Florida Taxes Could Make Us All Bankrupt

I have just read where there are 36 states with higher taxes than Florida. And now they recommend that a one-cent sales tax be added to soak the working man to his last penny.

Why doesn't Florida raise taxes high enough to put us in the top 10 in the nation, so we could go bankrupt at the same time the other 49 go under?

I talked to 15 men and women today, from Sanford to Orlando. I didn't stop until I found 15 who worked on a steady job, five days a week. I put the same question to all 15: After you pay your living expenses, do you have any money left on Monday morning? They all admitted they were in debt and couldn't see how they could make it.

There are hundreds of thousands living in Florida who are in the same financial condition. Can they stand another penny sales tax?

I am sure our tax-hungry journalists and politicians will say, why don't these poor suckers ask for a raise? I can tell you why — because the small-fry businessmen they are working for are in worse financial condition than the people they hire.

Have you ever read where a penny was taken off the gas tax or a penny off the sales tax? No, and you never will. Every time a politician raises the sales tax or gas tax, he does it to relieve the property tax, and that is the biggest lie any politician ever told.

It is a sure bet that the city, county and state politicians are going to start operating their governments on a more economical basis.

I would rather see bread on a poor man's table than see a pothole filled up in the road.

All of you know the old question — if you had all the feathers on your back that you could carry, would one more feather break you down?

There is no more room left in the dollar for this penny. If you have a dollar left, I urge you to spend it on a letter to your state representative telling him that if he votes for any new tax you will vote him out.

Why not spend your last dollar for a letter to Tallahassee? It has no value anyway.

Over-Active Judiciary And 'Psychological Impact'

Remember the accident at Three Mile Island? Remember how many people were injured and killed? That's right — none (which is in stark contrast to the hundreds injured or killed annually by kerosene and wood burning stoves). In the wake of that accident, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) ordered a separate reactor to shut down for a safety inspection. That completely undamaged facility at Three Mile Island (TMI Unit No. 1) has never experienced any accident.

While it will still take years and millions of dollars to complete the clean up of the damaged facility, the utility has since sought clearance from the NRC to start up their undamaged reactor TMI Unit 1 in order to begin generating low-cost energy to homes and businesses once again. After months of extensive hearings, the NRC was about to authorize a restart of TMI Unit 1 when an environmental group calling itself People Against Nuclear Energy (PANE) rushed into federal appeals court here in Washington, D.C., arguing not that the facility was unsafe, but that NRC should be required first to conduct a "psychological impact analysis" — sort of a strange take off on an environmental impact statement.

In an unbelievable case of judicial activism, Circuit Judges Skelly Wright and Carl McGowan ruled a few weeks ago in favor of PANE and ordered the NRC to cancel the original decision and to conduct a study "on the psychological health of neighboring residents" from a start-up of the facility. Circuit Judge Wilkey dissented, correctly in our view, stating that "this is yet another example of a court inventing new procedural requirements for an administrative agency... which has enormous substantive consequences."

One can just imagine the damage that can be wrought by this new legal weapon in the hands of the Ralph Nader-type groups. Under this judge-made law, for example, construction of needed defense facilities could be held up until a "psychological impact statement" is prepared; the building of new prisons, utilities, and other needed facilities could be similarly tied up for years.

This decision is another example of judicial activism run wild that lends support to the position of President Reagan and Attorney General William French Smith that judicial restraint, not judicial activism, is needed. We at the Washington Legal Foundation, a public-interest organization with 80,000 consumer members nationwide, deplore the court's decision.

As Judge Wilkey aptly put it, while psychological studies are being conducted, "for the communities near TMI-1 it will be a colder winter than predicted" with a limited supply of energy. Let's hope the full U.S. Court of Appeals or the Supreme Court will reverse this decision quickly before things really get out of hand.

Perhaps we should require that judges conduct a "psychological impact study" of their own decisions before releasing them.

Insurance Code Revisions

We have sent the following letter to all local state legislators:

We are most concerned with the House proposals concerning revisions of the Insurance Code for Florida. We believe the Senate approach is much more beneficial to the citizens of Florida. The Florida Insurance Code has been considered a model statute which many other states have chosen to emulate. The Senate proposal recognizes this and makes only minor technical changes in our existing code.

The House proposal contains the following provisions which we think are objectionable:

1. It would require the public counsel to intervene in rate changes and policy changes which properly are the responsibility of the insurance commissioner. We do not need another layer of bureaucracy.

2. It provides that legal fees for plaintiffs' attorneys will be added above any judgments awarded. It makes no provision for an attorney who successfully defends in a suit. This does not appear equitable.

