Citizens win protest

No free insurance for elected officials

By MICK PFEIFFER
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Former city commissioners will not get free health insurance for life after protesting citizens Monday night appealed to current commissioners for a policy change.

The matter started at a December meeting, when Commissioner Lon Howell moved to have the city provide free health insurance for any former commissioner who had served at least 10 years and reached the age of 62. At that time, A.A. McClanahan was attending his final meeting after an election defeat, and with a second to the motion by Commissioner Bob Thomas, Howell, McClanahan and Thomas provided a three to two vote and the measure passed.

Although a discussion of the free health insurance was listed as the last item on last night's commission meeting, seeing the large turnout of citizens on the matter, Mayor Bettye Smith moved the matter up, and allowed the presentation near the beginning of the meeting.

Commissioner Lon Howell was again the first to speak, but this time he acknowledged that it appeared to be very unpopular with the citizens. "Because of the public uproar I've heard about since the decision was first made, I would

Commissioners do about-face, rescind expense allotment after citizens speak

By SANDRA ELLIOTT
Herald Staff Writer

LONGWOOD — City commissioners did an about-face Monday night on two issues, rescinding a proposed $100 a month expense allotment for each commissioner and abolishing a second public participation during regular meetings. Both measures had been OK'd just two weeks ago.

A public outcry from several citizens helped convince the four commissioners who initially approved the expense payments to change their minds. Commissioner Ron Sargent was the only "no" vote when mayor Ica Benzon, deputy mayor Jim Carriac, commissioners Annamarie Vacca and Bill Winston voted to OK the expense items proposed by the city administrator, W. Shelton Smith.

Smith's memo recommended paying commissioners an expense allowance of $100 a month for everyday expenses, luncheons, etc., allow the commission to use city vehicles or pay them 28 1/2 cents a mile for out of town travel and pay all out of town expenses for city business. A proposal that commissioners be treated as city employees for the purposes of health and life insurance was not approved.

Smith said the city will continue to pay expenses for commissioners traveling out-of-town on city business

Hot topic: High school rezoning

By VIGOR BOGGS
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — The debate could get hot Tuesday night as the Seminole County school board prepares to set the parameters for high school rezoning set to take place later this year.

Parents, especially at Seminole and Lake Mary high schools are waiting anxiously to see how the rezoning will affect them. It must be done in order to fill Winter Springs High School, which is now under construction.

The district's high school attendance zones will be altered, taking a little from each existing school to fill the new school.

Seminole High parents have been clamoring for the school district to add students to the school which has an enrollment just above the federally mandated level of 2,000. In the 1970 desegregation order the school was ordered to have "not significantly less than 2,000 students."

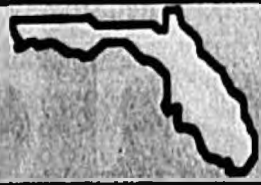

Still, parents complain, while other schools have grown dramatically, Seminole has remained small.

State and federal funding to a school is based on the number of students attending a school, the parents contend, and Seminole continually loses

FLORIDA BRIEFS

Activists condemn Navy report

JACKSONVILLE — Women's activists have condemned a Navy report that said most of the sexual harassment allegations at a Jacksonville Naval Reserve squadron were unsubstantiated.

"They substantiated a few of the cases, but they insisted that they did not create a hostile working environment for women. That's not true," said Karen Danko, president of the Jacksonville chapter of the National Organization for Women.

The report, released last month, was a response to complaints made in July 1983 by three members of a Jacksonville Naval Air Station reserve squadron.

The women complained they endured sexual innuendoes and routine harassment in the 248-member all-reservist squadron. They also said they suffered retaliation when they complained.

The inspector general upheld three of the 48 harassment cases.

Counties receive prenatal aid

TALLAHASSEE — Six Panhandle counties have received a federal grant of $2 million to provide more prenatal care to poor women in the mostly rural area, Gov. Lawton Chiles said.

The goal of the two-year project is to study the impact of home visits on the health of pregnant women at risk of giving birth to small, sickly babies, according to Mimi Graham, one of the researchers at Florida State University who will participate in the project.

Now the area has one person to visit the homes of every 100 high-risk pregnant women, according to FSU researcher Anita Zervigon Hines. The goal is to get that ratio down to one person visiting every 15 high-risk pregnant women.

"This grant is going to be tremendously helpful," Chiles said. The money is one of several awards for prenatal care.

The counties involved in the project are Leon, Calhoun, Gadsden, Jefferson, Madison and Taylor. Leon has the area's largest city, Tallahassee; the other five counties are rural counties.

State begins review of Medicaid HMOs

TALLAHASSEE — The state's toughest review ever of Medicaid health maintenance organizations begins this week as 50 investigators visit seven HMOs in South Florida and one in Jacksonville.

