Congress Did A Lot Of Talking

The recent Congress did a great deal of talking. So much talking in fact that 16,211 printed pages filled the Congressional Record for the session. Of course all those pages do not represent actual talk in the vocal chords of the legislators. They have the privilege of inserting speeches which they do not actually make into the Record, as well as other material such as newspaper editorials and letters from constituents.

Debate and discussion are necessary in the legislative bodies of any democracy. No one would want to see the freedom of speech of the Senators and Representatives curtailed. But it does seem, sometimes, that they might be less wordy. Often they talk at great length on subjects which are not even remotely concerned with the issues at hand. There have been many instances where legislation has been literally talked into law by the members of Congress.

It cost $1,371,000 just to print the Congressional Record for this session. The fellow who first quipped that talk is cheap was not referring to talk in Congress.

Courtesy Is Unlimited

Courtesy is not inherited. It is not something which may be purchased or given from one person to another.

Courtesy is an attribute dependent entirely upon the individual. Of course good teaching helps, but the extent to which courtesy is learned and practiced is up to the individual person.

Now, courtesy also is unlimited. This quality is not limited to tipping a hat, saying excuse me or holding a door open for a woman. It is not limited to the proper use of silverware, giving a lady a seat on a bus or helping an old woman across the street.

Courtesy is definitely an attribute which may be practiced in about all phases of living—including driving an automobile.

Now, courtesy in connection with driving an automobile may also be designated as the safety of other motorists, or just plain use of good, common sense.

Modern, congested driving presents a difficult problem at best. A large number of discourteous drivers makes this problem even worse.

Last November, a man campaigning for President Eisenhower bore a number of Eisenhower advertising emblems on his car. Now, this man, using psychology, thought he had better watch his driving or some other motorist may get sore and vote for the Democratic candidate.

This campaigning man was surprised at the good will he engendered among motorists with whom he came into contact. There were other motorists who were surprised at his courtesy.

The results were so satisfactory, this particular motorist continued his newly-formed driving habits after the election.

Now, good driving habits are easy to accumulate with just a little effort.

The biggest nut in a car sometimes is the one holding the wheel.

Old Order Passeth

The old-fashioned truant officer seems to be passing from the American school scene. He is being replaced in many schools with a well-trained "attendance teacher," prepared to find out just what it is that makes students stay away from schools. A New York State Senator said recently that he intends to introduce legislation which will make training in psychology mandatory for attendance teachers in New York.

The trend represents progress. But it should not be believed that the truant officers of other days was utterly lacking in a knowledge of psychology. He may not have known in which of Freud's books he could find the answers to why schoolboys play hooky, but he did know where the hooky players. For many youngsters he represented their first experience with the meaning of "the long arm of the law." Most of the "trouneys" we knew personally seemed to be gifted with second-sight and a strong second wind.

The attendance teacher will doubtless be prepared to use modern methods to keep the youngsters in line and in the classroom and this is all for the best. The truant officer seems to be going the way of the one-room school house, the nickel cigar and the five-cent cup of coffee.

Farm Problem Back To Fore

NEW YORK (AP)—Skidding farm prices—set against the background of a record high cost of living—brings the whole farm problem to the fore again this week.

Wheat, cotton and corn—the big three crops from which come the nation's bread, clothing, meat, milk and eggs—are at a level of surplus which under the law call for federal crop production controls.

Farmer income this year, the government says, is running 11 per cent behind last year.

At the grocery, however, the government reports that food prices generally are only about two per cent lower than last year. A rise in food prices this summer helped push the government's measure of the cost of living to an all-time high.

The farmer might be getting even less if federal price supports hadn't come to his aid. In the fiscal year ended June 30, the U. S. treasury got out 20 billion dollars in support money, to which all taxpayers contributed.

The government holds large stocks of grain. It expects large amounts of this year's cotton crop to move under the protection of government loans.

Butter has been a well publicized government problem. Under price supports it has bought up large quantities of surplus butter. The price of butter has stayed so high at the stores, however, that margarine men have had little trouble in increasing the sales of their product.

