listing career success," Kagan said.

"Some of these differences may stem from the traditional male emphasis on being the breadwinner. In fact, more men than women surveyed (68 to 50 percent) are married and are likely to feel that pressure."

Kagan said these differences may not be so good for men. "Putting money first, it turns out, could be hazardous to general happiness," she stated.

"Women and men who listed becoming financially well off as their top priority are less satisfied with their lives and with their relationships — if any — than others are. What we can't tell, however, is whether an unhappy life is a cause or an effect of a money-centered ethos."

The survey showed that doing a good job, challenge and self-improvement are top motivations among women. But money and recognition from others also are important.

"In fact, recognition seems far more important to women than to men — perhaps because we still feel we don't get enough of it," Kagan said. "Our 'getting real-rich factor' also is strikingly different. Twice as many men as women are eager to accumulate great wealth."

In a nutshell, according to Kagan, here's what was found about women and success:

"Nice girls succeed; good girls don't," she reported. "Translation: Being a bitch doesn't pay off, but neither does being a martyr. Successful women treat themselves and other people well."

"What's the difference? Success comes down to a question of how you look at things. The good girls, who lose out, have tunnel vision. They don't see much, but what they do see, they study very carefully — too carefully."

"Winners, on the other hand, see the world in Panavision. They get the big picture, which means not getting lost in the details and thinking of the long-term consequences of their actions — not just short-term gains."

their children they should find out what this is about and help us. We will need people to build the stage, people who understand lighting and sound effects and so forth. We'll be looking to the community for help like that," she said.

Ms. Wahl, an artist who for 14 years, along with her husband, has produced the nationally distributed Sunshine Artist magazine, also sees a theater for children as the solution to another problem — the plight of playwrights who have little or no hope of ever seeing their works performed.

Ms. Wahl, who for eight years has been president of the Writers and Playwright's Guild, is constantly being approached by new playwrights with no place to go with their work.

"I keep saying, 'Well, if I had a theater for children you'd see it go on if you write things for children that are different and unique.' I say the same thing to musicians that write," she said.

"The artists need a showcase for their work and the children need to see something new, different, educational and entertaining. We just want to make enough money to pay for some of the sets we build and some of the costumes, but none of the actors get paid."

"I want to focus on what we can do for children and what children can gain from the theater," Ms. Wahl said. "I love children. I also have an education degree and I taught school for 12 years in Orange and Dade counties."

"I started out as a teacher and would introduce theater in my classroom, especially to the children who would stutter. I would put on little plays and believe it or not the stuttering would disappear as they played the witch or whatever."

"It helped them communicate with others. It drew out the shy children. I love children and you see so much abuse going on, and all the things that are happening. I think we need a happy place for them. A place where they could feel at home. A place where they could trust."

"Sitting in front of a television is nothing like sitting a few feet from these live, marionettes or puppets speaking directly to the children. There's magic in the theater."

Teen Tired Of Stretching Truth About Lying Parents

DEAR ABBY: I am 16 and my problem is my parents. I love them both and hope they aren't staying married because of me, because I think they both would be happier if they were divorced.

They lie to each other and they both ask me to lie for them. My mother has several boyfriends, and my father has one ladyfriend that I know about for sure. Neither of my parents knows what the other is doing, but I do. They are not being fair to each other, they are not being fair to me and they are not being fair to the friends they are lying to. I don't know how to handle it.

I need some advice, but please don't say where this is from. Sign me...

TIRED OF LYING

DEAR TIRED: Talk to both parents privately. Tell them that you are tired of lying, and urge them to get counseling so that they can quit lying to each other and asking you to lie for them.

This is heavy load for you to bear alone, so for the good of all, I strongly recommend family counseling. You are a very intelligent 16-year-old, and I admire you for trying to find a solution to this family problem.

DEAR ABBY: The letter from the man who worries whether the staples used in his vasectomy might trip an airport's security alarm reminded me of my problem.

I've been single-breasted since my 1964 mastectomy. Though I've tried various prostheses, the one I'm most comfortable with — don't laugh — is a plastic bag filled with birdseed, tightly closed and encased in a little cotton pouch. (I buy parakeet

The Seminole High School class of 1955 gathered at the Sanora Clubhouse for the 30th class reunion which Donna McTeer describes as "very informal this year with no program."

The 20th class reunion was a 2-day event featuring the traditional program, awards and the works.

Donna said, "We had a good time. We just kind of wanted to do our own thing this year."

About 110 attended the fun event, beginning at 2 p.m. and ending with a barbecue. A band provided music while classmates reminisced.

Roger Garner of Orlando, put together a "then and now booklet" which made a big hit with the class.

Harold Pate, class president from Winter Park, was among those attending.

Jackie Jones Kicks Off Cultural Series

Jackie Jones will kick off the First Annual Cultural Series organized to raise monies for the United Negro College Fund. Ms. Jones, a Gary, Ind. native and graduate of Purdue University, was featured vocalist during last year's UNCF salute to Leadership held at Walt Disney World's Contemporary Hotel.

During that star-studded evening, Ms. Jones joined other major recording artists, Lou Rawls and Bill Davis, Jr., in support of UNCF.

The Cultural Series will continue through December. All performances will be held the second Saturday of each month at 8:00 p.m. at Loch Haven. A $40.00 donation will cover all four performances. Individual performances are $12.50 per evening.

Jackie Jones has to her credit a long list of local, national and international appearances and performances. She has appeared during the Kool Jazz Festival, performed in "Ain't Misbehavin'" at Theatre on Park, starred in "Alive" and "Tin-types" at the Annie Russell Theatre and performed at most major jazz and night spots in the Orlando area. Ms. Jones will appear at the Loch Haven Art Center at 8:00 p.m., on Sept. 14, 1985.

'Getting To Know You' Theme Of ABWA Council's First Gathering

The Central Florida Area ABWA Council of the American Business Women's Association will observe American Business Women's Day on Sept. 21 at the Raddison Hotel-Downtown Orlando, from 10 a.m. to noon. The theme for this first annual celebration will be "Getting to Know You."

The observance, also the anniversary of ABWA's founding in 1949, provides a special occasion to recognize the many contributions that the nearly 48 million working women in the United States have made to the private and public sectors.

Governor Graham has signed a Proclamation declaring Sept. 22 as American Business Women's Day in the State of Florida; as have Mayor Frederick, City of Orlando; and Mayor Raymond Ambrose, City of Altamonte Springs in their respective cities.

The concept for American Business Women's Day grew out of a belief of ABWA's 1981-1982 National Board of Directors that the United States needed a national day which would recognize the achievement of not only ABWA's more than 110,000 members, but all employed women.

A U.S. Senate and House Joint resolution recognizing Sept. 22

as American Business Women's Day was passed in 1983; a proclamation by President Reagan followed the same year.

A National, non-partisan, educational association, ABWA is dedicated to the professional, educational, cultural and social advancement of business women. Currently, the association has more than 110,000 members and 2,100 chapters throughout the United States Puerto Rico.

Member Chapters of the Central Florida Area ABWA Council are: Adventure Charter, Bee Line, Central Florida, City Beautiful, Futura, New Visions, Nu Vistas, Orange Heritage, Orlando Action, Osceola Charter, Seminole Sunrise, Tomorrow's Women, and 21st Century.

WIN AT BRIDGE

By James Jacoby

Our final hand from the 1985 Cavendish Pairs has a bit of everything — bidding gadgets, a closely bid slam and an unusual play that you should learn right now.

The three-diamond bid by North was a mini-splinter, showing four-card heart support, a singleton diamond and a normal-to-sound opening bid. With extra values, North could have made a strong splinter bid of four diamonds. The five-spade response to Blackwood was another special bid, showing two aces plus the queen of the agreed-upon trump suit. After that, South bid six hearts.

West led his partner's suit. East won the ace and returned a spade. East would hardly have played away from the spade king, so declarer rose with the ace. He ruffed the 10 of diamonds, played ace of hearts and the heart 10, overtaking with the jack, and trumped the jack of diamonds.

Now he led back to his king of clubs and drew the last heart with his king. At this point he needed the club finesse, but he had a little extra going for him. He played out his remaining red winners. West either had to discard the spade king or come down to only one club. If that club were the queen, well and good for the declarer.

If not, since South would know the remaining card in West's hand, he would rise with the club ace and maybe catch the doubleton queen in East's hand.

This play is called a pop-up squeeze. West must show up with the club queen. If it doesn't appear, you can assume that East must hold it, and play accordingly.

