Opening The Energy Vault

The Supreme Court has let stand a lower court ruling that the effect of which is to permit oil companies to drill off the East Coast.

The decision is significant because it recognizes that the possibility of environmental damage does not in itself justify a ban on offshore oil production.

In the case in question, Shell, Gulf, and a number of other oil companies had purchased leases off the coast of New Jersey and south of Long Island.

Eleven groups — most of them environmentalist — fought the development of these leases.

Their argument boiled down to this: Oil, transported from the rigs to be used in tankers, might spill and then pollute Atlantic fishing grounds and fuel ocean beaches and parks.

This argument, heard in this case as elsewhere, depends on the probability of such an oil spill and its importance, weighed against other concerns.

The environmentalists who argued this case characteristically overstated the probability: after three decades of offshore drilling (mainly off the West Coast and the Gulf of Mexico), there have been only four significant spills, only one of these (at Santa Barbara) reaching shore and none permanently ruining the environment.

Anti-drilling lawsuits often seem to regard all other concerns as subordinate in importance to the damage brought by an oil spill.

But other concerns are certainly as important, if not more so. Energy, for example.

The country needs to increase its energy production, and it needs to decrease its oil imports.

One way to do that is to open the Outer Continental Shelf for oil and gas production under the kind of safeguards Congress currently is writing into federal law.

The Supreme Court decision paves the way for doing that.

Chinese Checkers

Throughout some 20 years of bitter reorientation, the People's Republic of China and the Republic of China on Taiwan have always agreed on one thing, and that is the need for "peace" — or, more accurately, for stability.

Although the Communist Chinese have been at pains over the years to make a military takeover as one of their future options, they have been understandably circumspect about any open or explicit threat to do so.

A California law similar to Oregon's states would allow a year later after the 1978 election to vote on a referendum to allow the state to purchase 2 percent of those participating had first tried marriage after the legal penalties were reduced and fewer than half of those people returned their ballots to a new law.

National surveys conducted in 1974 and late 1975 found grave opposition to discrimination, but by only a narrow margin — and a Gallup Poll last spring produced a 64-36 majority in favor of eliminating racial barriers.

Each of these surveys found resistance to discrimination concentrated among those least well educated, least affluent and elderly people, and residents of the South.

But even that pattern may be changing.

Among the states which most recently passed discrimination legislation are two in the South — North Carolina and South Carolina (Other are Oregon, California, Alaska, Maine, Colorado, Ohio, Minnesota and New York.)

ANGLE-WALTERS The Good News On 'Grass'

WASHINGTON — Remember the recent controversy over marijuana use during the 1960s? The issue, for years the subject of national debate, has virtually disappeared and very few Americans concerned themselves with "pot" smoking.

The most recent evidence of that unheralded development was provided last month when the Drug Abuse Control, an independent Washington Institute, released a survey data on public attitudes toward marijuana in Oregon.

Oregon's experience is of particular importance because in 1974 it became the first state to "decriminalize" possession of a small amount of marijuana. The state legislature reclassified that activity as a civil offense, similar to a parking violation, and established a maximum fine of $100.

Since that time, legislators in nine other states have passed similar legislation. But only in Oregon is it possible to measure the impact of the new approach over a span of more than three years.

The results of the recent statewide survey commissioned by the Council are startling, not because marijuana smoking has dropped the state as a percent, but because the latest law hasn't significantly changed most people's attitudes or their attitudes toward "grass."

In the earlier Oregon survey, conducted shortly after the 1974 vote, 67 percent of all respondents said they were currently using marijuana. In the most recent poll, conducted last year, the number increased very marginally, to 68 percent.

When these are not using marijuana were asked to explain their abstention, the overwhelming majority — 69 per cent — cited the possibility of impaired health or legal prosecution but simply a lack of interest.

A California law similar to Oregon's states would allow a year later after the 1978 election to vote on a referendum to allow the state to purchase 2 percent of those participating had first tried marriage after the legal penalties were reduced and fewer than half of those people returned their ballots to a new law.