3. It will eliminate residence requirements for casualty insurance agents.

4. Active military personnel will be eligible for state insurance licenses.

5. It would require that credit cards be accepted for premium payment.

6. The present restriction against suing for damages only if an injury is permanent would be changed to allow suit within 90 days if scientific medical evidence is presented; suit also could be instituted after 180 days with no scientific evidence required.

We would like to point out that under our present code, automobile insurance rates in Florida have declined by 5 percent, while nationwide, such rates have increased by 26 percent.

We urge you to support the Senate approach and retain our present code, with only minor technical changes.

Proportional? Forget It

By EDWARD J. ERLER
Public Research, Syndicated

The Voting Right's Act of 1965 originally represented an extensive exercise of Congress' enforcement power under the Fifteenth Amendment to proscribe the denial or abridgement of the right to vote "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." The great concern of the framers of the act was to provide racial minorities with equal access to the ballot. Even the most cursory examination of the debates accompanying passage of the Voting Rights Act reveals this to be its primary objective. And, in terms of this original purpose, there is little doubt that the Act has been remarkably successful. By and large no significant bars remain to registration, to voting or to candidacy for office even in the most hostile and recalcitrant areas.

In more recent years, however, emphasis has shifted from the issue of equal access to the ballot for racial minorities to the issue of equal results. The issue is no longer typically conceived of in terms of "the right to vote," but in terms of "the right to an effective vote"; no longer in terms of "disfranchisement," but in terms of "dilution."

Thus the assumption that guided the framers of the act, that equal access to the ballot would ineluctably lead to political power for minorities, has given way to the proposition that the political process must produce something more than equal access. The new demand is that the political process, regardless of equal access, must be made to yield equal results. In other words, the racial composition of an elected body ought to reflect the racial composition of the public at large.

The changes made by the House to Section 2 of the act reflect this new demand, albeit unintentionally. The changes have been made, according to proponents of the amendment, in order to overturn the 1980 Supreme Court decision in the case of City of Mobile vs. Bolden. In that case the court, drawing upon a venerable line of Fifteenth Amendment cases, held that a successful claim under the Voting Rights Act must be conditional upon a showing of discriminatory intent.

The proponents of the amendment contend that this decision makes it almost impossible to prove discrimination. One would have to produce a "smoking gun," they say — an explicit statement by legislators that their acts were motivated by a discriminatory purpose.

To remedy this situation, the proponents of the amendment have altered the language of Section 2 so that the courts will be able to consider the results of an election as well as the intentions of the legislators in establishing voting requirements. Whereas the present language of Section 2 forbids any state or political subdivision to "deny or abridge" a citizen's right to vote "on account of race or color," the amended version reads, "in a manner which results in a denial or abridgement" of the right to vote.

The great concern is that the proposed amendment will lead to the requirement for proportional representation based on race. Although the language of the amendment seeks to dispel this fear, its assurances ring hollow: It says only that a lack of proportional results in an election will not, "in and of itself," constitute a violation of the act.

Nothing could be more alien to the American political tradition than the idea of proportional representation. Proportional representation makes it impossible for the representative process to find a common ground that transcends factionalized interests. Every modern government based on the proportional system is highly fragmented and unstable.

The genius of the American system is that it requires factions and interests to take an enlarged view of their own welfare, to see, as it were, their own interest through the filter of the common good. In the American system, because of its fluid electoral alignments, a representative must represent not only those interests that elect him, but those that vote against him as well. That is to say, he must represent the common interest rather than any particular or narrow interest. This is the genius of a diverse country whose very electoral institutions — particularly the political party structure — militate against the idea of proportional representation. Proportional representation brings narrow, particularized interests to the fore and undermines the necessity of compromise in the interest of the common good.

Majority rule is, of course, the defining characteristic of democratic government. In a diverse democracy, it is almost as difficult to create effective governing majorities as it is to ensure that the governing majorities will exercise power in a manner consistent with the rights of minorities. American majorities are typically coalitions of various minorities who find it necessary to compromise their particular interests in order to form majority.

Under these circumstances, only moderate or middle ground political positions can hope to garner majority support, since no one interest will be able to dominate. As soon as a position becomes extreme, either to the left or to the right, the foundation of the majority coalition itself will be compromised. It is this continuing search for majority consensus that provides the foundation both for effective governing majorities and concern for the interests and rights of minorities. Majority elections thus force different groups to seek a common ground rather than emphasize their differences.