"We're not going to hesitate to close down a place if we find they're abusing the public trust," said Doug Cook, who heads the state Agency for Health Care Administration.

Investigators will pull patient records, review quality safeguards and visit health centers, said Tom Arnold, the review's coordinator. Violators could face an enrollment freeze, suspension or other sanctions.

"There are allegations we have a double standard for care, one for Medicaid patients and one for everyone else," said Arnold, the agency's managed-care chief. "We're taking that very seriously."

Next week investigators will visit HMOs in other cities across Florida.

The agency won't allow any new Medicaid HMOs to open or let existing ones expand into new counties, Arnold said.

The unprecedented review follows an investigation by the Sun-Sentinel in Fort Lauderdale last month. The state's Medicaid HMOs generally operate for three years under regulations less stringent than those for commercial health plans, the newspaper noted.

It reported that Medicaid HMOs often pay their top executives million-dollar salaries. In some cases, half their budgets go toward administrative expenses, three times as much as commercial plans.

State auditors have found serious problems more often than not when reviewing Medicaid HMOs in recent years. Despite such findings, regulators rarely have imposed any kind of punishment.

Some patients couldn't get their HMOs to pay for the care they needed.

The Sun-Sentinel report cited several cases in which people died after HMOs failed to diagnose their condition, or steered them toward cheaper treatments.

The fallout from the series of reports now threatens to slow or even derail Gov. Lawton Chiles' proposal to subsidize private insurance for many working families.

To pay for that plan, the state would use hundreds of millions of dollars it expects to save by forcing its 1.6 million Medicaid patients into managed-care health plans such as HMOs.

If those plans don't provide quality, cost-effective care, the state can't justify the switch, even some Chiles allies now say.

"It's the biggest weakness in the system," said state Rep. Ben Graber, a Coral Springs Democrat who chairs the House Health Care Committee.

"We should make them do everything the commercial HMOs do, plus more. The people they are serving are more at risk."

Washington — Indian groups are playing up the importance of a Supreme Court decision to resolve a high-stakes dispute over regulation of gambling on Indian reservations, a $6-billion-a-year industry.

The justices said Monday they will decide in a Florida case whether federal courts have authority to oversee negotiations between tribes and state officials about starting such gambling operations.

"The Seminoles once again lead the charge in Indian rights," said Bruce Rogow, an attorney for the tribe and a Nova Southeastern University law professor. "This will have bearing throughout the country — on all 500-plus Indian tribes in terms of their relationship with the state."

Clinton administration lawyers contend federal courts do have such authority. But federal appeals courts have split on that aspect of a 1988 federal law, the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act.

"The Seminoles won't have anyone to go," said assistant attorney general Jonathan Olague, who has represented the state. "They'll have to go to the secretary of the interior

Port, airport merger discussed

Commissions focus on economic development

By NICK PEPINAP
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — A proposal to merge the Sanford Airport Authority and Seminole County Port Authority was discussed during a joint city/county meeting Monday afternoon. Although County Commission Chairman Randy Morris pushed hard to have both commissions express approval of the merger, the proposal did not move as rapidly as he seemed to desire.