Another Important Bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — If there is a single legislative item that the House and Senate are likely to pass in the next few weeks, it is a bill to cut back on the federal government's spending on research and development.

The bill, known as the Research and Development Reduction Act, would cut the federal budget for research and development by 10 percent over the next five years.

The bill is sponsored by Rep. James W. Buckley (R-N.Y.), a member of the House's subcommittee on research and development.

The bill is expected to pass the House in the next few weeks and the Senate in the next few months.

Too Many Ignore X-Ray Cancer Warnings

WASHINGTON — Scientists have been sounding the alarm for several years now that too many Americans are ignoring the warnings of their doctors to quit smoking.

The American Cancer Society has reported that in 1976, 10 million Americans smoked more than 20 cigarettes a day.

The society says that 10 million more Americans are expected to start smoking in the next few years.

The society also says that 10 million more Americans are expected to die of lung cancer in the next few years.

SAN LUIS VALLEY, N.M. (UPI) — The death toll from a desert bus crash rose to 30 today, including 11 children, and a Red Cross official said it would probably go higher.

Of the 48 injured, many are in terrible condition, said Carlos Quintero.

Kidnappers Used Police Van

ROME (UPI) — The terrorist kidnappers of former Premier Aldo Moro may have spirited him away in a stolen police van to a hideout far from Rome, investigators said today.

If confirmed, the report would be the most serious blow to date to hopes of tracking down the leftist Red Brigades gang that ambushed Moro one week ago and gunned down all five of his bodyguards.

"A police van could have gone almost anywhere without being checked," one official said.

Tanker Oil Kills Wildlife

BREST, France (UPI) — Thousands of tons of oil still inside the wrecked supertanker Amoco Cadiz probably will ooze into the ocean before the weather allows crews to pump the thick, dark, marine authorities say.

At least 170,000 tons have gushed out to blacken the once beautiful beaches of Brittany and kill thousands of oysters, fish and birds.

At the present rate of leakage, the battered ship's tanks possibly will be empty by the time the spring tide abates Monday, said Harry Rinkaman, spokesman of Amoco, a subsidiary of Standard Oil of Indiana which owns the ship.

Trekkers rejoice! Mr. Spock is coming back — and so is the whole "Star Trek" crew — for a big screen resurrection. At least that's the word in New York from Rona Barrett. She told ABC-TV's "Good Morning, America" Wednesday that Paramount Pictures finally has decided to turn the old TV Trek show into a major motion picture — and Leonard Nimoy, who first returned, has been signed to recreate the pointy-eared Mr. Spock. She says Paramount will announce next week the on-air-off-air project is on again — with William Shatner once more commanding Starship Enterprise as Captain Kirk.

Guess who's persona non grata in the Soviet Union now? Why, that decadent running dog of an imperialist, artist Andy Warhol, that's who. It's a Hindu deity jar filled with $104,000 in precious stones. Hufti Glastok, "Warhol... declared that in the next year he would stich money on canvas. With a lot of translation, any New Yorker would know the curative value of margie. It's chicken soup.

W. Springs Mayor Continues Push For Utility Purchase

By DONNA BRYNE
Special Staff Writer

TROY PILAND ... pushes purchase

Should W. Springs purchase the North Orlando Water and Sewer Corp. and should the city change the title of its mayor and grant him a raise to pay to assume administrative responsibilities?

Mayor Troy Piland thinks the answer is yes in both instances and tried again this week to persuade his city council to consider both the deal in a workshop as soon as possible.

"We cannot wait any longer to make a decision," Piland said of the purchase of the utility system, a service he said is the responsibility of the residents of W. Springs, urging that date be collected, a fiscal agent be called upon to look into the matter and an engineer be hired to prepare a feasibility study.

Will the selling price include the underground lines? Piland said yes, but the deal will not be made until it permits negotiations to begin.

While some of the council members opposed a preliminary feasibility study, Councilman John Daniels said he is concerned that general fund money will be used for such a study and yet the study will not benefit all of the citizens.

