REPEAL ISSUE TO BE SETTLED BY ELECTION

Senate Passes House Resolution Substituting Local Option For 'Bone Dry' Law

TALLAHASSEE, Apr. 25.—(A.P.)—The question of state prohibition repeal was put squarely up to the people today when the Senate approved 23 to 16 the proposal to substitute local option control of alcoholic liquors for the present bone dry amendment to the Constitution.

The resolution, approved by the House yesterday 66 to 48, requires ratification by the voters and then will go into effect when and if the Eighteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution is repealed. Should the prohibition article to the State Constitution be repealed all prohibition laws in effect up to Jan. 1, 1933, when state prohibition became effective, will be controlling.

House committees expect to act on the Senate-approved beer bills today.

Legislation of beer and light wine became assured when the Senate passed by majority which exceeded the highest record of beer and wine proposals the four measures reported out by a joint Judiciary and Temperance Senate Committee last week, substituted for all pending legislation and regulatory measures.

The bills, one carrying an amendment sending the revenues to the general revenue fund instead of the school fund, were immediately certified to the House. The Senate went into session at 2 P. M. to look up the beer bills and at 4 P. M. to consider the wine bill.

Reg Beach's Plan

All local cities and vegetable growers should be interested in a proposal introduced by Reg Beach, the famous author, in an address to a gathering of growers at Sebring the other day. The essence of Mr. Beach's plan is a certified pick and pack of fruits and vegetables with an f.o.b. auction sale which would dispose of each carload of produce at the point of origin. Commenting favorably on this proposal the Tampa Times says:

"Certification of quality of produce and method of pack would, under the Beach plan, be by agents of the federal government. Thus the distant buyer, who could not see the produce before making his bid for it, would be protected against chicanery. He would know that the loaded car at such and such point contained grapefruit, or oranges, or eggplant of number one grade and pack, meeting every requirement of the grade and guaranteed to be such when it arrives at point of distribution. Each buyer at distant points would receive, daily, by wire, information as to what was available, and where, and would submit his bid by wire to the f.o.b. auction, and the best bid would take the shipment."

"Gone would be the risk of the grower, the uncertainty of what would be his under the present system of consignment to distant points. Gone, too, in large degree, the glut of markets by indiscriminate consignment. Further, such standardized grading and packing and carloading as would be required in order to obtain government certification of class 'A' product would assure the wiping out so far as competition in the market is concerned of much of the second or third grade fruits and vegetables, which then would either remain in groves and fields as waste material or be converted into saleable commodities through the process of conversion into canned foods."

"Idealistic, one would say, at first reading. Yes. But in this day, when government at Washington is striving to lift the farmer and fruit grower out of the slough of despond by finding means to raise the price of his produce to a point where he can again make a living and discharge his obligations, perhaps it would not be impossible to place the plan in operation. At any rate, Mr. Beach's has brought forth the most intriguing idea that has been presented in a long time."

Women And War

When Amelia Earhart criticized the assembled Daughters of the American Revolution for agitating strong armaments while at the same time doing nothing towards having women bear arms in war, she evidently had overlooked or was not aware of the fact that bearing arms in this day and time is only a small factor in the manifold ramifications of Twentieth Century warfare.

In the old days military actions were almost completely a matter of an army of men, loosely organized, crudely equipped, living off the land by foraging, and meeting the enemy in one or two big battles, the outcome of which would determine the success or failure of the war. Such campaigns as these practically required only men, men who could wield a sword and could stand the strain of physical combat.

Today the fighting men are merely one cog in a huge military machine. There is the Red Cross, the hospitalization corps, huge transportation divisions and intricate communication service. The problem of supplying food and fighting equipment, guns, bombs, hand grenades, airplanes and a hundred other devices is so great that it requires its own army of non-fighters.

When a nation goes into a war there is no individual who can escape grave responsibility. Fighting is no longer confined to the "front". Those who remain behind are not immune from physical injury. Airplanes have taken care of that.

Women And War

Furthermore, the wheels of industry must not be stopped but rather speeded up. Agriculture must be continued. The business life of the country must be carried on successfully if the army is to win its battles. In the last war women took the jobs left vacant by men who enlisted, thereby fulfilling a service just as important as front line duty. Not only that but the world will not soon forget the noble service performed by thousands of nurses under conditions requiring great courage and devotion.

It sounds rather silly to suggest that women should bear arms. There is no doubt but that they could do so with equal, if not surpassing, fortitude to men. But if a country expects to win a war it must have the right people in the right place, and the right place for women is not in the front line trenches but in other lines of duty equally as important and more adaptable to their physical limitations.

Faint Ray Of Hope Held For Crew Of U.S. Airship, Akron

BALTIMORE, Apr. 25.—(AP)—A faint ray of hope for those missing as a result of the Akron disaster was held out in a theory advanced yesterday by Glenn L. Martin, head of the aviation corporation bearing his name.

Martin, who has had wide experience in airship construction, admits his suggestion probably is a "long shot," but nevertheless contends it is possible that a sizable portion of the Akron may still be free ballooning somewhere out at range of the steamer lanes or may have reached some distant land with many of its missing crew alive.

