"That's what you all get for firing me!" Paul Calden re-portedly shouted Wednesday be-fore unleashing 10 blasts from his 9mm handgun.

Two hours later, he was found dead on the 13th tee of a Frisbee golf course in a Clearwater park 15 miles away. Police said he shot himself in the head with a

In the small cafeteria just off the lobby, he went through the line to buy a Diet Coke and then set it down. He walked over to the table where his former su-pervisors were sitting and pulled a handgun from under his coat.

Arbor Day, the unsung holiday

Arbor Day can occur at any time of the year. Normally scheduled nationally during the month of April, many states and cities observe their own event.

The main theme of the observance is to call attention to mankind's need to protect trees, which are a vital part of human existence. Most efforts center on tree plantings and conservation information.

In Sanford, Arbor Day Awareness week was Jan. 10 through 16. A program to mark the event however, was not held until Saturday. the 23rd.

Sanford held its event at Fort Melion Park with city maintenance coordinator Howard Jeffries, Trish Thompson of the county extension service, and Mike Martin, the county's urban forester.

Unfortunately, less than a dozen persons turned out for the event.

Locally, there is very little. No one has the day off because of Arbor Day. There are no parades and except for an occasional promotion to announce a small event, the day passes just as a normal day.

People do care about trees. Most cities are strong in their codes governing tree protec-tion. Perhaps its time the people acknowl-edged the event and rallied behind the cause. Certainly there are many other events paying tribute to something not as important.

In the second floor of the Sanford City Hall, there is a poster displayed with an appropriate alogan. "A city without trees isn't fit for a dog."

There will be more Arbor Day events to come. When they are held, make your presence known.

Response to letter

I would like to respond to the Letter to the Editor which appeared in a recent Sanford Herald from a "V. Cox" regarding a code enforcement action against property located at 415 Palmetto Ave. Mr./Ms. Cox appeared to question the appropriateness of the ongoing code enforcement action as noticed in the legal advertisements for consideration by the Code Enforcement Board of the City of Sanford, since he/she had "driven by this home at least five (5) times per week...and had looked but had not seen anything wrong."

I would like to advise that this code enforcement action was initiated as a result of an anonymous complaint, and had not been corrected prior to the scheduled Code Enforcement Board consideration even though the owner had been given formal (certified mail) notification. Although possibly not visible from the street, or apparent to Mr./Ms. Cox, the problem with this property was a "back yard" problem wherein trash, garbage, debris and high growth had been allowed to exist that could only be seen from the rear (alley) side. As a result of a video presentation of the deficiency, the Code Enforcement Board directed a $25- per day fine to begin on Jan. 20, 1993 and run until the deficiencies are corrected. Although the city may not be able to address all code violations, we have deficiencies are corrected. Although the city may not be able to address all code violations, we have and will continue to pursue code violations, especially when reported by a citizen.

s California's drought really over?

At this writing, my beloved San Francisco has just undergone 17 consecutive rainy days — and couldn't be happier. The record-breaking drought that began in 1986 is over.

But six-and-a-half years are a long time in politics, and a lot of bureaucrats directly concerned with California's water supply have gotten accustomed to seeing themselves on local TV news programs warning that the situation is bleak and getting bleaker — a scenario that the media, of course, positively adore. So it has been a terrible struggle to force these Cassandras to admit that the drought has ended, and the battle isn't over yet.

Actually, things began improving during the winter of 1991-92. (The months from November to March produce most of Northern California's rain.) But the local water gurus would have none of it. In the first place, they explained the rain fell in "the wrong places." What did it matter if San Franciscans were up to their ankles in rainwater? Everybody knew, or ought to know, that the only precipitation that matters is what falls as snow, high in the Sierras, and then melts in the spring into the Hetch Hetchy reservoir and the others that serve the metropolitan area.

So then snow fell in the Sierras — great vertical yards of it. But the water bureaucrats were unfazed. These particular snowflakes, they Northern California were condemned to lawns and feeling guilty every time they flushed a tollet or took a shower and all the guiltier because their public officials and the media rarely re-minded them that agriculture consumes 85 percent of California's entire water supply, leaving the state's 30 million people and all other users combined to share the remaining

So we come to the winter of 1992-93.