VIEWPOINT

Evening Herald, Sanford, Fl. Sunday, Sept. 15, 1985—1D

For years, the children of divorce almost always wound up with Mom.
But Florida law changed two years ago and now there are no guarantees.

Who Gets The Kids?

By Deane Jordan
Herald Staff Writer

Child custody is passe, at least in theory, in Florida law.

Gone are the days when kids were awarded to a parent or divided between them like property.

Now the little ones spend most of their time at the "primary residence" but the non-primary resident parent is no longer closed out of the parenting picture.

That change, officially starting in Florida in 1983, is for the better, according to Altamonte Springs attorney Seymour Benson, a leading domestic relations lawyer in Central Florida.

The change in the law reflects how society's views have changed regarding marriage, children and male-female roles, Benson said.

In the past, Benson explained, divorce presented a Florida judge with Solomon's dilemma — who should get the kids when a marriage goes sour, thus setting up one parent symbolically as good and the other as ... well, not so good. Today, the prime question is what is best for the kids so their lives are as untroubled as possible by their parents' problems.

So, many judges get it straight from the horse's mouth, so to speak, asking for psychological testimony during divorces to determine what the children think, feel, and want when their parents are splitting up.

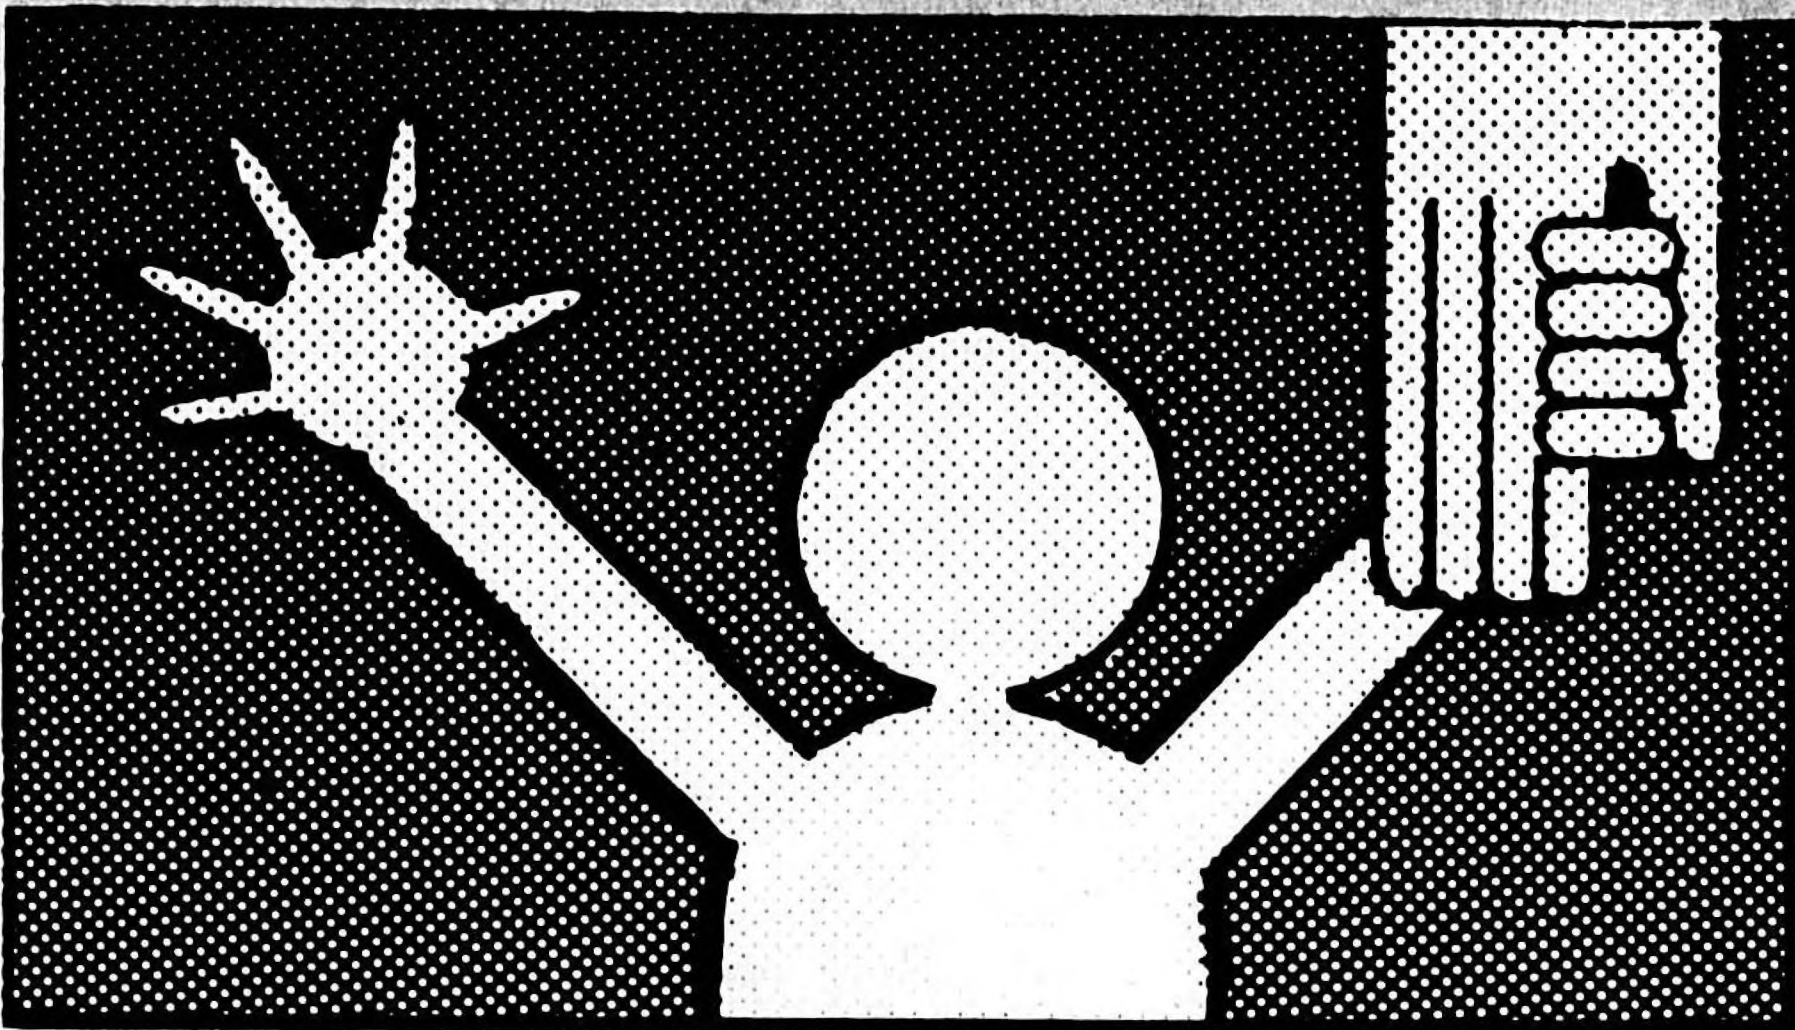

The emphasis on the youngsters and not their folks is logical, Benson said, because if the parents had been able to resolve their problems they probably wouldn't be in divorce court in the first place.

Historically, custody grew out of the common law notion that a man was responsible for his property and thus was obligated to take care of it. In yesteryear, that meant a man's wife and kids were his, literally, and custody was a way of assuring he lived up to the responsibilities of ownership and cared for them.

That's why for years the man almost always got the children when his marriage floundered. But then came the psychologists and their "discovery" of the critical nature of the mother-child bond in a youngster's development. The pendulum swung the other way. It has only been in this century that women routinely have been awarded custody, Benson said, a practice that is firmly established despite the increasingly domestic roles of contemporary man.

Old beliefs die hard and some judges can't stand the thought of separating kids from their mother for any length of time, Benson said.

Benson said the relatively new Florida child custody law not only emphasizes the child's needs but also grants the other parent more rights than under the old custody practice.

Before 1983, non-custody parents had little if any say in how their children were raised and lacked authority to approve medical attention even in emergency situations. The non-custody parent could not influence where his or her child went to school or church. They couldn't even take the youngster to see a doctor if he were ill, Benson said.

Not so any more. According to Florida law, it is the policy of the state to assure each child has frequent and continuing contact with both parents after the parents have separated or divorced. The statute also encourages parents to share the rights and responsibilities of child rearing. Under the statute, fathers are to be given the same consideration as the mother in determining where the child shall spend most of its time, regardless of the child's age.