Councilman Bert Logan said he would like the more review of the matter at a workshop devoted to the single subject.

"I don't think we can operate the utility system for less than $10 million," said Councilman Leonard Pollock, adding "utility costs are going up regardless of the utility's ownership." The utility is mostly owned by Florida Gas Co., a subsidiary of Florida Gas.

Pollock urged that a person be designated to research city council members if a former member of the utility company had pledged that the ultimate purchase price to the city would not include the value of sewer and water lines which the city required developers to install.

The lines installed by the sewer and water developers were subsequently donated to the utility company.

"To procrastinate further is a disservice to the 1,500 citizens served by the utility system,"

Piland also proposed that the council consider, at a workshop, naming City Planner Dick Rossmay, the city administrator-planner with an increase in his salary to reflect the additional responsibility.

The mayor said someone has to be responsible for sitting down and handling the day-to-day problems that face the city. He said, however, that he wants Rossmay to continue on the salary he is receiving from city funds.

Piland said he wants the city to pay Rossmay a higher salary than the $50,000 annually that he is receiving from city funds.

For Wallenda Clan Fall To Death... Not New

DETROIT (UPI) — Until a cold January night 16 years ago, Karl Wallenda and his family troupe performed their high-wire act for nearly four decades without a fatality.

A fall while performing the seven-man pyramid at the State Fair Coliseum in Detroit on the night of Jan. 30, 1962, killed Wallenda's nephew, Dieter Steg, and Wallenda's son-in-law, Richard F. Steg, and left Wallenda's adopted son, Martin, a paraplegic.

The accident was the first in a string of tragedies that ended Wednesday with Wallenda's death in a 10-story fall in San Juan, Puerto Rico.

The tragedy was not the only bad memory Detroit had for Wallenda. During a 1977 performance at the city's Olympia Stadium his grip failed while descending from the highwire and he dropped 20 feet to the arena floor.

"After our accident... the feeling of Detroit people... their sympathy and understanding... was the warmest I've ever known."

Just a month ago in an interview with a Detroit newspaper, Wallenda said: "I have no fear, because when I walk on the wire, I walk with God."

"I'm not a phony, I put myself out in the line, and there must be danger for me if the audience is going to have excitement. That is the deal I made a long time ago. You could not do the things I have done with fear in your heart."

Communication Lines Open Between City And Citizens

She's The Mayor's Trouble Shooter

Charlotte Conway checks out all complaints registered at Alkamonte Springs City Hall and also serves as an information center.

By JOAN HARRISON
Special Correspondent

When citizens call about problems like potholes and driveway blocking a stop sign, Mrs. Conway of the Public Service Director personally check to make sure the problems are satisfactorily corrected.

It's a sign that the lines of communication are open between City Hall and the 22,000 residents of the city. To insure that citizens' complaints are not only heard, but looked into, the Community Affairs position was created, and Mrs. Conway receives all complaints and information calls.

"It helps when citizens can call one person and talk to them without being switched back and forth," she says. "I feel it's a good service and I've heard a lot of people say it works out real well. And I think the individual deserves that. If a person takes enough time to call, then they have a problem. I want the people on the end to remain with the idea that, yes, it is important, and to give them a courteous answer, one they deserve. I have tried to instill that in all departments."

"This is how we're trying to get to some of the people to help them understand local Government. We'll conduct tours of the five departments, police department, city corporation at any time. We do it frequently for school groups," the Mayor said.

"I must have five or 10 interviews a week from kids in civic classes. I always try to make time because I think it's very important."

She feels he's well on his way of achieving his goal of the elimination of feelings of isolation of the public with their local government, and the enhancement of their relationship.

"We're also working on a Civic Awareness Week and we'll set up different types of programs, displays, etc. to let citizens know what they're paying for and what they're getting," he explained.

He also referred to a questionnaire which will be used to encourage citizens input, which he hopes will facilitate communication with the 22,000 residents.