On Dec. 1 the National Weather Service issued its 90-day longe-range forecast, predicting that the ensuing three months would be dryer than declared, were exceptionally "dry" — i.e., low in moisture content. The patient citizens of Decembers in modern San Francisco history. All very well, growled the water watchdogs, but a lot of the water simply sank into the parched earth and disappeared. What's more, the National Weather Service dried itself off and issued a 90-day forecast for the period beginning Jan. 1. This, it grimly insisted, would be dryer than normal.

Whereupon San Francisco got those 17 consecutive days of rain. In addition, the Sierra snowpack is the highest it's been since 1982 and this time the snow is exceptionally "wet."

But the drought addicts battle on. The rain (which, remember, recently vanished into the dusty earth) cannot help us, they now insist, because it is cascading futilely into the sea: The soil is too wet to absorb more.

But what will these Calamity Janes tell us when that snow melts into the reservoirs? I don't know, and frankly I'm beginning not to care. If the guardians of California's water supply can slosh their way through a winter as wet as this one and still emerge pointing to an authentic water shortage, then the problem isn't the weather: It's the shortsighted and incompetent public servants who can contrive a famine in the midst of such overwhelming plenty.

Advising the president's men

MEMO - NON-BECRET AND NON-

TO: White House Chief of Staff Thomas "Mac" McLarty and Communications Director George Stephanopoulos. FROM: One Well-Wishing Wag.

Congratulations on having survived America's unique rite of passage, the presidential transition. No doubt it's occurred to you that you didn't have the best of first days on the job, what with that unpleasantness over Zoe Baird.

This memo is written to suggest that you heed the early warning signs: Your White House has a flaw — and it's sure to cause more eme if it ion't remedied.

First, Mac (as even strangers comfortably call you back home in Little Rock), every president deserves a staff that is: bright, dedicated, innovative, and experienced. On this, you are beiting .750; that's a superstar pace in baseball, but an ominous portent in a White House.

The senior staff you assembled for your old boyhood chum is worfully short on experience. No doubt few of your colleagues appreciate the incomparable volatility of any White House, our national vortex of policy, and politics. Seemingly innocuous occurrences can explode without warning. Missteps and misstatements are routinely magnified and distorted.

And that gets us to George's job. Or, rather, jobs — and, frankly, George, that's part of the problem. Officially, you are director of communications, overseeing all presidential message-making. But de facto, you are also press secretary; you've chosen to do the daily press secretary; you've chosen to do the daily press briefings yourself (just preparing for them is a full-time job, as your predecessors can attest). The titled young press secretary, Dee Dee Myers, is the de facto deputy press

Clearly, you don't grasp the unique symbiosis that exists between presidents, their extended aides and the press corps. Your first act was to bar reporters from your press office. They'd always had access to it before; even in the days of Nixon's Watergate, reporters could personally come by to ask questions whenever the phone lines were busy. the phone lines were busy.

George, your success is crucial to the president's. So my good wishes were with you in your first two press briefings as you dealt with the decline and fall of Zoe Baird.

Since you've long ago made your mark as a campaign and congressional aide and are now considered brighter and savvier than your 31 years, you must have been shocked to realize those briefings were a communications disaster. (Hopefully, you sensed that; if so, the rest will be easy to fix.)

You did the president a disservice by making it seem that he had something to hide about Baird's nomination after she'd hired illegal aliens. You forced the press into pursuing the scandal-mode question of yesteryear: What did the president know and when did he know it?

Perhaps you didn't fully prepare by asking Clinton and others for all facts (did they know Baird knowingly broke the law). Perhaps you thought this was like your days in the campaign or Congress - and you'd just spin it until we'd forget it.

Read your own briefing transcripts, chocked full of passive tenses and vagaries.

Day One: "A lot of the detaile and the timing of this are rather murky ... I assume there was some communication between the transition officials and him." Day Two (after Baird withdrew): "The transition promistakes. And he does accept responsibility for them....

