Medical Options To Angina Problem

DEAR DR. LAMB:—Four years ago I suffered a heart attack in my own home which was followed by a long hospital stay. After a few months with experimental pills, the doctor put me on nitroglycerin. This has considerably decreased the amount of discomfort which I was having but I have such little energy and cannot work with a great deal. I also find I must live a very quiet life to avoid the chest pain.

Could you tell me, Dr. Lamb, if there would be any benefit in a coronary bypass operation? I have had this operation and cannot work with a great deal. I also find I must live a very quiet life to avoid the chest pain. I have had this operation and cannot work with a great deal. I also find I must live a very quiet life to avoid the chest pain.

You, it has side effects as do almost all heart medicines, and it can cause fatigue. The problem is that poor circulation, which you are undoubtedly having, also causes fatigue, so that a lot of medical problems and even surgery may not help you. It is possible to say that before the time of your fatigue. You could simply be depressed by the hospitalization activity you are going through.