While the law sounds even-handed, there are a few rubs, Benson said.

Often the kids go with mom, and mom is not the primary wage earner. That's where child support comes in, and alimony.

Benson said many divorced spouses think that by withholding support money, or alimony, they are in some way punishing their former spouse.

No so, he said. Non-support punishes the kids for something they did not do.

Most fathers, he said, do pay child support for about two years, then stop. The Seminole County Courthouse handles about $6 million a year in child-support payments.

And there lies another potential problem. Court personnel are required to monitor child support payments sent through their offices.

It could create a situation in which the former spouse pays the other an allotment directly but could still be hauled into court for non-payment since the clerk of court would have no record of it.

Closely associated with child support is alimony — which has been described by a few wags as the high cost of loving.

There are three types of alimony, Benson said: permanent, rehabilitative and none, the latter popular with many men. And despite what the feminist movement might have made you think, alimony is still an often-sought agreement in divorce cases.

Benson said many wives who changed their life plans need alimony to catch up or get by. And if she has the kids living with her then child support is also called for, Benson said.

While divorce is far more acceptable today than just 20 years ago, it still can be a traumatic time for the children as well as the parents.

"Kids really need a feeling of security up to about the age of 15 or 16," Benson said. "There should be a parent home when the kids get out of school. If there is enough money, that should be accorded."

It's all, at least in part, a byproduct of an affluent society; people can afford divorce, he said. In the past, divorces were the province of the rich. Divorces used to be a rare case in court. Now they clog the system, he said.

Benson said some studies indicate that about 40 percent of a court's time is spent handling divorces. He said that costly situation could be changed by establishing a mediation system to resolve many of the differences before

Also throwing a kink into an already sticky situation is our type of legal system in which each lawyer is obligated to advance his client's cause, thus making an adversarial relationship even more so, Benson said.

As with any legal case, divorce and the determination of children's futures raises ethical questions, especially if one parent is clearly unfit to raise the kids.

"The advocacy system doesn't allow a lawyer to say to a judge, 'My client shouldn't have the kid,'" Benson said.

To avoid such an uncomfortable predicament, Benson, a former social studies teacher who has been practicing law 16 years in Florida, said he only takes clients who he believes should be designated the primary resident parent.

"I'd like to think I have helped some people live their lives nicely, that is to live a good life," he said.

"I feel good about that," he said.

A Case Of Justifiable Homicide?

Comparable worth has now been declared dead by the U.S. Court of Appeals. Speculation is turning to the question of who killed it.

Fortunately, police officers Joe Thursday and Frank Grammon, stars of the not-yet-popular Dragnet spinoff, "Net", have already been called in on the case:

Thursday: This is the city. Los Angeles, California. They call it the City of Angels. Some of the angels are incomparable. That's where I come in. I carry a badge.

Thursday: Friday, 8:03 a.m. My partner, Frank Grammon, and I were working the Sunset detail out of Encino. We got an urgent call from the boss, Captain Mel Fixx. He sounded worried.

Grammon: Morning, Captain. Nice to have the old weekend rolling around. Some great football coming up. Even the wife is excited. She ...

Fixx: Shut up, Frank. Boys, we've got a big one. You know about comparable worth?

Thursday: Sure, Captain. It's a new regulatory idea. It'd control wages. A consultant decides two jobs are comparable. Then the wages for the two have to be the same. Wages should be left to consultants, not the market. It's been ordered for the state of Washington. We're even doing a little of it here.

Fixx: Not any more, Joe. The court just reversed that ruling. Comparable worth is dead. Our job: find the killer.

Grammon: Gee, Captain. The case was in Washington. It was reversed by a court in San Francisco. Why do we have to get involved. This is going to interfere with a lot of football ...

Fixx: Shut up, Frank. You know what they say about killers.

Thursday and Grammon: What's that, Captain?

Fixx: They all have to be somewhere. Let's go.

Thursday: 8:24 a.m. We headed downtown. We were looking for something, but we didn't know what. But we did know one thing. We had to find it.

Grammon: You know, Joe? I'm kind of sorry to see that comparable worth thing dead. I'd figured out that our jobs were comparable to physicians. Lots of pressure, life or death decisions. I was fixing to put in for a $100,000 per year raise.

Thursday: I was going to compare us to comparable worth lawyers. We'd have done even better. Too bad. Look there!

Thursday: Two bald men with briefcases were giving confusing and contradictory directions to a tourist. We stopped.

Thursday: You guys by any chance economists?

First bald man: Why, yea officer. How did you know?

Sentimental Mayor Returning Trolleys To Streets Of Madrid

MADRID (UPI) — The man who brought the horse and buggy back to Madrid now plans to return trolley cars to the city's streets.

"They are hardly an alternative system of transportation but it is an attempt to recover another of our city's old traditions," Mayor Enrique Tierno Galvan told a recent meeting of councilmen.

Madrid's green and yellow streetcars, once derided for their noise and jolting rides, were replaced by modern buses in the early 1970s. The restored cars will be put in service near parks and used mostly for pleasure rides, according to Deputy Mayor Juan Barranco.

"They will add a nice and simpatico touch to Madrid," he said.

In another move to slow down the pace of city life, the mayor returned horse-drawn buggies to Madrid's Retiro Park in June.

Let's Do Away With Paddling

What ever happened to the old ploy of holding up undisciplined students to peer ostracism?

That was a form of "punishment" as we recall that seemed to work quite effectively. When a student wouldn't get in line, he'd (it was rarely the sweet, freckled-faced girl with the pigtailed) be required to stand in a corner of the classroom facing the wall or to sit on a tall stool and don a dunce cap.

Maybe the psychologists recommended against such practices, arguing young students could be left with some sort of irreversible emotional disturbance over having been held up to ridicule.

We don't know, but we're not convinced that corporal punishment, referred to in Florida schools as paddling, is the way to bring those undisciplined youngsters under control, either.

As we understand it, state law allows teachers to paddle problem students so long as it's done in the presence of another adult and other conditions are met. The principal at any given school has, as a matter of state law, the final say on whether paddling will be allowed in his/her school. Some of the principals of the county's 41 schools have chosen to discontinue the practice, especially at the high school level. At least at Seminole and Lake Mary high schools.

Karen Coleman, spokesman for the school board, said it's estimated 50 percent of the principals in Seminole County don't allow paddling in their school, and the ones who do use it only in cases of serious infractions.

We think it should be discontinued altogether.

Students who cause more trouble than school officials have the time or inclination to deal with should be sent home and their parents notified. Disciplining students at school minus communication with or cooperation from parents is ineffective.

Parents should have more than a passing interest in their child's problems at school, and they should be more than willing to assist school officials any way they can to provide the necessary guidance and punishment at home to correct those problems.

Delegates to a conference on eliminating child abuse voted last week to urge that Florida abolish paddling in schools. Of the 600 state agency officials and their staff, children's rights activists and others who attended the session of the Interprogram Task Force in Jacksonville, 307 signed a resolution likening paddling of school children to child abuse.

The Florida Legislature this year outlawed paddling in state youth homes and day care centers. It balked, however, at passing a bill that would have given local school boards the option of outlawing the school paddle, rather than leaving it to the discretion of school principals.

The Legislature should reconsider its position and outlaw the practice in the entire state.

It's inconceivable to us that local principals should be given that option. If anyone should dictate such policy in a school district, it should be the school board. But just as leaving it up to local principals has created an unfairness in the district since half the principals don't allow it, giving school boards in the state the option would simply expand that unfairness statewide, since some districts probably would also opt not to allow it.

GEORGE MCGOVERN

Gorbachev Gives Words To Contemplate

No thoughtful person can peruse the exclusive Gorbachev interview to which Time largely devoted its Sept. 9 issue without being aware that the Soviets now have a leader of talent, intellectual acuity and wit who will command the respect of leaders around the world who engage him in diplomacy.

Time concluded that "Gorbachev showed himself well-informed, urbane, energetic, tough, witty and above all in possession of a disciplined intellect."

Referring to the tendency of Reagan administration officials to discuss Soviet proposals as "propaganda," as in the case of Moscow's earlier announcement that it would halt nuclear tests for the rest of this year, Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev said with telling humor: "You Americans could take revenge by doing likewise. You could deal us yet another propaganda blow, say, by suspending the development of one of your new strategic missiles. And we would respond with the same kind of 'propaganda.'"