There was some murkiness in the details of what this process is for regularizing workers coming into this country.... This is a murky area of the law.... There were murky details."

No doubt it's occurred to you that you didn't have the best of first days on the job.

Now ask yourself, George: If you were a reporter being fed that murky-mush, what would you ask and write? Your day was saved when Clinton later simply told reporters what he'd known and not known. Case closed.

Mac and George, you'll serve your boss best by never underestimating the public you really serve. Americans are bright and savvy, too. They'll forgive a president's transgressions and flubs. But not a politically calculated lack of candor. It's cover-ups, real or perceived, that can do lasting harm.

LETTERS TO EDITOR

Letters to the editor are welcome. All letters must be signed, include the address of the writer and a daytime telephone number. Letters should be on a single subject and be as brief as possible. The letters are subject to editing.

Clinton and media off to rocky start

I have a source over at Baskin-Robbins -Deep Dip I call him — who says they were thinking about marketing a new flavor called "Bill-and-the-Media." Right now it's known as Rocky Road, but for the next four years it might have been called Bill-and-the-Media. Same thing, different name.

I think old Deep Dip was just trying to be funny. He's a rock-ribbed Republican and he's getting a kick out of the way Bill Clinton and the press are snarling at each other so early in the game. "Prelude to prolonged conflict," he chortles.

Truth is, each party has a tolerable case against the other. It's un-derstandable that reporters, whose livelihoods depend on their ability to approximate truth from the swill that is ladied out to them by politicians, would tire of Clinton's inclination to waffle while doggedly de-nying he is doing so.

Point is, the press has valid reason to be frustrated.

lapse of good sense. The accusations that Clinton funneled state money into Hillary's law firm were downright inaccurate. And the current rash of stories about broken campaign promises — even as the Clinton crew is still trying to find the White House restrooms - seem petty and cheap.

Point is, if Clinton's getting hostile, he's got

No, wait a minute. Fact is, if he's ready to strangle a few of his journalistic tormenters, he's got a right. I'm one of the staunchest defenders of the press on the planet and I'm primed to choice a few myself.

It's bad enough that reporters have taken the new president to task for sending his daughter to a private school; for his turnabout on Haitian refugees after learning that 250,000 of them might hit the high seas in their rickety boats if he didn't change course; for the laggard manner in which he is appointing subcabinet officials even though most presidents since Eisenhower have had the same problem. As weak and illogical as such criticism is, it's stellar stuff compared to some other complaints that have been printed and aired:

• Clinton is habitually tardy, reported the Atlanta Constitution. Washington Post and others, and this might be an indication that he will run a suggish government.

 Clinton failed to get to a pre-inaugural gale for the nation's mayors in Baltimore. rumbled Baltimore Sun columnist Roger Simon, and this obviously means the new president "just doesn't rank mayors high on his must-see list."

 The Clinton-Gore bus trip from Monticello to Washington was boring — "Bill and Al's So-So Adventure," according to the tart Maureen Dowd and anobbish Frank Rich of The New York times.

• The inauguration was an exercise in mediocrity, said numerous critics. "No expense is being spared to make this the tackiest inauguration ever," wrote Washington Post fusebudget Jonathan Yardley.

What we need, it seems to me, is a flavor called Decent Interval — sensible vanilla laced with semi-sweet chocolate — and to hold off on Bill-and-the-Media until March or

Healey said Wednesday the current law is not enforced by local law enforcement agencies and should be regulated by the done." As in previous years, operators of for-profit commercial bingo halls say the bill is designed to drive them out of business in favor of the charity games, for which the law authorizing bingo

That has proved extremely difficult to answer.

A 1991 law sponsored by Healey imposed most of the regulations, but it was enged in court and resulted in widespread confusion among players and operators. Lawmakers, scrambling last year to fix the flaws, set a June 1, 1992, deadline for action or bingo would become illegal.

In an embarrassing legislative stalemate, bingo laws expired for one day last summer when no compromise could be reached. Lawmakers then re-authorized bingo, but without any of the new regulations.