The overwhelming purpose of the Voting Rights Act was to create these conditions, and probably no finer example of legislation serving the common interest can be found. But transforming the Voting Rights Act into a vehicle of proportional representation based on race will undermine the ground of the common good upon which it rests.

Such a transformation will go far toward precluding the possibility of ever creating a common interest or common good that transcends racial class considerations. Yet it seems to be agreed on all sides that this is a grave danger which should be avoided. In light of this fact, the burden of proof rests with those who wish to change the intent structure of Section 2 to prove beyond possible doubt that the proposed amendment will not lead to the establishment of proportional representation based on race.

Don't Worry About Memory Lapses

Life is not easy at any age. But as we grow older there seem to be more things to worry us.

One of the most troubling is the fear that age will rob us of our memories.

People have memory lapses at all ages. When we were younger, we didn't worry when we forgot something.

Karen Reeve, assistant director of the memory project of the University of Southern California's Gerontology Center, has some cheery news for us oldsters.

"You don't start forgetting," she says. "As you age, you become more aware of lapses you've always had. And you're aware of them because you fear them as symptoms of dreaded senility."

Actually, a very small percentage of the elderly population is afflicted with senile dementia, the disease of total forgetfulness.

Ms. Reeve concedes that there is some slight change in memory as part of the aging process. But she assures us that the information is there and will come back in due time if we don't fret about it.

In addition, health problems can affect a person's memory temporarily at any age.

Ms. Reeve says that the elderly seem less likely to take advantage of the memory techniques that the young often employ. So, she offers these suggestions:

Become more organized. Take time to put everything in its proper place.

For instance, having to look in a different place each day for your car keys causes unnecessary stress. And stress can affect memory.

Be a dedicated list maker. I have trained myself to do this every day. It makes life more tranquil and more things seem to get done.

When you make your marketing list, try to group your needs according to the supermarket's sections and aisles. That assures you that nothing will be forgotten.

(My wife also marks the sale items and their prices in red ink on her shopping list and piles the specials separately on the checkout counter.)

Use your calendar for special notations. Ms. Reeve suggests that as you put away the Christmas decorations, jot down their whereabouts on the December page of next year's calendar. You won't have to waste time searching when the holiday season rolls around again.

You might also use your calendar or date book to list important dates such as the deadlines for insurance and mortgage payments.

If you must take medicines at specific times each day, parcel them out ahead of time and put them in obvious places — such as on your dining-room table, if they are to be taken before or after meals.

Try making pictures in your mind of the things you want to remember.

If you have trouble remembering names, associate the person with some familiar object or characteristic that reminds you of him or her.

And don't be embarrassed if you forget a name. My young grandchildren forget names, too.

I asked a bright 8-year-old if he knew the meaning of the word "memory."

He replied, "Memory is the thing I forget with." And I don't think he's losing any sleep worrying about it.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Human Resources Seminar Is Scheduled This Week

Today's banker must do much more than handle money. A bank employee of the '80s must be aware of more regulations and laws than ever before, and personnel officers responsible for hiring people to work in banks must apply a tough list of criteria to the prospective employee.

The Human Resources Committee of the Florida Bankers Association will sponsor a two-and-a-half-day conference Tuesday through Thursday at the Americana Dutch Resort Hotel, Lake Buena Vista. One of the highlights will take place Wednesday morning when Dr. Arnold A. Heggestad, professor and chairman, College of Business University of Florida, will offer a slide presentation entitled "The Future Environment of Banking." Workshops designed to help the bank personnel officer deal with communicating, training and development, interviewing, auditing personnel, salary, and benefits will be presented Wednesday and Thursday.

Seminar On Alcoholism

The third annual Business and Industry Seminar on the effects of alcoholism, drug abuse and other personal problems in the work force today will be held by Brookwood Lodges on Friday, March 19, from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. at the Hilton Inn Gateway Orlando. The seminar program will be "Employee Assistance Program: A Better Way to Conserve Human Resources."

The effects of these problems cost business and industry more than $1 billion a year in Florida. In absenteeism, low morale, faulty decision-making, increased accidents, low production rates, and dismissal and retraining costs. The seminar is designed to help business leaders deal with the serious problems affecting their industries to save money and valuable employees.

"Only 55 single-family homes are available along the golf course in Fairway Oaks," said Jones, "so we expect them to go fast." The homes were built by Community Homes, of Casselberry, a subsidiary of two major St. Louis construction companies.

Survey Shows

Record Interest Rates Push Up Mortgage Costs

Record high mortgage interest rates and housing costs meant that those buying a home for the first time in 1981 needed to spend almost $4 of every $10 earned to meet their monthly mortgage payments.