At another point in the interview, Gorbachev underscored a seeming contradiction in the posture of certain U.S. officials in their appraisals of Russian technology:

"To substantiate increased military spending, all they do in the U.S. is talk about the fantastic achievements of the U.S.S.R. in the field of technology. When, on the other hand, they need an excuse for prohibitive measures, they portray us as a backward country of yokels, with which to trade and to cooperate would mean undermining one's own 'national security.' So where is the truth? What is one to believe?"

Communists are expected to think and talk like atheists. Consider then these words of Gorbachev to his Time interviewers:

"Surely, God on high has not refused to give us enough wisdom to find ways to bring us an improvement... In relations between the two great nations on earth, nations on whom depends the very destiny of civilization. We, for our part, are ready to take that role."

One portion of the interview that I found thought provoking were these words: "Why flex muscles needlessly? Why stage noisy shows and transfer the methods of domestic political struggles to the relations between two nuclear powers? In them the language of strength is useless and dangerous."

And again this candid assessment: "I have to point out that we trust the Americans no more than they trust us, and that is why we are interested in reliable verification of any agreement as much as they are."

Perhaps the most significant aspect of the interview was Gorbachev's recognition that his first priority — improvement of the Soviet economy — depends on curbing the arms race that is now devouring the resources, money and energy of both the Soviet Union and the United States. Gorbachev concluded his interview with a question that both Soviet and American leaders should contemplate:

"...Somebody said that foreign policy is a continuation of domestic policy. If that is so, then I ask you to ponder one thing: If we in the Soviet Union are setting ourselves such truly grandiose plans in the domestic sphere, then what are the external conditions that we need to be able to fulfill those domestic plans? I leave the answer to that question with you."

JULIAN BOND

Toward Parallel Destinies

The American civil rights movement and today's struggle against apartheid in South Africa have a lot in common — as well as some significant differences.

The leadership of the 1960s movement was drawn largely from the church. Martin Luther King, Joseph Lowery, Ralph Abernathy, Andrew Young, Jesse Jackson and a host of lesser-known ministers provided leadership, using the church as sanctuary, meeting hall and spiritual anchor.

In South Africa today, much of the visible leadership is also church-based and church-rooted: Desmond Tutu, Alan Boesak and Beyer Naude are all clergymen.

Some of the tactics are the same, too.

In South Africa today, as in the South 25 years ago, funerals of martyrs quickly become rallies for the cause. Only the accents of the participants and the rhythms of the hymns let the onlooker know he's in another country.

There are differences of course. In the United States, a black minority battled non-violently against a white majority under protection of a national government and federal Constitution that, however reluctantly, guaranteed equal rights to all.

In South Africa, a white minority rules a black majority using draconian powers to impose rigid physical, geographic and economic segregation.

In the American South, the courts — especially the federal courts — were often the last appeal for blacks against the defenders of racial segregation.

In South Africa, the court system is subordinate to the white Parliament, which is "sovereign" and can side step judicial decisions by legislating around them. Furthermore, the South African constitution enshrines racial classifications.

One distinguishing feature of the American civil rights movement was its application of Gandhian non-violence as interpreted by Martin Luther King. Ironically, it was in South Africa that Gandhi first experimented with non-violent protest as a young lawyer leading demonstrations against the erosion of Indian rights.

Africans used non-violence in South Africa as early as 1913 to defy the pass laws. In 1952, three years before the world had heard of Martin Luther King, the African National Congress organized what it called a "defiance campaign" that resulted in the arrest of 8,000 blacks.

GAO Slams Legal Services Practices

By Jack Anderson
And Joseph Spear

WASHINGTON — For years, conservatives in and out of Congress have been trying with limited success to reshape the Legal Services Corp., which provides free counsel to the poor. Now their campaign has been given some useful ammunition by the General Accounting Office.

The non-partisan congressional audit agency concluded that, in some cases, one significant complaint about Legal Services is valid. In an unreleased report prepared for Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, the GAO found that local legal groups funded by the corporation "cloned" offshoot organizations to get around congressional restrictions.

Under this set-up, the clone group accepts government funds and operates within congressional restrictions, while the parent group uses private funds and is not bound

RUSTY BROWN

Real 'Homework'

Before her neighbors in Valley Stream, N.Y., complete the hour commute to their jobs in the Big Apple, Carol D'Agostino is already at work.

She's had her breakfast of an egg salad sandwich, snapped on her earrings and logged on to her at-home computer.

Through the miracle of electronics, she's in communication with her boss in Manhattan, while her neighbors are still bumper to bumper on the Grand Central Parkway.

Ms. D'Agostino is a "telecommuter" working for Electronic Services Unlimited, a telework consulting arm of LINK/IDC.

She's a woman on the cutting edge of a dramatic change in America's work patterns. Whereas the Industrial Revolution drew people to places of employment, in the next century we're likely to see the work dispersed to where the people are.

Computer-equipped suburban homes are being nicknamed "electronic cottages."

Already, 450 companies and 100,000 employees are said to be involved in telecommuting, and one futurist, Jack M. Nilles of the University of Southern California, predicts the number of people working at home on computers will double every year.

Telecommuting may have its biggest impact on women. Even now, the largest number of telecommuters are women, mostly in the insurance, banking and telephone fields. Linked to a central computer at the main office, the women are processing insurance claims, loan applications and other types of what used to be called "paper work."

Telecommuting is also opening new options for women. Here are some real-life examples:

— A stenographer has clients around the country who dictate letters over the phone or send material that she assembles into reports on her word processor. She makes more than $10,000 a year and reports via electronic mail.

— A vice president of a Philadelphia brokerage firm, making $130,000 a year, telecommutes in jeans and clogs from her farm in Vermont.

— A computer programmer prefers to work at home to care for her 2-year-old.

— An economist, who heads a bank's commodity analysis division, took a leave-of-absence for childbirth. With a home computer, she kept in touch with staff and clients; when she returned to work, she had hardly missed a step.

Most women get into telecommuting if they already work for companies that are heavy computer users. Some firms experimenting with the at-home alternative are: American Express, New York Life Insurance, South Carolina Blue Cross and Blue Shield, Control Data, Minneapolis Honeywell, Mountain Bell Telephone and Best Western International.

Carol D'Agostino, however, got into telecommuting for other reasons. She developed a metabolic disorder that prevents her from joining the rat race for long commutes and 10-hour work days.

She "attended" data-processing classes for homebound students offered by Queensboro Community College via telephone, and that led to her current job.

WASHINGTON WORLD

South Africa Policy

By Helen Thomas
UPI White House Reporter

WASHINGTON (UPI) — At the Democratic Convention in Los Angeles in 1960, Speaker Sam Rayburn and colleagues urged Lyndon B. Johnson not to accept the No. 2 spot on the ticket if John F. Kennedy offered it.

The following day Rayburn told LBJ he should take Kennedy up on his offer.

"What happened in the last 24 hours," Johnson asked Rayburn.

"I'm a much smarter man today," said Rayburn, whose arm had been twisted by Kennedy and Kennedy was not averse to pointing out some of the political realities if Johnson refused.

For months, President Reagan has flatly opposed economic sanctions against South Africa to put the pressure on the white-ruled state to ease up on the political repression of the black majority through its apartheid policy.

Only a couple of weeks ago Reagan told a radio interviewer, "I am basically opposed to the idea of punitive sanctions."

It was not as if the president had not been trying to influence the Botha government through his "constructive engagement" policy with behind-the-scenes persuasion. But soon it became clear to American policy makers that they were not going to influence change fast enough, although they appeared to be taking credit for some easing of segregation in a few hotels and restaurants, which really came about through the exertion of white liberals and moderates over a period of time in South Africa.

"It's the only thing that works," Reagan told reporters as late as last week when asked about his "constructive engagement" policy.

He caused consternation when he described the South African government as "reformist" and indicated that segregation had been all but wiped out. Later he apologized, saying he had spoken "carelessly."

Soon after he returned to Washington from a three-week vacation at his Santa Barbara ranch, the president saw the handwriting on the wall. He found out that Congress was in no mood to do business anymore with the South African government in view of the violence, the rising death toll and the refusal to carry on a dialogue with the black leaders, including activist Nelson Mandela who has been in jail for 22 years.

The GAO report, seen by our associate Tony Capaccio, included this disclaimer: "We are not implying that any of the corporations we reviewed worked an injustice or promoted a fraud."

But it does say this about Morrison's two groups: "In our view, the primary effect of South Central's establishment has been to allow New Haven Legal Assistance to engage in activities that may have been prohibited had it remained the grant recipient."

And although Morrison said South Central "was not created to circumvent restriction," the report points out that a memorandum he wrote on Dec. 23, 1981, "suggests" that it was.