Healey has returned with yet another version of the statewide regulation bill, saying it is necessary to protect charity games and prevent criminal enterprises from running the for profit would require the larger operators, those with annual gross receipts of $52,000 or more, to obtain a state license ranging from $20 to $500 a year. The rest would simply have to register without fees, and both would have to provide detailed accounting of money received and prizes

People who operate games that take in $104,000 or more a year would have to undergo state background checks and be fingerprinted.

The commercial operators, led by the Florida Bingo Association, contend parts of the bill are intended to drive them out of business. Those sections impose expensive fees on operators who lease their buildings — unless they are charitable organisations — of up to $25 per seat a year and up to $150 per bingo session.

Operators of for-profit games would also be able to keep only 18 percent of their annual receipts for expenses.

Ruth Arick, a spokesman for Aware Woman Clinic in Brevard County, said there are always protesters outside the clinics, but that Operation Rescue is conducting a month-long "tactical training" session in Melbourne and had targeted the two clinics where Ruangsamboon practices because they are the only abortion clinics in Seminole and Brevard counties. Proechel said that demonstrations are not the problem.

"It becomes misdemeanor stalking when they begin following him from his Longwood home to his office and waiting outside and bothering his customers," Proechel said. "They are, and I'm sure they would tell you this, trying to intimidate him.'

Ruangsamboon was not available for comment this morning.

"After the day he had yesterday," Arick said, "he's probably getting some much needed rest."

Capt. Charles Sexton of the Winter Springs Police Department said that protests are back to normal at the clinic there. 'There are always one or two people out there with signs," he said.

Procchel said that it would be up to the doctor or someone at the clinic to file a complaint before the matter could be taken to the state attorney's office for a decision.

"I don't think that the stalking law has ever been applied in a case like this," said Procchel. He added that the actions taken so far by the protesters could not be considered a felony stalking. "That will only come if they threatened his life or something like that," Procchel said. "They would have to enter the area of fear." He said that until Ruangeamboon or one of his employees or family members filed a complaint, the sheriff's department could do nothing to enforce the stalking law. "But it would appear that all the elements are

Dickerman ices Lyman win over Lake Mary

From Staff Reports

LAKE MARY - While it really didn't effect the outcome of the meet, Brian Dickerman's 10-5 decision of Lake Mary's Greg Menello was the feing on Lyman's 37-27 wrestling dual meet victory over the Rams before an estimated crowd of 1,100 people Wednesday night.

Wrestling in the 171-pound class. Dickerman (who normally wrestles at 152 or 160 pounds for the Lyman junfor varsity) bested Menello, one of Lake Mary's mainstays who generally competes in the 160pound classification.

"That was a gift," said Lyman coach Rick Tribit bluntly, who gave the team's Wrestler of the Match honors to Dickerman. "Menello's one of their better kids. That's a win that was really unexpected.

"Brian did a good job for us in the Christmas tournament. He wrestled a very smart match against Menello-He didn't try to muscle Menello. who's stronger than Brian is, Brian used good technique. He did a helt of a job when we really needed it.

After Dickerman outpointed Menello, teammate Nelson Diaz followed up with a 19-second pin of Lake Mary's Alex Lorie, effectively scaling Lyman's win. When Dickerman won his match and Nelson went out and pinned his kid, we knew it was over," said Tribit.

Lake Mary coach Doug Peters agreed.

"That really hurt," said Peters. "We weren't expecting to give up points there. But Dickerman wrestled a great match."

motorcycle enthusiasts.

In your answer to "Barbara in Dallas," you releed three issues. First, you properly assumed that motorcycles are insured so that any injury that resulted from a child playing on a motorcycle would be compensated by the motorcyclist's vehicle insurance. While it is true that a child's While it is true that a child's injuries may be covered by injuries may be covered by insurance, you seem to miss the point. Both senseless injury and needless insurance claims could be avoided if parents would supervise their children.

Second, you improperly defined a motorcycle as an "attractive nuisance." The "attractive nuisance." The "attractive nuisance." doctrine has traditionally been applied in situations where a child has been injured while trespassing on a landowner's property.