Based on an annual survey conducted in 11 representative markets nationwide, the Family Housing Bureau found that the average monthly mortgage payment as a percentage of income rose to 38.4 percent for first-time home buyers in 1981, up from 35.6 percent the previous year.

Repeat or second-time home buyers also spent a greater percentage of their monthly income on mortgage payments in 1981, with the percentage rising to 33.4 percent from 30.3 percent in 1980.

In 1976 first-time buyers spent only 23 percent of their monthly income on housing, while repeat buyers spent 24.9 percent. Since then, the percentage has risen steadily each year as housing costs have soared and mortgage rates have hit record highs.

Between 1976 and 1981, the average monthly mortgage payment, which includes principal, interest, taxes and insurance, rose to $694 from $329, a gain of 110 percent. Average monthly mortgage payments for first-time buyers rose to $665 from $313 during the same period, while the average payment for repeat buyers went to $725 from $342.

The survey revealed that home prices continued to rise faster than median household income in 1981. The median price of a home purchased in 1981 was $78,200, up 13.8 percent from $68,714 in 1980. But median household income rose only 8.2 percent, from $29,670 in 1980 to $32,130 in 1981.

Since 1976 the median price of a home purchased has risen from $43,340, a gain of 80.4 percent. During this same period median household income has risen 54.1 percent, from $20,840 to $32,130.

However, the study showed that the median cost of a home purchased by first-time buyers slowed appreciably in 1981, rising to $63,180 from $61,450 in 1980, a gain of only 2.8 percent. In 1980, the median price of a home purchased by first-time buyers was up 20.9 percent from $50,800 in 1979.

The rate of increase also slowed for repeat or second-time home buyers in 1981. The median price of a home purchased rose to $82,220 from $75,750 in 1980, an 8.5 percent gain. This compares to an increase of 17.2 percent between 1979 and 1980 when the median price rose from $64,600 to $75,750.

Median household income for first-time buyers rose to $30,470 in 1981 from $27,430 in 1980, an 11 percent increase. For repeat buyers median household income rose to $33,490 from $31,820 in 1980, a gain of 5.2 percent.

Stromberg Offers New Phones

Stromberg-Carlson, with facilities in Lake Mary and Longwood, has introduced a unique line of telephones designed specifically for modern business communications.

Called the ASF 3500, the new line allows the packaging of a broad range of user convenience features in a single compact instrument. While maintaining a uniformity of style, users can select instruments and features to meet specific requirements.

"The ASF 3500 is an innovative approach to the dramatically changing requirements in business communications," said Walter O'Connell, director of marketing for Stromberg-Carlson's Telephone Systems Center. "Business telephones can be connected to private branch exchanges (PBXs) or central offices (COs) offering a number of specialized features such as custom-calling, or they can be connected to key systems providing each phone with direct access to multiple lines. Until now, each of these applications required a different type of phone. ASF 3500 allows a single, highly efficient telephone design to meet a variety of business communications requirements."

The first models in the ASF 3500 family were shown at the U.S. Independent Telephone Association's Midwestern Showcase in Kansas City. One is a single-line telephone with optional transfer access key that automatically generates the momentary "on hook" condition used to access PBX features and custom calling features at central offices and optional message waiting lamp. It is intended for PBX applications and will be sold to telephone operating companies and interconnect companies through a national distributor network.

The other model is a six-button telephone with a hold key and five line keys. The new line is a replacement for the traditional 564 and 2564 model telephones used with key systems in either stand-alone mode or behind PBX systems.

O'Connell said, "These two models close the gap between the capabilities of modern telephone switching systems and old-fashioned telephone design. ASF 3500 gives the PBX and CO manufacturers a telephone compatible with the advanced capabilities of modern switches. Telephone and interconnect companies now have a compact, efficiently styled instrument with which to access their PBX and CO features."

According to O'Connell, future ASF 3500 models will offer different combinations of features, selected from a list that includes single- or multi-line configurations, integrated hands-free speakerphone, 16-digit autodialers, digital display with clock and "stop-watch" features and last-number redial.

All ASF 3500 telephones incorporate Stromberg-Carlson's SureTouch dialer, which uses integrated circuits in place of electro-mechanical parts.

AT&T To Open Data Center In Orlando Soon

ORLANDO (UPI) — An American Telephone & Telegraph Co. subsidiary plans to open a data processing center in Orlando by this fall that will employ 1,000 workers with an annual payroll of $36 million.