"Agreements between the corporations have been negotiated on a less than arm's-length basis," the report states. As evidence, it cites the fact that from its beginning in January 1982 through July 1984, South Central paid $872,890 — 70 percent of its federal grant — to its parent group as a subcontractor.

Because the two organizations can't be separated, the auditors said, "we believe that the Legal Services Corp. should consider (the parent group) as subject to the same restrictions as other grant recipients." The report pointed out that the parent group had spent about $15,000 on activities that it wouldn't have been allowed to pursue under federal restrictions.

Morrison, who left both groups to run for Congress in 1982, was clearly not happy with the GAO findings. In a written response, he pointed out that both the New Haven organizations had acted "in good faith ... with the approval of the Legal Services Corp."

The congressman also warned the audit agency that it "should anticipate that the report may be used for partisan political purposes."

Evening Herald, Sanford, Fl. Sunday, Sept. 15, 1985—3D

America: One 'Never Give Up' Nation

By U.S. Senator Jake Garn
Freedoms Foundation Features
 We seem to be at the apex of a new resurgence of patriotism in this nation.

All of the traditional indicators of loyalty and support for the USA are apparent. Improved military recruiting figures and intense competition for military academy appointments; increased purchase of American goods and services; protection in Congress for American businesses suffering from unfair foreign competition. Yes, the signs of American loyalty are present.

So, what caused this resurgence of patriotism? What was it that turned us around from those dark days of the past decade to this more optimistic time? It's difficult to pinpoint. Was it the successful 1984 Olympics? Was it the liberation of Grenada? Or does it go back to the return of the American hostages from Iran? Well, probably these and many other things contributed to the change in attitudes. Too bad we can't corner the cause of this new patriotism and reintroduce it during those dark moments of history, both in the past and in the future.

I recently had the distinct opportunity to work with some of America's loyalists in the pursuit of excellence within their profession. These outstanding men and women are devoting their time and talents to making the USA first in their field. They aren't paid that well, considering their enormous talent and expertise. But, for them money isn't the object. They just want to be the best. They devote endless hours and days in the development of their talents and skills and while I watched them I heard no complaint or concern about the time and effort they were expending in behalf of the nation. Their area of expertise has not been in existence for that long; only 25 or 30 years. But everyone connected with the team seems to be reaching for excellence; wanting to be the best that they can be. I believe they, and their product, are a national treasure.

Behind these people is that great American 'can do' spirit that was lost for awhile in this country. So, who are these unusual Americans?

I joined a group of them on April 2, 1985 in the most exciting experience of my life. Seven of us were launched into space from the Kennedy Space Center at Cape Canaveral aboard the Shuttle Discovery. Five of them are professional astronauts from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and another is an engineer from McDonnell Douglas. Aside from the thrill of being in space, the experience of weightlessness, and the unbelievable sight of the earth from 200 miles away, I saw the American spirit of ingenuity and persistence demonstrated dramatically when the Syncom satellite, though successfully launched from the shuttle, failed to achieve the orbit it was designed for. Despite the fact that the failure of the satellite was not NASA's problem, hundreds of NASA workers on the ground and the professional crew of Discovery were determined to make every effort to make the thing work. With a collection of odds and ends on board the shuttle, we crafted a couple of so-called 'fly swatters' in an arts and crafts fashion as instructed by radio teleprinter from Houston. Two crewmen went out into the void of space, in the first unplanned, unrehearsed spacewalk in the history of the shuttle program and attached their makeshift tools to the shuttle's remote controlled arm. Later the crew successfully and beautifully performed the very tricky maneuver of rendezvousing with the ailing satellite and got into position to use the arm and its new attachments to pull the lever which would, hopefully, activate the satellite. Three heavy blows to the switch were achieved in brilliant fashion but the satellite failed to respond. In spite of that, the effort itself was magnificent. It is this kind of effort, this typically American desire to achieve, regardless of the obstacles, that is a proud characteristic of our nation of free people.

We Americans, no matter what the circumstances, have never given up. We have believed as a people that what the free and unrestrained mind of man can conceive, and believe, it can achieve. I have seen a most vivid demonstration of that characteristic, and I am proud to have had the opportunity.

Taking Care

Cheryl Jensen

It's OK To Ask For Help

DEAR CHERYL — Your column that explored the issue of older women forced to stay home to care for aging parents was of great interest to me. I designed a program to provide day care for frail, elderly persons. We know the need exists, but families seem reluctant to avail themselves of the resource. We suspect that many women who find themselves tied to the care of aging parents feel immense guilt in asking for or accepting help. They have been socialized to believe that their right to pursue their own interests is secondary to that obligation. Perhaps you should write a column encouraging middle-aged women to explore their options. They are of a generation which has been told they must please everybody, but meeting their own needs is at the bottom of the list. I see this among my peers and they are killing themselves. — GLORIA K. SILBERBLATT, THE ELDER CARE PROGRAM, CLEARFIELD, PA.

DEAR GLORIA — I think you've said it very well. Everyone needs a break and I hope more care-givers will realize that taking care of themselves makes them better able to care for others. Certainly choosing day care for several hours a day or one day a week isn't "abandoning" one's responsibilities. Also the older person can benefit greatly from getting out and meeting other people.

DEAR CHERYL — My mother is 63 years old. After a recent minor "stroke" from which she completely recovered, her health insurance company canceled her policy. Now she is having trouble finding a policy to tide her over until she turns 65. Any suggestions? Will all policies have a no-coverage period for prior conditions? — CON-CERNED SON, HOUSTON, TEXAS.

DEAR CONCERNED — An estimated 35 million people are in the same situation. Since 1977 there has been more than a 20 percent increase in the number of Americans under age 65 who lack health insurance.

Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., has introduced legislation that would establish state health insurance pools for the many people with chronic health problems and no health insurance. Heinz is chairman of the U.S. Senate Special Committee on Aging.

Kathy Hogue, vice president of Mediform Inc., a Cleveland, Ohio, business that deals with health insurance problems, had these suggestions:

— Check with your state insurance board — generally located in the state capital — to see whether cancellation was legal.

— You asked if all policies have a no-coverage period for a prior condition. Generally they do, but try Blue Cross-Blue Shield. Its policies vary by region.

— Check with health maintenance organizations (HMOs) in your mother's area, although it's difficult to get them to take non-group people under age 65.

— Try to get access to some kind of group health insurance. Was your mother ever involved in any association, profession or religion? Those groups offer all kinds of insurance. The policies may or may not have existing-illness exclusions, but generally, if it's written for a group, it may not be quite as severe or last as long.

Telethon A Success

The Sanford-Seminole Jaycees would like to express their thanks and appreciation to everyone who pledged their support to the Jerry Lewis/Muscular Dystrophy Association Telethon.

The Sanford MDA phone center was a success, raising $3,596 for Jerry's kids.

We, the Sanford-Seminole Jaycees, would like to thank all of the volunteers who answered telephones during the telethon.

We would also like to thank Mr. Keith Hendrix, who loaned the Jaycees the use of the Chelsea Title Building for the phone center.

Many thanks also to Pizza Hut, Burger King, McDonalds, Dominoes Pizza, and Holiday Inn Countryside for their donations of food and drink.

It is great to see such a cooperative effort for such a worthwhile endeavor.

SCC Says 'Thanks'

Dear Ms. Casselberry:
 Thank you for the interest you have shown in publicizing the Developmental Division Programs sponsored by Seminole Community College. The articles and announcements published in your paper are appreciated.

We feel that we offer a valuable service to adults. However, the program is useless if the people are not made aware that it is there for them to use. We thank you for the cooperation of the management at the Sanford Evening Herald and for the excellent staff who see that our news releases are inserted in your paper.

Sincerely,
 Marilyn Mitchell

Smokers: You Have Only Two More Weeks To Freely Puff Away

Dear Sir:
 The Florida Clean Indoor Air Act is legislation designed to protect the public health, comfort and environment by creating areas that are reasonably free from tobacco smoke.

Taking effect beginning Oct. 1, the bill is referred to as "Chapter 85-254, Laws of Florida."

The major emphasis of the Clean Indoor Air Act is the fact that it reverses the current presumption that smoking is permitted unless otherwise prohibited. This law presumes an area is non-smoking unless it is specifically designated as a smoking area.

The Clean Indoor Air Act applies to enclosed indoor areas used by the general public. Areas covered within the definition of the law include: government buildings, restaurants seating more than 50 persons, retail stores, public means of transportation and their associated terminals, elevators, hospitals, nursing homes, educational facilities, libraries, courtrooms, jury waiting and deliberation rooms, grocery stores, public school buses, museums, theatres, auditoriums, arenas, recreational facilities and places of employment.