The doctrine is generally applied in carefully limited circumstances, where the possessor of real property knows.

circumstances, where the possessor of real property knows or has reason to know that children are likely to trespass, and the condition is one that presents an unreasonable risk of death or serious bodily injury in short while a swimming pool might be correctly defined as an "attractive nulsance," a motorcycle likely would not.

Additionally, many jurisdictions do not even recognize the Pinally, you observed that "owning a motorcycle is an awasome reponsibility." Parenthood also imposes some grat responsibilities. The primary responsibility for the supervision and protection of children should rest with parents instead of the burden being placed upon vehicle pursers.

DEAR MR. LUNDQUIST: You're quite right to suggest that parents must properly supervise their children. And, I claim no legal expertise concerning the "attractive nuisance doctrine." However some years ago, in commercial law class (Central High, Stoux City, Iowa), I learned that an "attractive nulsance" was that which attracted people onto the property of another.

(Examples: a house under construction, a swimming pool, playground equipment such as swings, slides, etc.)

According to "You and the Law" (Reader's Digest), an at-tractive nuisance is "a condition, machine or other thing that is dangerous to young children and that may attract them onto the owner's property and expose them to risks for which the owner may be held responsible."

Cause of temporal lobe seizure is still unknown

DEAR DR. GOTT: My husband putting the proverbial cart before the horse.

A capable doctor will carefully question and examine a patient.

vide information on this subject,
DEAR READER: Temporal
lobe seizures, a form of epilepsy, are marked by hallucinations and complex behavioral abnormalities (such as psychiatric disturbances), loss of judgment, drowsiness, a distorted sense of time, unusual sensations of taste and smell, and loss of memory. Brief periods of unconsciousness may occur. The cause is unknown.

The affliction is treated with anti-convulsants, such as Dilantin. The condition is diagnosed by a brain wave test (EEG). With therapy, the prognosis is favorable. Contrary to a popular misconception, patients with temporal lobe seizures rarely engage in violent or anti-social acts.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My mother suffers from fatigue, painful bones and muscles, loss of weight, constant viral infections, arthritis, itchiness around her ankles where veins are bruising, and muffled ears. We live in an isolated and medically poor re-gion, and I'd like to know how to restore her immune system. What diagnostic tests should she

DEAR READER: I don't know where to begin. Your mother's problems seem so extensive that a definitive answer is beyond the scope of a short health column such as mine. Therefore, let me answer in general terms.

People who feel ill should first check with their family physicians, before thinking of what tests might be involved. Today, there's an unjustified over-emphasis on medical testing; patients try to figure out which tests are necessary and then present their doctors with lists. At worst, this is nuts; at best, it's thereby creating a limited number of diagnostic possibilities. Then, such a Englishman Terence Reese has been known for over 40 years as one of the world's best bridge players and writers. In his articles, Reese uses a succinct style with a very dry sense of humor. For the improving and expert player, his books are an excellent source of instruction and enter-tain-ment.

His latest opus to arrive in the United States is "Bridge for Ambitious Players" (Gollancz, $12, The Bridge World, 39 West 94th Street, New York, NY 10025-7124). It is a collection of short essays. The first 51 deals cover declarer-play, defense and bidding. The last 14 deals are famous in one way or another.

Reese uses each deal to highlight a particular technical aspect of the game. On today's deal, he adopted a policy I have always followed, which he attributes to the late S.J. Simon.

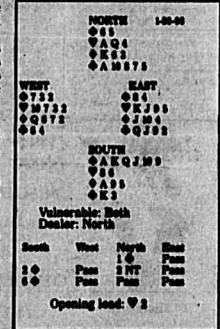

an English expert who died in 1949 aged 44: When you are the dummy, put down last the suit that was led.

Reese says that he and his partner "reached six spades with a speed that in these days would attract the attention of the traffic police."

Reese tabled the hearts last. but South immediately called for the queen. East won with the king and returned the heart jack. Now it was impossible to establish and cash the fifth club for a diamond discard.

The right play is the heart four at trick one. Then the entries exist to make use of the fifth club.

The killing lead is the heart 10. And Reese chides himself for failing to correct to six no-trump. which he feels he would have made "one way or another." What do you think?