Company officials said the data center is part of a soon-to-be formed data processing communications subsidiary that was permitted under a federal court settlement breaking up the existing Bell System.

The Federal Communications Commission ordered the Bell System to set up a separate subsidiary to market its manufactured products by Jan. 1.

The Data Systems organization will occupy the leased office space that had housed the staff of the AT&T legal task force formed to fight the antitrust suit. The suit was dismissed earlier this year in the agreement with AT&T to sell off the 22-company telephone network.

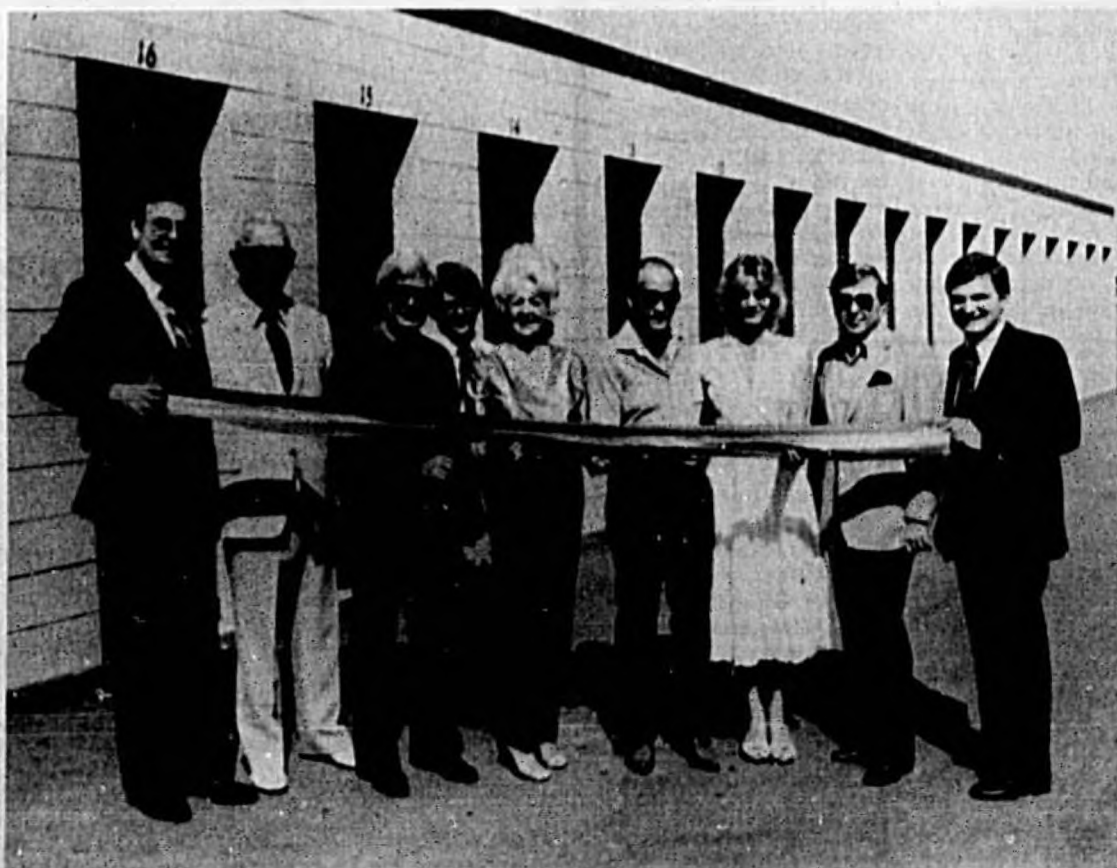

Some 600 of the jobs at the Orlando center will be filled by AT&T employees transferred from across the country, but 400 positions will be filled from the local work force, the company said.

Company officials said some members of the disbanding legal task force will be hired for clerical and data processing jobs, but it is too soon to estimate when the hiring of others would begin.

Mission: Teaching One Little... Two Little... Ten Indian Tribes

By NANCY M. NOLT
Special To The Herald

The ways of the old West may be gone, but they're not entirely forgotten, a Sanford couple found during a year's work as missionaries at a school for Indians in Arizona.

Missionary work is nothing new for Victor and Alice Kimber, 1421 Valencia St., Sanford. In the 1950s the couple had served in Transkei, South Africa, and in Rhodesia, which is now the nation of Zimbabwe. But their experiences in Africa didn't prepare them for life in a part of the United States they had only read about.

The Indians, they discovered, "were stoic — not like the emotional Africans. And they are very shy at first. It takes awhile for the Indians to 'warm up' to people and trust them."