Now some are suggesting that the government get rid of its butter by taking a price cut—offering it at a wholesale for considerably less than it presumably will go on paying dairy farmers for fresh production.

Price breaks in the commodity markets used to be blamed on the Korean War. Peace rumors were said to frighten traders.

But with a Korean truce now an actuality, this week's sharp drop in wheat prices is being laid to fear that the farmers won't elect to come under government production regulations. If they vote against this, the price at which next year's crop will be supported by the government is automatically lowered.

Traders figure that the only way wheat prices could go in that case would be down.

The stocks of wheat held by the big producers—the United States, Canada, Argentina and Australia—total in excess of one billion bushels now. This is more than double the stocks held a year ago.

Exports of American farm products have been declining while bumper crops have been piling up.

Part of the reason for the export drop can be found in the large stocks available from other nations. Countries that are trying to save U. S. dollars look to other sources for grain and cotton when they can.

Home consumption of farm products, however, has been rising. For one thing, the population of this country is increasing at a rate of 2,620,000 a year. For another, total personal income (with the farmer the chief exception) has been going up. With more money to spend, Americans have been eating better, dressing better. But farm production has increased even faster.

Until the government—or the farmers—can find a way to lick the twin problems of declining exports and increasing farm production in excess of domestic needs, the farm problem is going to be one of this country's biggest headaches.

Sharp deflation of farm prices—against continued inflation of products of the mill, factory and mine—could upset the entire economy.

HERE'S HOPING THE GAS HOLDS OUT!

HAL BOYLE

Open Letter To Former GI Joes

NEW YORK (AP)—An open letter to any of the few American prisoners in Korea who chose to remain behind the Bamboo Curtain.

Dead GI Joe:
So you don't want to come home, kid? You've picked the Red over the red, white and blue.

Why? Is it because your former buddies in the prison camps knew you had turned informer and ratted on them to get better treatment? And you were afraid to come back because you'd have to face the day of reckoning?

In every war there is a handful like you. Thousands of your fellow American prisoners died rather than yield their beliefs. Other thousands clung stubbornly to their faith through months or even years of sickness and bare-boned hunger.

The dead lie in unmarked graves but live in honored memory. The living will return to a hero's welcome.

And you, the handful who tried to sell them out for an extra mouthful of wheat, who professed your faith for less than a measly postage stamp, who will never get your only family back who have dishonored. And it were better if even they never knew your guilt.

Maybe you weren't actually the stool pigeon on the other side. Maybe you thought you were called a "progressive," a Red sympathizer. Because your captors actually sold you communism on principle.

Either way, kid, you've made one of the world's worst buys. By refusing to be repatriated you became a deserter, and that is the way your Army will list you, even if it never can try you as a traitor.

You have traded an old and tried freedom for a new will-o'-the-wisp "freedom," the false harsh light of the world. You have abandoned the Statue of Liberty and the Stars and Stripes for the blood-red symbol of the hammer and sickle.

Your fellow prisoners say that when they started the long, 3-year journey home, you were having a party among yourselves. What and you be celebrating? And when they had departed, and you had filled your belly with meat and drunk all the liquor you want, what do you think?

Did you get a little sick inside? Did you look around the empty camp? Did you realize that now you will never have a home again in your life, and you might as well drop the word from your vocabulary?

Now there is nothing for you to come back to. And what is there for you to look forward to?

The Red guards must look at you with open contempt now. For they need you no longer. There will see narrowed there the image of one who betrayed either his buddies or his principles, or both.

The top Communists will never trust you. The only use they can now find for you is to trot you from place to place to parrot their propaganda. And when your value as a window-dressing or showpiece for communism dwindles, what will be your reward? Labor in a dark camp? A casual bullet in the park, and a ditch grave?

Emergency Feed Scandal Checked
ALBUQUERQUE (AP)—Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-NM) has discounted reports that Texas stockmen are reselling government drought emergency feed at a profit.

"Included instances of abuse of federal aid to stockmen may occur," Anderson said. "But the county committees are checking each applicant carefully, and very few of such incidents will occur."

Anderson said he believed the drought program is "well and carefully administered."