Employers are required to develop, implement and post a policy regarding the designation of smoking and non-smoking areas. That policy shall take into consideration the proportion of smokers and non-smokers. Smoking areas are not required to be designated.

Interpretation and intent of the Florida Clean Indoor Air Act
 Consultation on the development and implementation of a smoking policy

Provide signs
 Smoking cessation clinics, self-help manuals or video program.

What Newspapers Across The Nation Are Saying

Artificial Heart Proves Itself As Vital Bridge

The Salt Lake (City) Tribune

In being moved from the Jarvik-7 to a human heart transplant, Michael Drummond became the first person so treated for fatal disease. Moreover, the operation justifies one of the most promising claims made for mechanical heart use.

But, as the Drummond case dramatically confirmed, it still is not possible to be sure that a donor heart will be waiting when surgery is essential. Enter the mechanical version as an emergency, temporary substitute.

Physicians and surgeons have already identified this as the "bridging" technique — keeping a patient alive with the mechanical process until a transplant is available. With Drummond the concept became more than a recommendation.

It is going to take convalescent time to be sure Drummond's case unequivocally proves the "bridging" theory. However, even his recovery so far is reason enough to move ahead with this additional reliance on the artificial heart.

Dallas Morning News

An unsettling aspect of the protectionist debate emerges from follow-up interviews of respondents to a New York Times-CBS News poll. The poll itself revealed that most Americans think the Japanese work harder and make better products, and that U.S. complaints about unfair trade practices are a form of scapegoating.

... Nobody's for being a patsy in the face of unfairness, but neither is anybody for driving up prices, which tariffs would surely do — among other undesirable things.

Consider such typical interview responses as these: "It's more greed here ... guys want to retire and buy a motor home, travel around the country ... That's just thinking of the individual, selfishly. The Japanese worker is thinking, 'I am putting out a quality product I am proud of.'"

Think about it: At the very time many in Congress insist they sense a tidal wave of protectionist sentiment, this poll's findings suggest quite the opposite.

Think of the gall it would take to call ourselves overpaid loafers in one breath and in the next demand that the government protect us from the consequences of our loafing.

The Phoenix (Ariz.) Gazette

It is no wonder at all that Americans tend to be confused about the proper relations between church and state. ... The (U.S. Supreme) Court has, over the years, delivered the following confusing opinions:

It's OK to use public money to buy textbooks for parochial students; it's not OK to use public money to buy maps or other school supplies. ...

Now comes the Felton decision which says public school teachers cannot teach remedial classes in parochial schools.

Mind you, the decision does not prohibit public school teachers from teaching parochial students. It only prohibits them from doing so in parochial schools. ...

Since 1965, thousands of public school teachers have instructed thousands of disadvantaged students in thousands of parochial school classrooms without complaint. Congress requires help for disadvantaged children regardless of the school they attend.

Now some of those children ... could lose that help. Should that occur, public school educators will be in violation of the 1965 law.

The Court has rendered a pernicious decision.

The Sacramento (Calif.) Union

Mexico may have been sending a signal to Washington earlier this month when it resumed full diplomatic relations with El Salvador.

One-on-one relations between Americans and Mexicans have been friendly for years. Despite the scare stories about attacks on U.S. tourists south of the border, a reasonably friendly gringo will be welcome more hospitably south of San Diego than he would be in a neighboring state back home.

In foreign affairs of mutual interest, however, Mexico has felt compelled to adopt anti-U.S. stances. This is especially true in Latin American affairs, largely because Mexico distrusts our intentions south of the border (Mexico used to own the American Southwest).

If Mexico decides to play straight diplomatically, it can be a great benefactor of emerging democracy in Central America.

The Central American countries have been as wary and envious of Mexico — their relatively large and powerful neighbor to the north — as Mexico has long been of the United States.

It is nice to think that those relationships may be changing.

New York Daily News

The greatest killer in America today isn't AIDS or the automobile — it's tobacco. About 1,000 Americans die every day of lung cancer, emphysema or heart attacks brought on by smoking. ... So what's Congress doing about it? Reducing the tax from 16 cents a pack to 8 cents. A Harvard study has reached the unsurprising conclusion that cutting the price will induce hundreds of thousands of teenagers to start smoking. ...

The Harvard study calculates about 2 million people will take up smoking if the tax is cut. If it's kept at 16 cents, they won't smoke. Of those 2 million, statistics insist 480,000 will eventually die prematurely. ...

At the least, the tax must be kept at 16 cents. The next step is to look at raising it — and moving toward uniformity by establishing the main tax burden at the federal level.

Light For Our Cities

There's something dramatic about a city at night — like this view of Pittsburgh after dark. All the problems that beset our cities seem hidden as the skyline comes alive with a million gleaming windows marking the towers of man's industrial prowess.

Lost in the shadows are the steeples and graceful roofs of a hundred churches. Few of them are lighted at night... yet they are the center and source of the true light our cities need.

In every city, village and hamlet there is a golden triangle sustaining the lives of our families. It is the message of faith, hope and love that glows from our churches.

Over Confiscated Bibles

Student Sues School District

Special to the Herald

An 11-year-old Florida student has sued her Sarasota County school district and individual school officials for confiscating Bibles that she passed out to classmates after a sixth-grade book report.

Attorneys for Rebecca Higgins, a student at Venice Area Middle School, filed suit in U.S. District Court in Tampa on August 30. They charge that school administrators and faculty members violated Rebecca's constitutional rights and invaded her privacy after they seized the Bibles and interrogated her about her religious beliefs.

Rebecca is represented by Rutherford Institute attorneys Larry Crain and Kevin Ikenberry, with the assistance of Russell Peavyhouse as local counsel. The Rutherford Institute is a Virginia-based legal organization that specializes in religious liberties.

On May 21, Rebecca presented an oral book report on the Bible in her reading class. In her affidavit, she stated that she chose this topic "because I believe the Bible is a very important book which can serve as a guide for daily living." She also stated that she is a Christian who "has spent a lot of time studying the Bible."

According to Rebecca, the other children in her class applauded her report and asked for the free copies of the New Testament that she offered them. She also gave one to her reading teacher.

During the next period, the complaint charges, math teacher John Zablakos interrupted Rebecca's social studies class and demanded that any child who had received one of the "maroon-colored Testaments" immediately turn it over to him. Zablakos was allegedly following instructions from school principal Guy Bennett.

According to the complaint, that afternoon Zablakos called Rebecca out of his math class and admonished her that giving out Bibles was illegal under Supreme Court rulings. He later returned the confiscated Bibles to her.

"Rebecca arrived home from school extremely upset and distraught over what had occurred that day at school," the girl's mother, Beverly Higgins, said in her affidavit. "I told her there was probably some mistake made."

The next day, as Rebecca waited for her social studies class to begin, she returned some of the Bibles to her classmates. According to the student, her teacher, Toby Leon, "became very upset and demanded that the books be returned to me at once." Rebecca was then ordered to the assistant principal's office.

According to the complaint, school officials then "began interrogating" Rebecca about her religious beliefs and church affiliation, and told her that she had "broken the law." The child "pleaded with the defendants to telephone her mother, which they refused to do," the complaint states.

Institute attorneys also claim that the school officials violated her constitutional rights of free speech and free association, as well as the school district's own policy that it is "firmly committed to a position of neutrality" concerning religious expression. The written policy also allows the study of the Bible "as part of a secular program of education."

Rutherford Institute attorneys request a court injunction to prohibit school officials from taking any further "adverse action" against Rebecca, who is now a seventh-grader at the middle school. They also request $200,000 in compensatory and punitive damages.

Study Cites Methodism's 'Seven Churches'

By David E. Anderson
UPI Religion Writer

The 9.3 million-member United Methodist Church is in many respects America's quintessential Protestant church.

Founded roughly at the same time as the republic, moving west with the frontier, the nation's second largest Protestant body is truly a national church with congregations in 97 percent of the 3,043 counties in the United States.

But a new study by two professors at Duke University find that despite the national facade there are sharp regional differences with Methodism and "the failure to identify and to take account of our very real differences has resulted in an inability to mobilize to serve regional issues."

It also found that for the past decade and a half, Methodism has tended to ignore those regional differences while placing its emphasis on issues of race and gender.

The study, "The Seven Churches of Methodism," was prepared by Robert L. Wilson, professor of church and society in the divinity school at Duke, and William H. Willimon, professor of the practice of Christian ministry, also at Duke's divinity school.