Ten tribes are represented at Holbrook School, a boarding school located near the Navajo reservation at Holbrook, Ariz., and while the Kimbers say the students get along well at school, it is clear, said Victor, that

"Each tribe thinks it is superior to all the others."

The Indians, he added, "don't seem to want to progress as the Africans we taught did. They retain their own customs."

The Kimbers had first applied to work at the Seventh-day Adventist Church-sponsored school in the 1950s, but there were no staff openings, so they spent the years until 1980 living in Mississippi and in Florida, Alice as a social worker and Victor as a hospital technician.

Retired, they decided to try again, and this time both were needed at the school. Alice taught home economics and Victor worked in the kitchen. They were required to live on the campus, as the students do for nine months of the year, and found housing in an old Japanese prisoner of war house that had been renovated for them, although the doorknobs still were missing.

Students who left their reservations to attend the school came from Apache, Navajo, Cree, Sioux, Papago, Pima, Hopi, Flathead, Shusate and Zuni tribes. One hundred students in grades one through 12 live at the school, and while they dress in jeans and shirts as all other American youngsters, life on the reservation shows a great many differences not only from the lives of other Americans but between tribes. The dress, the customs, the skills of individual tribes are marked. Alice and Victor noted on trips to the reservations.

Their differences, however, do not always keep the Indians apart from one another. "At school, when one youngster had done something good, the others would not tell who had done the deed — not even if it was a person from another tribe," Alice said. "They are very secretive, especially with whites."

"For instance, one girl in my home ec class said her grandfather had told her never to discuss her religion with anyone because it was sacred, and secret."

It didn't take long for the Kimbers to realize that although the Indian students were shy, they were also "big teasers. When they start teasing you, then you know they have accepted you."

Alice didn't yet know she'd been "accepted" when one student played his first joke on her. The boy is a proud Navajo and was quick to set Alice straight on that point when she asked if he might be Apache. It turned out that Apaches and Navajos are great rivals, so when the youth turned up the next day with a tomahawk and began a mysterious dance around Alice, she began to yearn for the safety of home, or maybe the African jungle.

While Alice was concentrating on teaching her charges how to cook and sew, she and Victor also received some lessons on how life is lived Indian-style.

Alice laughs when she recalls the effort she had been making at teaching her home ec girls all about furnishing a home. "Here I was helping them to learn how and where to put furniture in different rooms, and one girl said, 'But we only have one room!'"

A trip to the reservation proved the girl's point. The Indians live in dwellings made of mud that are called

SCC Administrator Selected For Nationwide Program

By MERIA MANOR
Special To The Herald

Dr. Marguerite M. Culp, Assistant to the Dean of Students at Seminole Community College, is one of 70 top women in management chosen nationwide to participate in a leadership training program in Dallas, March 14-20.

The program is financed through a grant from the Fund for Improvement of Postsecondary Education (FIPSE). She is one of two selected from Florida.

The program, "Leaders for the 80s," is designed to assist community college women to assume major policy-making positions during the decade.

During the 6-month project, participants will be paired with mentors at their colleges to work on a research project that will aid their institution, participate in special regional workshops and national conferences and become involved with other women in top-ranked positions.

Dr. Culp, who lives in Wekiva, doesn't know who her national mentor is, but her local mentor is her boss, Dr. Jim Sawyer, Dean of Students at Seminole Community College.

"I hope I will get some skills which will be valuable in helping colleges to solve problems," Dr. Culp said. "This training program is supposed to give women the same experiences as men. Men have always helped each other, coached each other. They have had the 'good old boy' network. Women haven't had that experience and training.

"Mentoring is a good idea, and Dr. Sawyer is a particularly good choice for me because he is particularly good at computers. This project is looking into an advising system for colleges and this is a unique opportunity for colleges to have a nationwide consultant."

"Say a student wants a degree in business. A computer printout would show which college offers the best courses in this subject. And if he is deficient in one particular required subject, such as English, then the printout will show when and where it is being offered."

"The computer will be a super resource, not a pain. The computer never forgets. I am looking toward a walking transcript five years down the road."

"I would like to marry computers and people," Dr. Culp received her B.S. in History-German from Emmanuel College, Boston; M.Ed. in Counselor Education from the University of Virginia; Ed.S. in Administration and Supervision from Rollins College, and her Ed.D. in Curriculum and Instruction from Florida

Atlantic University. Her credentials are quite impressive.

She has done counseling and instruction at Northern Virginia Community College and Watertown Public Schools in Watertown, Mass., as well as Seminole Community College.