Too Late To Classify

By RUSSELL KAY
for a long time—but it does indicate a trend and in the years ahead California's volume will probably be reduced as growers there quit the business and turn to something more promising.

In Florida, too, we find citrus groves being torn up to make way for subdivisions to a limited extent, and during the past few years we have been planting new groves that probably never will be harvested. In metropolitan areas like Tallahassee, St. Petersburg, Miami, Orlando and a few other localities, we are exacting to see our citrus operations make way for business and new industry, for business is reaching numbers and our citrus areas are expanding just as they are in Southern California.

A survey by Sunbelt Growers, Inc., reveals that approximately 25,000 acres of grove have been junked to make for a more profitable and profitable venture in the real estate business. Cash on the barrel head looks better to California growers than years of paltry profits or possible red ink in the orange growing business.

The weather has never been as kind to California growers as it has to those in Florida. Smudge pots and firing in the order of the day out there, and while an occasional freeze may hurt Florida growers, the hazard is not there near as great in this state.

Operation costs have steadily risen in the West, much more so than in Florida. Oil for heaters is costly, and on top of this some Southern California communities have passed ordinances that make it unlawful to burn anything that creates a smudge or smoke, such as old tires, in fighting frost.

Industrial development in the West has been extensive and it has forced the California grower to compete with high wage industry for labor, a situation that has so far proven no problem to Florida operators.

Another problem created by this kind of industrial growth in the West is the damage to crops and fruit from factory fumes that lay a deadly smog over large areas. According to a report of the Citrus Experiment Station at Riverside, Calif., air pollution ($60,000) worth of damage to Los Angeles County crops alone in 1955.

This situation does not necessarily mean that California is going to be wiped off the map as a citrus competitor—at least not

ANTS
There's a new and better way to kill ants. It's called Roach Films. When applied to any surface with the built-in cap-applier, it leaves a hard, dry, clean, invisible film. The film can't harm or soil any surface; but, when ants touch it, their legs become paralyzed and they die in two hours. A single application remains effective for sure does get rid of ants and reaches: Roach Films is available months. You never see it, but it is at Touchton Drug. —Adv.

Dorothy Roe Gives Some Sound Advice

Today's women are world-beaters, says New York financier Charles A. Wyman, at practically everything except investing money.

They can be crack career women or tops in any field, but they invest their personal nesteggs, he asserts, as if they were betting on a horse race.

"I'm not referring to widows only, who often are beset by the sudden necessity of handling their own money. I'm talking about career women, housewives and smart business women who are brilliant at their jobs, but become hazy in the woods when they start to invest their personal funds."

Wyman says most women buy stocks on either the "hunch" or the bargain-hunting system. They may choose a certain stock because its name appeals to them or another because it is cheap. This he points out is a good way to lose your shirt in the stock market.

Wyman offers a few suggestions to women who want to invest their money but don't quite know how to go about it.

1. Hold a part of your savings in cash, waiting for a favorite time to invest. A bit of extra cash earmarked for investment often permits you to take advantage of opportunities that otherwise would be lost.
2. Don't fall in love with a stock. If it lets you down, get rid of it. No wise investor ever puts his savings in anything and forgets about them. Intelligent investing involves a knowledge of when to sell as well as when to buy.
3. Two methods are used by experienced investors in buying and selling stocks. The first uses a formula based on the cyclical nature of prices. The other is analytical—the investor follows closely the progress of the company through its financial reports and figures out for himself when is the best time to buy or sell.
4. Forget the idea that you can make a million in the stock market by some foolproof trick. It just doesn't happen that way. No formula automatically piles up fortune.
5. Do not buy a security until you have investigated it thoroughly. Inquire into the financial status of the company, read its stockholder reports, inquire into possible future plans for expansion.
6. Review your holdings frequently, jitting down the reasons why you want to hold or sell each.
7. Do not depend on tips, hunches or feminine intuition. Remember that facts are the only sound basis for buying or selling.
8. Don't be afraid to read the annual report of a company. Any woman who can figure out a household budget should be able to understand whether or not a company is solvent.
9. Don't go on a stock-buying spree the way you go shopping—to lift your spirits or collect bargains.
10. Apply the same native shrewdness to buying stocks that you do to finding the best buy in the grocery store.