New citizens will no longer find themselves bewildered regarding city services and who to call for what. When new residents come to City Hall to have their water turned on, they'll soon be given a brochure explaining city services, complete with telephone numbers to call for utility assistance.

A new voter registration desk at city hall is a convenience provided to help new citizens more easily become registered voters. The Mayor also en-

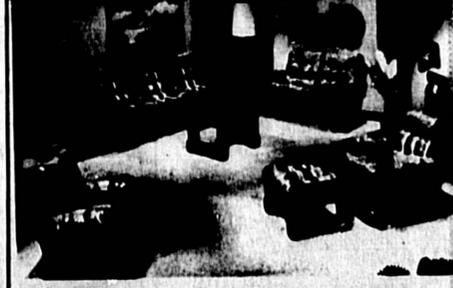

Alkamonte Springs Mayor Norman Floyd and Mrs. Conway discuss a trouble area which needs attention.

Alf Backs Hopeful: It's His Daughter

TOPEKA, Kan. (UPI) - Wednesday, she held news conferences in her hometown of Wichita, Topeka, Overland Park and Pittsburg to discuss her campaign. The Topeka news conference was in a wood-paneled study at the white-columned London mansion.

Mrs. Kassebaum said she is running her own campaign and did not expect her father to campaign for her. London, Wis., a Kansas governor before his daughter's presidential bid, said he would support his daughter wholeheartedly in her primary race against five other GOP contenders.

Nancy London Kassebaum, 46, is seeking the nomination for the Senate seat being vacated in the retirement of Sen. James Pearson, R-Kan.

"I am very happy and delighted to see we have a sensible candidate in the race," London said. "I think from every angle politically she has shown a great grasp of political realities. I'm sure she's going to be a candidate I'm proud to support."

When asked if he was going to vote for Mrs. Kassebaum, London laughed and said, "You bet I am! How many times!" Mrs. Kassebaum announced her candidacy Tuesday.

Health Chief Battla Fears Encephalitis

Anti-Mosquito Plan For Seminole?

By DONNA EYER
Herald Staff Writer

Fearing an outbreak of St. Louis encephalitis in Seminole County this year, Dr. Harold Battla, county public health director, has urged the county commission to fund and initiate a mosquito control and eradication program.

In a memo to the county commission, Dr. Battla noted that three Seminole residents in 1977 died from the illness transmitted from water fowl and birds by mosquitoes to humans.

Troy Todd, director of human services in the county, today estimated the cost of such a countywide program at $100,000 annually.

And County Commission Vice Chairman Robert French said that at this point he can see no reason for the county to fund a mosquito control program on a county basis.

"I don't consider three cases out of 100,000 people in the county to be an epidemic. I would have to look at the program and problem long and hard before spending $100,000 of the taxpayers' money."

"I can be shown that there is going to be a problem, however, I probably would consider spending the money for it," French said.

"I have already stated my position of supporting a countywide mosquito control program for consideration for Seminole County," said Commissioner John Alexander, today, adding that by countywide, he means the municipal areas, too.

'I'd have to look at the program long and hard'

The county commission received a letter from the state Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services in late February saying that St. Louis encephalitis "can be a serious threat to the public health and economy of an area where outbreaks do occur."

The letter mentioned that the only method known for controlling this disease is by effective control of the mosquitoes, adding that Seminole County has not requested state matching funds for a mosquito control program.

Todd said the matching funds constitute only eight percent of the cost. He said his $100,000 estimate for an effective program countywide is only a preliminary figure and was based on the Orange County program now in effect that is costing about $250,000 annually.

"The $100,000 is a ball-park figure based on relative facts," he said.

Mosquito control programs are in effect in Volusia, Orange and Osceola Counties in Central Florida. In Seminole County, Sanford began its annual mosquito fogging program Thursday according to Mack Lashley, city engineer and utility director.

Fogging is scheduled to begin in Altamonte Springs Monday and Altamonte City Engineer Paul Babin, Longwood City Council Vice Chairman Jose Lerman said the annual fogging program for the eradication of mosquitoes is scheduled to begin in her city on April 1.