She has also published a chapter in the book "Up the Ladder: College Programming for Women" and articles in various educational journals.

When Dr. Culp was promoted to assistant administrator, she had one problem.

"Most Administrators don't teach," she said, "but I felt that it was critical to keep in touch with the students, so I made an agreement with the Dean that I would continue to teach one course. I teach a life career planning course for students, who don't know what they want to do with their lives. In the course I give aptitude tests and help them plan their lives."

"Students have all kinds of problems. They may be taking courses not at all suited for their major. Or they may have selected a major they may not really be interested in or have the aptitude for."

"One of their biggest problems is advisement, and basically I have come up with the proposal of academic advising system of community colleges."

Gifted Program

A Day With The Arts

Gifted students in the fifth grades throughout Seminole County participated in a Fine Arts Day on Feb. 26 at Seminole Community College.

Students selected three or four activities of their choice. The result of these activities will be shared with parents of the POGO (Parents of Gifted Organization) meeting on March 1, at 7:30 p.m., at Altamonte Elementary School.

Workshop leaders volunteering their services were the following artist: Bill Catogni, water-colors; Doreen Charland, bleach and chalk; David Clevinger, theatrical make-up; Martha Gravely, clogging; and Dell Healy, cartoon drawing.

Also: Pat McClure, drama; Barbara Muller, music; Laura Oakes, weaving; Donald Reynolds, pencil sketching; Barbara Walker-Seaman, pottery; and Del Seaman, pottery.

Paul Bramer, 10-year-old fifth grader at Lake Orienta Elementary School, tries his hand at weaving with natural fibers taught by Laura Oakes.

David Clevinger, actor, designer and teacher, applies theatrical (stage blood) makeup to Wendy Jensen, 10, a student at Forest City Elementary School.

NORMAL?

The world's most familiar medical instrument is the thermometer. It measures one of the key symptoms in most illnesses.

Too bad we have no similar instrument for measuring key symptoms of spiritual illness.

This is God's world. We are his creatures. Can there be anything more normal than to seek resources and strength from God...

Worshipping regularly provides opportunity for building spiritual health.

THE BORN LOSER

by Art Sansom

Prince Valiant
IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR
CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: JUSTINIAN'S TROOPS SIFT THE STREETS FOR VAL AND GAWAIN. PATROLS CANNOT BE AVOIDED, WHILE DISGUISE PROVES USELESS: THE ARMOR NEVER FITS. "A SMART MAN, JUSTINIAN," SAYS VAL, "TO PURSUE US WITH PINKIES." THEY MAKE THEIR WAY OVER THE ROOFTOPS TO THE VIKING QUARTER, THE VIKINGS WILL HELP.

FROM DOOR TO DOOR VAL STUDIES THE RUNC INSCRIPTIONS. ONE OF THEM READS: 'SVEN FORK-BEARD, SHIP'S MASTER.' WHEN THE DOOR OPENS....

.... PRINCE VALIANT PLACES HIS HAND UPON THE TIP OF HIS SWORD. "I SWEAR THE VIKING OATH, SVEN FORK-BEARD, I COME IN PEACE." SVEN IS A MAN OF FEW WORDS. WHEN HIS GUESTS HAVE EATEN, HE SAYS: "I SAIL TOMORROW. BE READY." SVEN'S SHIP IS A TRIREME.

"ROMAN NAVY," THE SHIP'S MASTER EXPLAINS. "LAST ONE BUILT. LAUNCHED AT OSTIA, THREE HUNDRED YEARS, PAST," BEFORE DAWN, THE GREAT WARSHIP EASES ITS BULK INTO THE GOLDEN HORN. ONCE ON OPEN SEA, SVEN BRINGS HER UP TO FULL SPEED. VAL PONDER'S 'THE WANDERER'S' RIDDLE!

"WHAT ALL MEN WANT BUT CANNOT STAND, CAN LOVE BUT CANNOT BEAR; AND A FARAWAY KINGDOM NO MAN RULES, WHOSE RULER IS ALWAYS FAIR."

© 1982 King Features Syndicate, Inc. World rights reserved.

THE DESTINATION IS THE MISTY ISLES, AND PRINCE VALIANT'S THOUGHTS TURN TO THE FAIR-HAIRED QUEEN WHO IS HIS WIFE, WHO SOON WILL BEAR ANOTHER CHILD. THE SOLUTION OF THE RIDDLE TRIPS INTO VIEW: THE CHILD, THE MISTY ISLES -- THAT IS WHAT JUSTINIAN WANTS TO TAKE AWAY, AND JUSTINIAN'S DOCTOR IS ALREADY AT ALETA'S SIDE.

hints from Heloise

DEAR HELOISE

I am a medical retiree, but my wife works six days a week. I try to help her by taking care of the house, as much as I possibly can, but I have a problem and I hope you can help me.