He offers the following facts to back up his position: None of the bodies of the 60-odd missing members of the crew has been recovered despite the thorough search of the ocean vicinity where the dirigible crashed. Diving operations on floor of the ocean off New Jersey have

BOND-ADJUSTMENT LEGISLATION

MELBOURNE TIMES
Melbourne by reducing city expenses is going to find it easier to take care of its debts, but Melbourne is in a much easier financial situation, than are many other Florida towns. And even Melbourne might be better served by some state-wide plan that will adjust the value of bonds to an amount that can be justly paid.

It is not reputation that Governor Sholtz, with his plan, or the various municipalities with their plans advocate. It is an adjustment by which holders of over-due bonds will accept long-time certificates, and also accept a valuation of the bonds in keeping with changed conditions.

During the boom, it was easy to borrow money on previous tax and buildings. Mortgages for many times the price that the property would bring in today's market still are on record. And the gigantic bond issues that Florida towns and counties floated may be considered as much out of proportion as were the privately-obtained loans on private property.

There is sharp disagreement as to the best measure to care for the situation. Towns that have already obtained satisfactory agreements with bond holders do not want their plans disrupted. Other towns that have spent money and laid out a campaign want to be left alone to finish their

"You want to get something done? That's what you're here for. Well, so do I want to get something done. I know the tax warrant situation as well as you do."
As he advised them to give the new mayor a chance, hecklers started interrupting. Dawes frowned, tried to continue and as the interruptions persisted he turned with a flash of Davonian brusqueness and shouted at his hecklers: "To hell with trouble-makers!"

Then he went on with his speech, telling the teachers the banks would take all the tax warrants they could but that only when taxes were being paid regularly could the banks feel investments in tax warrants safe.
All the Northern Trust Company bank the teachers succeeded in gaining access in small groups, then suddenly donned their teachers' armbands, and demanded to see the officers. They were ushered out without an audience.

A parade of 1000 teachers marched through the lobby of the Continental Illinois National Bank and when "scouts" could not find James R. Leavell, the president, the teachers appropriated parking space on bank desks and announced they would camp there until Leavell arrived. He did, after a while, and conferred with a delegation of 11.
Informing the teachers his bank could not accept a proposal that it seek a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to buy teachers' warrants, Leavell added that the bank had "a new hope" that might work out but he could not reveal the plan at present.

The First National Bank and the Harris Trust and Savings Bank were also picketed. Marvin A. Traylor, president of the First National, received a delegation and told them the bank must keep faith with its customers and depositors, and could take no more tax warrants so long as the public failed to pay taxes.

THOUGHTS and THINGS

THE business of living, when boiled down and all the froth skimmed off, is just a matter of thinking.

Each of us is continually thinking ideas of our own and swapping them for the ideas of others. If there is a famine of outside ideas we shrivel up ourselves. Children with "nobody to play with" are unhappy and unmanageable.

From thinking with our heads to doing with our hands is but a little step and then our thoughts become things.

It is because men of America are so unfettered in their thinking and doing that this country is such a fine place to live in. It is also because these thoughts are freely radiated and spread broadcast in the distribution of manufactured things and in the distribution of the facts about them (advertising), that this country is such a fine place to live in.

The originator of an idea is not much better off than before he originated it till he gets some one else to absorb it and enjoy it and benefit by it.

The man or woman surrounded by better thoughts and things but who pays not the slightest attention to them is not much better off than the one with "nobody to play with."

The advertisements in the papers are thoughts—telling you about the things that other men and women have created for your happiness. Read the ads. They are the voices from hundreds of thousands of looms, shops, foundries, studios, laboratories, where millions of minds are turning pleasant thoughts into worth-while things for your comfort.

World Chiefs Hold Parleys On Problems

Last night their "deep satisfaction" was expressed in the White House parley between the mal discussions of the questions which profoundly interest the two governments, but to establish a cordial relationship with the man for whom he has often expressed great respect and warm admiration. A more extended talk between the two statesmen began at 9 o'clock last night at the executive mansion.

Before going to the White House, Herriot refrained from discussing his plans or disclosing what instructions he bears from the government at Paris. His views and those of his government, he indicated, will be made known to President Roosevelt at the President's pleasure.

While the chief of the French mission maintained his cheerful front yesterday, sentiment generally among the French group was far from hopeful. Determination to make a thorough exploration of the possibilities for agreement on the monetary problem was avowed but it was felt that the difficulties were of a formidable character.

REPEAL ISSUE TO BE SETTLED BY ELECTION

Judges, state's attorneys, solicitors and justices of the peace, would be prohibited from engaging in or carrying on the practice of law directly or indirectly under the provisions of a bill introduced in the House yesterday by O. L. Crocker, of Gilchrist.

The measure would also provide that corporations, including banking institutions and abstract and title insurance or guaranty companies, would not be permitted to engage in the practice of law. The others stipulated in the bill are: All justices of the State Supreme Court, circuit judges, judges of criminal courts of record, county judges, state's attorneys, solicitors for criminal courts of record and justices of the peace.

The bill goes further to prohibit prima minister, the President, Secretary Hull and Sir Ronald Lindsay, British ambassador, with their experts, at which, it said, the substance of their discussions had been reviewed.

The statement was issued at a time when it was widely reported that the President and MacDonal were seeking to strike a balance between the pound and the dollar as a step toward setting up a new international gold standard.