Forty Letters Written By One Man May Have Put Down Distant Revolt

By RICHARD KIRKMAN
AP Newsfeatures
DIRESCIA, Italy — The local Lev collectors, says White Sultan of Danabalia — believes he has put down an African native revolt 1,000 miles away by mail. He's Giuseppe Cesare Cancelli, a quiet mannered doctor of literature.

Danabalia is a remote region of inner Ethiopia. News stories told of tribal revolts. He wrote letters to the region's tribal chiefs commanding them. "Re-store order, live in peace."

The chiefs know him as their "Farangi Sultan" — while Sultan Somale passed — and news dispatches reported order in Danabalia at least temporarily restored. Italian papers in publishing the story credit Cancelli whom they term the "Balban Lawmaker."

Twenty years ago Cancelli, former librarian and automobile racer was a courier for the Italian Army, fighting in Abyssinia. At the end of the campaign he agreed to remain in Africa and was nominated the first Italian resident to Danabalia.

He went there alone but to native hatred, carrying a portable radio, a few bottles of brandy and official rubber stamps, only emblem of his newly acquired rank.

Eventually, friendly with malaria, he arrived at his destination in his most of the native saw a white man for the first time. It took him almost two years, but finally he was able to gain the friendship and respect of the chiefs.

Then came World War II. Cancelli was ordered again by radio to organize a line of resistance against the British. He did for a few weeks. Then he was captured and sent to a camp in British Somaliland.

He didn't remain there long. His native "subjects" helped him to escape and he made his way to Naples.

His life is quieter now. Yet sometimes, amid hundreds of income tax records, his mail brings in letters envelops, there's rarely anything but a fingerprints with strange scribbles on them, the signatures of his former subjects.

Florida's Farm Receipts Go Up, But Farm Population Decreases

GAINESVILLE (Special) Even while Florida's receipts from farm products have increased greatly during the decade 1940-50, the state's farm population decreased sharply during the same period.

W. K. McPherson, professor of agricultural economics at the University of Florida, after a study of 1950 Census data point out that the rural farm population of Florida decreased 22.4 percent, even though the rural nonfarm population increased 70.3 per cent.

Writing in Economic Leaflets, monthly publication of the University's Bureau of Economic and Business and Research, McPherson reported that the short-term effect of the decreased farm population has been that "after taking into account changes in the value of the dollar, receipts from marketed farm products increased more than 133 per cent during the decade."

The figures for Seminole County were listed as follows:

Increase in total population in 1940 to 1950—3,670; increase percentage—20.5; increase in rural on-farm population—1,475; decrease percentage—48.4; increase in all farms, 541; increase in total acres—165,505; increase in number of commercial farms, 883.

Commercial farms constituted 10.7 per cent of all farms, included 165,505 acres, and comprised 90.8 percent of total acres in farms.

There were 98 commercial farms not residing on farms operated for a percentage of 20.8.

Male rural farm population in Seminole County were listed as follows: number, ages 10 to 19 inclusive in 1940, 284; number, ages 20 and over in 1950, 74; actual difference, 210; and percent difference, 74.8.

Only nine Florida counties showed rural farm population increases. They were Alachua, Palm Beach, Broward, Lee, Charlotte, Sarasota, Dixie, Gulf and Bay.

However, rural nonfarm population as a whole by 70.3 per cent, actually declined in 13 counties: Calhoun, Dixie, Franklin, Glades, Gulf, Holmes, Lafayette, Liberty, Martin, Osceola, Taylor, Wakulla and Washington.

In making plans for the future, the State of Florida, McPherson feels, should now seek answers to such questions as: How does a declining farm population affect the way land is utilized? If the farm population declines further, what opportunities will exist for young men to become farmers?

McPherson advises each rural community to reorganize its economic and social programs periodically.

"The number of men of ages 20 to 29, inclusive, living on Florida farms in 1950 was 63 per cent less than the number of boys ages 10 to 19, inclusive, in 1940.