Wilson and Willimon find seven regional "churches" within the larger body: the Yankee church, the Industrial Northeastern church, the church South, the Midwest church, the Southwest church, the Frontier church and the Western church.

Each of these churches has distinct patterns of membership, ministry and style, according to Wilson and Willimon, and to some extent reflect patterns of conflict and contested issues that are being played out at the national level.

For example, it finds that in the Yankee Church — New England — membership has declined by almost 18 percent since 1970 and the result is "Yankee Methodism is pessimistic."

"Pessimism among Yankee Methodists has led them to tinker with the ecclesiastical machinery," the study said, stressing such issues as race and gender of ministers, issues of little importance to local churches. "As the church declines, ideology and clerical issues take on increased significance."

The church South, however, according to the study, is the denomination's most cohesive branch, with total membership and worship attendance holding steady since 1970 although the picture is one of stability rather than growth.

Wilson and Willimon also argue that in the period ahead, the church South will "play an increasingly important role in the leadership of the denomination," a leadership the study now finds comes out of the declining regions of the north and midwest.

Conflicts at the national level, the study said, while appearing on the surface to be over ideology may actually be caused by regional conflicts, such as the concentration of national leadership.

A study of 147 clergy serving on the national boards and agencies of the church found two-thirds came from the North and Midwest but 40 percent of the funds to finance the work of the agencies came from the South and Southwest.

"It can be expected that one of the sources of intra-church conflict will be financial," the study said. "The sections of the denomination that are providing a large share of the funds can be expected to want a greater say in the decisions over expenditures."

However, the study said, those who have become accustomed to making such decisions "will not relinquish this power willingly."

And unless denominational officials recognize the importance of regional differences, the study said, the results could be destructive.

Threat Of Legal Action Result Of S. Baptist Bylaw 'Violations'

By David E. Anderson
UPI Religion Writer

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An Alabama couple who attended the June meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention say they will sue the denomination unless its executive committee corrects what they say are violations of its bylaws.

The threat to sue was triggered by a series of chaotic and controversial incidents during the three-day meeting when convention President the Rev. Charles Stanley ruled a number of speakers out of order, refused to recognize repeated calls of "points of order" and, according to some sources, ordered microphones shut off while delegates, known as messengers, were attempting to speak.

At issue at the time was an effort to amend from the floor a key report nominating the 1988 Committee on Boards. That panel, in turn, names trustees to govern the national agencies of the 14.2 million-member denomination.

The convention fight over the report was crucial in the struggle between moderates and fundamentalists. Stanley, a leader of the fundamentalist faction, made the first of several controversial rulings not allowing the report to be amended when it appeared moderates had enough votes to win.

A day later, with conservatives back in control on the floor, the unamended report was accepted by the convention.

In a letter to the denomination's executive committee, Bondurant asks that the violations "be remedied quietly and voluntarily by the officers and the Executive Committee" and he asked for a meeting with committee members before its formal Sept. 16-18 meeting.

Baptist Press said the executive committee has turned down Bondurant's request for a special meeting but he and the Crowders will be allowed to present their case to a special session on the evening of Sept. 16.

The George Plagenz column which usually appears in this space was unavailable this week, but will resume next week.

Recognized

Stan Tillman, minister of youth and education at First Baptist Church, Oviedo, was recently recognized for his five years of service at the church. Stan came to Oviedo in 1980 from the staff of Howard Payne University in Brownwood, Texas. Since he came to Oviedo, the Sunday School enrollment has increased from 440 to 775.

College Officials: Yuppie Generation 'Dying Out'

By Steven Bredice

BOSTON (UPI) — Yuppies may be doomed to extinction, according to college admissions officials. If the yen for an enriching education — and not just a diploma that can be swapped for a high-paying job — continues among college freshmen.

At Boston University, officials are noticing more interest in liberal arts and less interest in technological and professionally-oriented fields, Admissions Director Anthony Pallett says.

Although it's too early to tell whether the seeds of a new trend have been sown, this year's batch of applications are different than those of previous years, Pallett said.

"I think the Yuppie Generation is dying out, from the kids we're seeing," Pallett said, referring to the new class of young, urban professionals who are widely perceived as America's upwardly mobile, status-conscious elite.

Phillip Smith, admissions director at Williams College, a small, highly selective school in the Berkshires, agreed with Pallett's assessment.

"I sense a shift away from immediate career gratification," he said. "I feel that the national trend in the past year or so has been toward the broadly based programs and away from the technical, professionally-oriented programs." Moreover, Pallett and Smith both say they're seeing more applicants with strong social beliefs which they're willing to put into practice as volunteers in nursing homes, hospitals and welfare agencies.

"And public service is not a yuppie hallmark," Smith said. "If yuppie equals selfish, this is the other extreme."

For his part, Pallett sees a resurgence in the kind of social consciousness that thrived in the 1960s and lay dormant in the 1970s.

"For the last 10 years, almost, it's been a very 'me' generation," he said.

"We're beginning to see a change in that."

"We're beginning to see an interest in causes again, which we haven't seen for a long time. It seems to be correlating with what's been happening with the economy," Pallett said.

Pallett, who has overseen BU's admissions process for a decade, said applicants during the economic recession of the mid-1970s were worried about making money after their university careers.

When the economy turned around, applicants seemed less inhibited about studying literature, languages and the classics, while interest in law, medicine and the sciences waned.

Smith said he's seen a corresponding change in employers' expectations.

"I think, oddly enough, that the strongest devotees of the liberal arts today tend to be the business executives, which is interesting from our standpoint," Smith said.

Along with the shift in the applicants' academic interests, Pallett sees a shift in their social interests.

In 1967, during Pallett's first month with the University of Chicago's admissions department, a group of black students took over his office to protest what they saw as a discriminatory admissions policy.

Pallett said he hasn't seen much of that kind of activism in the past decade, but that, judging by their applications, B.U.'s incoming class is socially conscientious.

While today's typical 18-year-old is still computer-crazy and not ashamed to admit enjoying a good best-seller, he or she is also showing renewed interest in issues like nuclear weapons and apartheid.

Incoming freshmen are also dressing better. Pallett sums up the always changing, often contradictory portrait of America's newest college kids with an anecdote about an applicant who showed up outside an admissions interviewer's office in the back of a limousine.

The casually-dressed young man plastered some newspapers against the car's windows, and emerged a few minutes later wearing a suit.

"Now that wouldn't have happened a few years ago," Pallett said. "He would have come in dressed in jeans." Pallett said.

How To Kill Someone In FBI Headquarters

By United Press International
Murder at the FBI. By Margaret Truman, (Arbor House, 256 pp., $15.95)

Margaret Truman may soon run out of places in Washington to "murder" people, but her latest plot puts a dead body on the demonstration firing range inside the J. Edgar Hoover Building — before 200 American citizen witnesses.

The first rule of the FBI is to never embarrass the bureau — even though FBI special agent George Pritchard was apparently murdered in the FBI headquarters.

Special agent Christine Saksis and her secret lover, special agent Ross Lizenby, are both assigned to the case — an uncomfortable situation for them.

The investigation begins with a long list of suspects split out by a computer. Saksis visits Pritchard's wife and daughter and a former professor of Pritchard.

Lizenby is in charge of the investigation until duty calls him to another assignment. When Saksis takes over, she begins to follow some curious leads through Pritchard's acquaintances and old contacts.

Pritchard was what was known as an "unkempt," or an agent who worked very much alone out in the field — making the investigation that much more difficult.

Throughout the probe, Truman keeps the reader up to date on all the illicit office affairs and quirks of life at the FBI — but gives few clues about the actual murderer.

As Saksis follows the clues, the plot becomes more complicated and intense — an author who was in the middle of writing a revealing book about the FBI is found to have had connections with Pritchard's wife.

and meets the man at his home in Cherry Grove, a homosexual hangout.

While Saksis is out ferreting clues, her love life suffers and becomes mixed up with her work. Saksis, because of her American Indian heritage, had been used in the bureau as a liaison. An old Indian lover of hers arrives to visit Saksis — putting Lizenby into a seething rage of jealousy. But the former lover also has an interesting story about Lizenby's own past. Saksis is thrown into a quandary at work and at home.

The climactic ending would make an action-filled movie ending. As the loose ends of the investigation begin to make sense, one understands why the truth is rarely found about the government until 25 years later. And even then the truth may be only what government officials wanted it to be at the time.