Charmis in Canaberry have petitioned the city council there to appropriate money from the city's emergency contingency fund to initiate a fogging program.

Ministers End Dispute Over Sunday Sales

By MARK WEINBERG
Herald Staff Writer

The Greater Sanford Ministerial Association, which led an unsuccessful drive to defeat a proposed city ordinance allowing Sunday package sales of beer and wine in Sanford, will not seek a voter referendum on the question.

"There will be no petition drive for a referendum," said the Rev. Dan Cox, pastor of the First Assembly of God Church, 27th and Elm streets. "The association made the decision of its monthly meeting this week. We feel the city commission should reconsider and place the question on the ballot."

The Rev. Cox and others who opposed the ordinance at the March 13 city commission meeting, where the ordinance passed 5-2, said they would not support the ordinance if it were placed on a ballot.

Voting in favor of the ordinance at the meeting were Commissioners John Morris, A.A. McCaskey and Roger Lee P.

'We feel the city commission should reconsider and place the question on the ballot'

Moore. Voting against the ordinance were Commissioners Julian

Stewart and Eddie O. Keith.

"We feel we presented a good, legitimate case, and the city fathers took a different stand. We regret that they have done this. We feel the ordinance is a step in the wrong direction. We also regret the fact that the city commission would not allow the citizenry to vote on it," the minister said.

The Rev. Cox was referring to the city commission's 5-2 defeat March 13 of a motion by Commissioner Stewart which would have delayed the effective date of the ordinance until Jan. 1, 1979 (to allow the ministers time to mount a petition drive, Stewart said) and the 5-2 commission defeat the same night of another motion by Stewart to place the question on the ballot at the city's Dec. 8 election.

Both of Stewart's defeated motions received support from Keith, but Morris, Moore and McCaskey voted to defeat both motions.

"We feel we vocalized our stand against this ordinance, the city fathers have spoken, and that's where we're going to let it lay," said the Rev. Cox.

Voting Begins, Coal Contract Approval Still A Tossup

WASHINGTON (UPI)— With only a few scattered returns reported, coal miners in parts of Ohio and Kentucky today voted strongly against a new contract proposal that would end the record 30-day work stoppage.

However, a sampling of voting returns in Alabama indicated they would approve the deal and return to work. But only a trickle of results were in and many miners, still trying to establish union halls, were reportedly ready to vote to accept the contract. Final results from a majority of the 770 unions and 100,000 miners were not expected until later today.

Union officials in areas where contracts was strong against the contract acknowledged pushing an early vote to sway other miners through negative publicity.

The voting came amid reports of an early work stoppage and increased economic hardship in miners' families.

Some miners in both Ohio and Kentucky began casting votes at 10:00 a.m. EDT.

Robert Canfield, president of Local 100, the largest local in eastern Kentucky's District 10, said his members were overwhelmingly rejecting the contract.

Canfield estimated 130 of the first 140 miners that voted were against the settlement. He acknowledged his local wanted to vote early to influence other districts to reject the contract.

First unofficial results were reported from a small local in Probation, Ohio, where the contract was rejected, 210-104.

A UMW spokesman pointed out, however, that the Probation local had voted more strongly against ratification on the first contract proposal, rejecting that deal 61-45.

Today was the second time the miners were called to decide on a contract offer. On March 5, over 70 percent rejected a proposed pact.

An earlier proposed settlement was rejected by the union bargaining council and cover was submitted to the rank and file.

After the March 5 vote, President Carter invoked the Taft-Hartley law and a federal judge ordered miners to return to work. Miners defied the order and eight days later the same judge ruled in miners' favor. That made the nation's longest continuous nationwide coal strike legal again.

United Mine Workers leaders, anxious for ratification, guarded against momentum from early results affecting the outcome by ordering all voting to occur today, Coal Prices.

Voting began amid scattered incidents in the east. Two cars were fired upon in Illinois District 15. That made the nation's longest coal strike. A 1978 Mine Workers union. Police reported no injuries.