Please, how do you clean the bottom of the iron without ruining it? — House husbin'

Dear sir, the answer is so simple you'll be amazed when you try it...

Just go to your nearest large fabric store and ask for a tube of iron cleaner. It's very inexpensive as it lasts and lasts.

Follow directions on the tube and your problems will be gone as fast as the gunk on the bottom of the iron. Don't throw away the cloth you use. Keep it around and just add a little more of the cleaner to it from time to time. Stretches the tube even further. Do write again.

Hugs, Heloise

WARM HANDS

DEAR HELOISE:

One of the biggest complaints our small son had when playing in the snow was that the wrist area between his gloves and his coat sleeves got exposed to the cold snow first, which meant a trip indoors to rearrange or exchange gloves.

We've found a simple and inexpensive way to lengthen his stay outdoors: We took an old pair of his tube socks and cut out holes for the finger tips and thumb.

The socks extend much farther up his wrist and under his coat sleeve to keep the area protected. The socks also help insulate his mittens or gloves a little bit more.

This has really helped make playing in the snow more fun for all of us.

GREAT STORAGE BOX

DEAR HELOISE:

Egg cartons make ideal storage cartons for hobbyists who do bead work or use sequins. The compartments are ideal to sort out color and size. The box can be lapped closed and put away for later use.

After Christmas, I stored small ornaments in egg boxes, then stacked them away for next year.

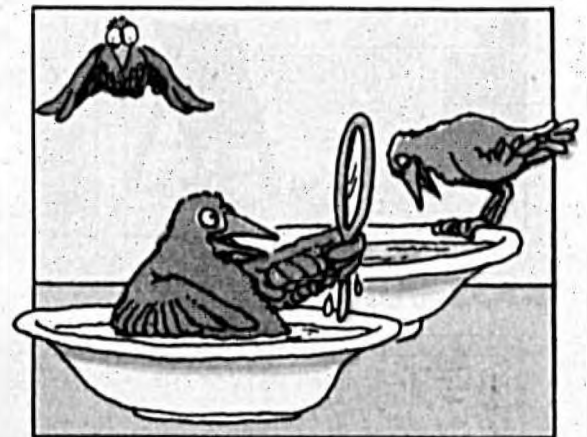

Susi Zeringue

DEAR READER:

This is your column. If you'd like to share a hint, ask a question or make a suggestion, write me care of this newspaper.

GIVE BIRDIE A BATH

DEAR HELOISE:

If you want to give your bird a bath, put a small mirror in the bottom of his bath dish. When he looks in the bath, he sees an image of the riddle trips into view: the child, the misty isles -- that is what Justinian wants to take away, and Justinian's doctor is already at Aleta's side.

Your bird will get used to the water and want to hop in even if he doesn't see another bird.

This is how we got our bird to take a bath.

SHAKER FUN

DEAR HELOISE:

I have discovered a way to make fun shakers... First, you get a small jar and fill it with water. Then, you put play clay in the lid and press little figures into it. Then put glitter in the jar with the water. Then, you put the top back on very right.

Turn it upside down and shake it and you have a fun shaker.

● SILLY QUESTION! Dear Hal: My brother says he can reach behind his back and touch his bellybutton. Is he kidding? Curious. Dear Curious: Not if he uses two hands. He can reach behind his back with one hand and touch his bellybutton with the other.

WINNING WAYS WITH MONEY

Amuse your friends with this trick next time you pick up a handful of change. Extend your hand holding the precise coins shown above — five pennies, a nickel and a dime. Invite someone to tell you if you are holding an odd or even amount.

No matter which answer is given it can be shown to be wrong.

If the answer is "even," count coins. There are seven coins — an odd amount. If the answer is "odd," total coin values — 20 cents is an even amount. Catchon?

● Pig in a Poke! "A pig's tail will never make a good ___" says a Spanish adage, and who can argue? What five-letter word is missing?

● Irish Stew! Rearrange letter groupings to form three words associated with St. Patrick's Day: RE BLAR ROCK LEP SHAM NEY CHAUN. Answer quickly.

● Riddle Me This! What happened to the apple grower's plens? They bore fruit. Why wasn't Blackbeard invited to tea? Because of his corsairs.

WIND JAMMER! What's up with our friend on the skateboard above? To find out, add missing lines dot to dot.