Truman's plot is complicated — exquisite in its subtle comments on one of the most powerful government agencies in the country. Her characters are fairly well fleshed out — though Saksis is totally predictable. And the plot will keep the reader up all night to find out who actually killed an FBI agent right in his own headquarters.

Any Family Is Just A Bunch Of Individuals

Whitewater. by Joyce Reiser Kornblatt, E.P. Dutton, Inc., 217 pp., $16.95

In her first novel, Joyce Reiser Kornblatt comes up with characters of all ages who are sad, ordinary and confusing — like most of the folks you run into in the average life.

Rose comes to Florida for the wedding and her opening chapter sounds just like a grandmother.

"Charlotte is Karl's second wife and Mary is her retarded daughter, twenty or so, but babbles like a child and I think she might wear diapers, too. Think of it. I told Charlotte once, 'I imagine your heart breaks every day of your life,' but she said, 'No, Rose, Mary is my blessing, my sweet gift from heaven.' This is what Karl's loaded onto himself now, after all his trouble with Florence. I would have thought he'd want some peace, but he never is attracted to the normal things; he's always coming at life sideways, where an ordinary person would look at a situation straight on and say, 'Thank you, but no thank you.'"

Fortunately, Kornblatt moves on to the other extreme in the next chapter — Justin, the family political activist out-cast.

Justin writes for the Rolling Stone, The Village Voice, The New Republic and The Nation. The family black sheep has also been divorced, enjoys a joint every once in a while, and has strange and secret connections in Bolivia.

Though he does not intend to come to the wedding, he knows and helps Diane's fiancé, Sam.

Diane, in all her wisdom of choosing boyfriends, had selected one who decided to take her hostage the day before her wedding to Sam.

The life and death crisis pulls the family together.

As the story unravels through the eyes of the five family members, Kornblatt brings out the pathos of a family leading separate lives in different cities with clashing morals. "Whitewater" is a carefully portrayed first novel, whose characters are sadly real.

Kornblatt is an assistant professor of English and the co-director of the Creative Writing Program at the University of Maryland.

Good-Ole-Boys And 'Shine In The Afternoon

Dogwood Afternoons. by Kim Chapin, (Farrar Straus Giroux, 249 pp., $13.95)

Andrew Mavis graduated from midnight runs with white lightning to the dirt tracks of stock cars and finally to the superspeedways.

He's on a qualifying run at one of the big tracks in the South when it happens. He kisses the wall hard.

In the fleeting seconds of his final run, Mavis' life passes before him at breakneck speed.

That's the format used by former Sports Illustrated and Atlanta Journal writer Kim Chapin and it works in this lyrical trip from pit row to 200 mph death.

Mavis introduces the reader to a host of memorable characters in the town of Four Corners — a place that could be in Georgia or the Carolinas.

His father, Wylie, is a moonshiner-mechanic-dirt tracker of heroic proportions. He has an affair with his chief mechanic's "tawny" daughter, who is Andrew's contemporary. Wylie, crippled by a wreck and full of hatred and bitterness, dies ignominiously, struck by a runaway car in the pits.

There's One-Eye, the chief mechanic and father of Wylie's lover. One-Eye could have been a great racer himself, except that he could see only half the track.

Heyward Scrivens was the town's top businessman. He went from financing moonshine runs, commonly called trippin', to building the area's first dirt track. He controlled the sheriff of the county and employed just about everybody else at his lumber mill.

Miss Dee, who owns the local cafe, always serves steak and tamales after the race.

Uncle Julian always went on his trippin' wearing a suit, in broad daylight and observing the speed limit.

These well-developed, loveable and crazy characters make this novel a real winner. But the way Chapin weaves it all in with Andrew's narrative makes it a triumph.

Andrew, at his father's coffin, says farewell:

"Dear friend," so I began with muffled hollow voice. "Goodbye. Your passing is my loss and my salvation. You crippled me and others round you with your bitterness and hate. Yet you were the strongest man I've ever known, and by your death you pass that strength to me."

Chapin, Michigan born and author of "Fast As White Lightning," writes about stock car racing as it were his personal intimate. But beyond that, he writes about human nature like a poet.

Tears To Be Shed, Songs Written On FarmAid Train

By Jim Lewis

United Press International
By the time Merle Haggard's FarmAid train chugs half way across the continent from California to Illinois, the captive cast of country music stars will have shed a lot of tears and written a lot of songs.

That's the storied prediction of Haggard, who organized the week-long, 3,000-mile whistle stop trip leaving Monday from Bakersfield, Calif., and arriving in Champaign, Ill., Sept. 22 for a mammoth concert on behalf of the family farmer.

Haggard's train, which he is leasing at cost from Amtrak, will boast a Who's Who of country stars by the time it wanders from the West Coast to the Midwest. He said the number of cars will depend on the response.

Haggard has received commitments from Johnny Cash, Willie Nelson and Hank Williams Jr., to ride the train. Other concert stars will be boarding in Springfield, Mo.

Haggard promised the train trip would be a memorable one with up to 250 celebrities aboard.

"It's going to be enjoyable. The entertainment is going to be continuous. Both lounge cars will be going all the time. It's going to be one of the most fun things that ever happened. We'll be locked in there together like a ship or a boat trip," Haggard said in his Redding, Calif., office.

"The topic of discussion will be what can we do. There will be a lot of music. A lot of tears will be shed. A lot of songs will be written. A lot of good ideas will come from this."

The Reagan administration permitted Haggard to rent the train at cost, but ironically has been opposed to the majority of assistance farmers are seeking. Reagan, a personal friend of Haggard for years, has sought to cut government price support payments for a wide variety of farm products, saying farmers must rely more heavily on market demand and regulate production accordingly.

Nevertheless, a spokesman said Agriculture Secretary John Block was in favor of the FarmAid concert.

"Block thinks it's a great idea. It's a wonderful example of private sector initiative, people helping people. He is supportive of it as he was of the African aid concert," said press secretary John Ochs.

Ochs said Block did not plan to attend the concert.

Haggard said more than 70,000 tickets have been sold for the FarmAid concert. Promoters hope to raise between $30 million and $50 million.

Haggard, whose conservative views have been expressed by such songs as "Okie From Muskogee," and "Fightin' Side of Me," said the train trip was to draw media attention to the family farmer.

"The small farmer is just about a thing of the past. We hope we can just make America aware of the seriousness of the problem. About 80 percent of the small farmers in America will probably be out of business completely by the spring of next year," he said.

"... History shows us that if the farms go under, Wall Street is next."

The entertainer, who worked on a farm as a teenager and whose parents were farmers, said the FarmAid crusade is very simple to explain.

"Bread and butter is essential. We can't concoct a computer that will spit out bread for us. Bread will go to $5 a loaf — that is what will happen if corporate farmers take over completely."

Haggard said the idea for the whistle stop tour came in Sioux City, Iowa where he had a concert for farmers.

"Their gratitude was so great for that one night's performance and a donation of $10,000. I have always tried to justify my citizenship in this country. I have always loved America. I sometimes wonder if everyone shouldn't check a list of justifications about what they've done lately. I never had a chance to go to war or fight on the front. Most of my brothers and cousins have gone. This is my chance to get on the front line."

The train is scheduled to leave Bakersfield at noon Monday and travel through Albuquerque and El Paso on Tuesday.

It arrives in Fort Worth on Thursday, where a farm benefit concert is scheduled that night. The next day the train will go to Oklahoma City, Topeka and Kansas City.

On Saturday the entourage goes through Jefferson City and St. Louis, Mo., and Springfield, Ill., arriving in Champaign in time for the concert Sunday.

Thursday: I'm thinking you guys may have killed it.

Second bald man: Are you serious, officer? Sure, we opposed it. But no one pays attention to us. Besides, it would have been a bonanza. Imagine all the litigation! Imagine the consulting fees!

Thursday: We left the two suspects to confuse more tourists. We had already spotted a truck driver.

Truck driver: What do you want?

Thursday: I think you killed comparable worth, mister.

Truck driver: Me? Why?

Thursday: Under the Washington ruling, your job was found comparable to that of a laundry worker. I figure you might not like that.

Truck driver: Are you kidding? They were going to raise laundry worker wages, not lower ours. Besides, trucking's getting more competitive, pulling our wages down. I figured that with comparable worth, our wages would have to stay up at the new level for laundry workers. I loved comparable worth.

Grammon: Gee, Joe. What could have killed it?

Thursday: Common sense.

Narrator: Common sense was tried and convicted of one count of killing comparable worth. Because common sense had never killed a regulatory scheme before, it was released on its own recognizance. It was asked never to kill again. It probably won't.