McPherson therefore suggests two types of community action. First, the educational program in the secondary schools must be designed to prepare a higher proportion of farm boys to enter non-agricultural pursuits. Second, community organizations and business men must recognize that the young men leaving farms constitute a reservoir of potential businessmen and industrial workers.

"Communities that have adequate nonagricultural resources and leadership provide economic opportunities for this reservoir of manpower. On the other hand, if economic opportunities are not available these young men will migrate to other areas," he stated.

Single copies of this latest "Economic Leaflets," entitled "Some Problems and Opportunities Created by Florida's Changing Population" are available free upon request to Florida residents. Extra copies are three cents each.

Not Escaped Convicts—Just NAAS Sailors

Police in Palatka Sunday flagged down a speeding automobile thinking the occupants might be escaped convict killers and kidnapers. Georgia authorities have been seeking for several days.

However, when the car screeched to a halt on stepped four sailors from the Sanford Naval Auxiliary Air Station who explained "we were late reporting back to our base."

Radio calls from adjoining counties to Palatka stated a car had passed through Starke and Lake Butler at a high rate of speed. Sheriff W. J. Everts and Deputy Ira Smith drove to the county line on the Lake City highway to intercept the vehicle.

The car passed them at a high rate of speed, and the law enforcement officials turned around to give chase. Sheriff Everts said he was driving 30 to 40 miles an hour and was not closing the gap.

Palatka City police had been alerted and posted a road block—machine-guns and all—at a main intersection.

As the suspicious car neared the city, the driver slowed down and was stopped by the sheriff. The sailors said they were sorry they had caused such a commotion. The driver was charged with reckless driving and after arranging for a $35 bond, the sailors continued on to Sanford.

Meanwhile, the search continued today for the escaped convicts and branched out to Savannah on the Georgia Coast 350 miles from Palatka.

Dr. White To Open Dental Offices
Dr. William W. White, son of Mr. and Mrs. St. Clair White, W. First St., will open his dental offices in Sanford in the near future.

Dr. White was graduated in June from Emory Dental College in Atlanta, Ga., and passed his Georgia State Board examinations. While awaiting the results of the Florida State Board in Jacksonville in early July, Dr. White and his wife and two daughters, Kay, have been residing at their cottage on Gold Lake. They plan to move into the new home at 1600 Park Ave. in the near future where Dr. White will set up his offices.

High School Grads Eligible For Four Year Scholarships

High school graduates who plan a teaching career in the public schools of Florida are eligible for the 1,050 new four-year General Scholarships for the Preparation of Teachers which may be used at Stetson University, Dr. J. Ollie Edmunds, president, said today.

County school superintendents and college officials have just been informed of changes in the scholarship law by Thomas D. Bailey, Superintendent of the State Department of Education. Mr. Bailey said:

(1) "All State Scholarships becoming effective on or after Sept. 1, 1953 will be known as General Scholarships for the Preparation of Teachers and will have a value of $400 a year. These scholarships may be held for a period which shall not exceed four years.

(2) "That the applicant for a general scholarship must have been a resident of Florida for at least one year, and

(3) "That the holder of a general scholarship must attend a private or public institution of higher learning in Florida accredited by the State Board of Education, and must register in the school, college or department of education and have his course or program approved by the head of such department in accordance with regulations relating to teacher education and certification."

Superintendent Bailey further pointed out that Lewis Scholarship winners must register in the department of education of an approved teacher training institution and agree to teach after graduation in a public elementary or secondary school in Florida for ten many years if the scholarship is used to be eligible to keep the scholarship.

House and Senatorial Scholarship winners must register to teach or relinquish their awards. Only superintendents who were awarded House and Senatorial Scholarships on or before May 2, 1953 may continue to hold these types of scholarships and all these scholarships became vacant they will be replaced by the new general scholarships. The amendments to the scholarship law in no way affect superintendents holding these awards.

Stetson's division of education, with Dr. Ray V. Sowers as chairman, has always stressed professional training for teachers. The program of teacher training at Stetson is designed to meet requirements for graduation and those of the state board of education for certification without further examination.

The large percentage of Stetson teachers placed in Florida schools in the past evidences a fine spirit of cooperation between the university and the public schools.
