Blake warms up for NFL Quarterback Challenge

Special to the Herald

IT WAS THE VETERAN who took the Sanford Herald's attention when he promptly accepted the challenge to take on 11 of the best quarterbacks in the world in the annual NFL Quarterback Challenge. The Sanford native, Jeff Blake, was the only Sanford resident to be selected.

Blake, 30, is currently the starting quarterback for the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in the NFL. He is a two-time Pro Bowl selection and has led the team to two Super Bowl appearances. He is also a member of the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

Blake will be competing against 11 other quarterbacks from around the world in the challenge. The challenge is held at Disney Institute in Orlando, Fla.

Blake's coach, Dan Marino, will be coaching him during the challenge. Marino is a former NFL quarterback and has won the NFL MVP award twice. He is also a member of the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

The challenge is a test of a quarterback's skills. It includes passing, rushing, and punting. The challenge is held annually and is one of the most prestigious events in the NFL.

Blake's participation in the challenge is a testament to his skills as a quarterback. He is one of the best quarterbacks in the NFL and is expected to have a successful season for the Buccaneers.

Feds crack down on herbal 'high'

It's billed as a natural stimulant that gives the same euphoric effect as illegal drugs, sold in health food stores and mixed into fruit drinks on supermarket shelves.

Now the government is telling young people to steer clear of certain dietary supplements that contain ephedrine, saying they can cause heart attacks, seizures, coma, psychosis, and the "colic" warning. Ephedrine is just a name step — the Food and Drug Administration is preparing to crack down on the products.

Local health food stores said they do not carry the synthesized product, though some carry the herb, ephedra, which they say is a natural treatment for hay fever, asthma, and nasal congestion. Some people also use the natural herb as a weight loss product.

The ephedrine supplements are not traditional "street drug" products that are masquerading as dietary supplements, said FDA Commissioner David Kessler, who investigated when the relatives of a 20-year-old who died questioned him about ephedrine. "I believe they're drugs and should be treated as such," said Kessler.

The FDA warned consumers not to buy or use certain ephedrine-containing supplements such as Herbal Eassey that promise ephedrine-enhanced strength, awareness, and enhanced athletic performance. They're marketed mostly to young people.

City officials seek probe into pension fraud, abuse

TALLAHASSEE — The Florida League of Cities and a budget watchdog group want the state to create a task force to look into allegations of fraud and abuse in police and fire pension plans. House passes balanced property insurance bill TALLAHASSEE — A bill to help Florida's property insurance market strikes a good balance between fairness to insurance companies and protection of homeowners, a key supporter said. The House passed the legislation 89-27 Wednesday, but differences with a companion Senate bill all but guarantee the House will be voting on the proposal again.

but we are not going to put the consumers of the state of Florida on the altar and sacrifice their homeowners insurance to put the profits in the pockets of insurance companies," said Rep. John Coogrove, a Miami Democrat who chairs the Insurance Committee. In the House, critics of the bill (HB 2693) said it failed to reduce regulation to make Florida a more attractive place for insurers to do business.

Is too much sleep a problem?

DEAR DR. GOTT: Please explain the phenomenon of getting too much sleep — when you get plenty but feel as if it wasn't enough and you spend the rest of the day trying to wake up.

DEAR READER: In a normal person, the body requires a certain amount of sleep. This can vary from 10-12 hours for an infant, to 6-8 hours for a healthy adult. When we are sick or stressed, our bodies may need more sleep.

As a general rule, it's impossible to get too much sleep. When the brain has had enough, it causes awakening. Obviously, I'm talking about the normal pattern here.

Depression, the use of tranquilizing drugs, and various types of sleep disorders — such as narcolepsy — severely alter the ordinary sleep/wake cycle.

In most cases, people who sleep a long time haven't slept well. They may have been awakened several times during the night or, for one reason or another, their normal sleep cycle may have been interrupted frequently. Such people seem to "sleep" for long periods, only to awaken feeling tired.

What really happens is that their brains are trying unsuccessfully to obtain more sleep to counteract the abnormal slumber pattern. This phenomenon is a particularly troublesome feature of "jet lag," in which the brain must re-set its biological clock to accommodate a different time zone.

Sleep cycles are easily upset by stress, worry, noise, alcohol (and a host of other prescription and non-prescription drugs), pain, muscle cramps, the desire to urinate, poor circulation, restless legs syndrome, and many other factors. In most instances, once these sleep-interrupters have been identified and addressed, a normal sleep-cycle can be re-established.

I suggest you raise these issues with your family doctor.

To give you more information, I am sending you a copy of my Health Report "Sleep/Wake Disorders." Other readers who would like a copy should send $2 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2017, Murray Hill Station, New York, NY 10156. Be sure to mention the title.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My 82-year-old husband sleeps all the time. He will get up for breakfast, but sleep in his chair until lunch and then again until dinner. Blood tests are normal, but something can't be. Do you have any suggestions?

DEAR READER: For a variety of reasons, elderly people may not sleep

MEDICINE

pattern. Also, you should investigate the possibility that he is just plain bored — and is sleeping literally to pass the time away.

To test this hypothesis (while you're waiting for the neurologist's appointment), try to stimulate him more during the day. Go for walks. Take him shopping at the mall. Get him interested in a hobby or other creative activity. Take him on a vacation — ANYTHING to get him out of his favorite chair after meals.

Remember, too, that all of us tend to become sleepy after a big meal, so try cutting back on his portions, especially if he's overweight.

WIN AT BRIDGE

Value for members

By Phillip Alder

Bridge is an inexpensive pastime. Just think how much you pay for an evening's duplicate compared with, say, going to a concert or the ballpark. And some clubs give their members even more value for their money by publishing a newsletter.

One such club is the Vanderbilt in Lake Success, N.Y. Today's deal is taken from its bulletin. How should South play in six spades after West leads the heart ace and switches to a trump at trick two?

North's initial two-diamond response was, by partnership agreement, forcing to game. Hence South's quiet raise to three diamonds. The problem, obviously, is to play the diamond suit without loss. Declarer drew trumps. East discarding a club on the third round. Next, South cashed his two heart tricks, throwing diamonds from the dummy. Declarer noted with interest that East discarded another club. Finally, declarer cashed his club ace, played a club to dummy's king and ruffed the club six in hand. When West threw a heart, the deal had become an open book.

East was known to have begun with two spades, two hearts and six clubs. So, he must have three diamonds. Declarer played a diamond to dummy's ace and a diamond to his 10, taking a 100-percent finesse.

When you can play a suit more than one way, leave your decision as late as possible. And never stop counting.