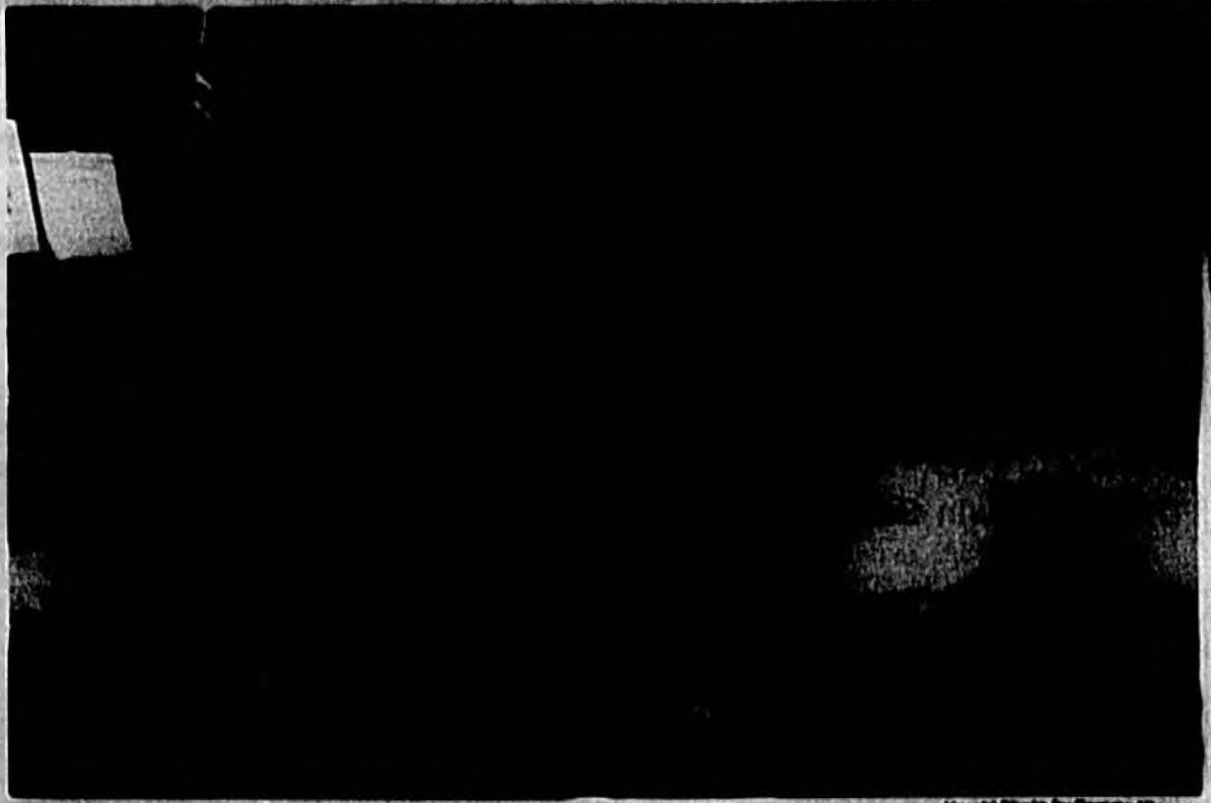

Presently, the city of Sanford has control over the Central Florida Regional Airport property, managed by the Sanford Aviation Authority.

Seminole County holds jurisdiction over the Port of Sanford, managed by the Seminole County Port Authority.

The meeting was held yesterday afternoon in the Sanford city commission chambers. The merger was listed on the agenda as "Economic Development Possibilities via Port/Airport Consolidation."

In addition to members of the county and city commissions, a large turnout was on hand, including members of both the airport and port authority.

"The number one priority of Seminole County is economic development," Morris began. "One of the ways we see to help accomplish this is to merge the two authorities into one." He explained that while each would retain their own administrators, they would have one budget, approved by both, and reviewed by both commissions.

The combined commission session was well attended.

Morris said the port authority has reached buildout stage, while the airport area has much growth potential. "By helping this, through county services such as legal and planning," Morris said, "the merger would be an economic advantage to everyone in the entire county."

Several commissioners from both entities asked Morris if the proposal had been brought up with the two boards. Morris replied that it had not. "I want to get the general consensus of these two commissions first," he answered.

County Commissioner Daryl McLain was one of the first to voice his support. "This merger would certainly open a new area for capital improvements and benefits to the airport," he said.

County Commissioner Pat Warren however, took a different approach. "Would the tax exempt status of the port authority extend to the airport authority," she asked. Morris replied that it would not, as the land on which the two properties were located would remain under those jurisdictions.

"I don't see supporting this," Warren responded. "I think both should be one way or another regarding taxation."

City Commissioner Kerry Lyons added, "I certainly plan to guide my decisions on tax bases. I first want to insure that the

Court to review gambling battle

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Indian groups are playing up the importance of a Supreme Court decision to resolve a high-stakes dispute over regulation of gambling on Indian reservations, a $6-billion-a-year industry.

The justices said Monday they will decide in a Florida case whether federal courts have authority to oversee negotiations between tribes and state officials about starting such gambling operations.

"The Seminoles once again lead the charge in Indian rights," said Bruce Rogow, an attorney for the tribe and a Nova Southeastern University law professor. "This will have bearing throughout the country — on all 500-plus Indian tribes in terms of their relationship with the state."

Clinton administration lawyers contend federal courts do have such authority. But federal appeals courts have split on that aspect of a 1988 federal law, the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act.

"The Seminoles won't have anyone to go," said assistant attorney general Jonathan Olague, who has represented the state. "They'll have to go to the secretary of the interior and then we'll have to fight with the Secretary of the Interior."

When asked about the high court's decision about the case, Gov. Lawton Chiles said: "You've had conflicting decisions from several of the circuits so that's probably what needs to be done."

Congress had tried to broker a deal by overseeing two years of negotiations between several states and the tribes. But the Senate's Indian Affairs Committee gave up last year when it could not write legislative language acceptable to both sides.

The law gave tribes new freedom to run big-money casinos, bingo halls and other gambling activities on their lands. Reservation gambling has become big business in more than 20 states since the 1988 federal law was passed.

The Supreme Court in 1987 ruled states cannot ban gambling on Indian reservations within their borders, a decision that left Indian gaming largely unregulated by the states.

The 1988 law, a response by Congress to the 1987 ruling, requires federally recognized tribes to negotiate with the respective states before starting some types of on-reservation gambling.

Black author from Eatonville ranked among top writers

EATONVILLE — Zora Neale Hurston, an Eatonville author still gaining fame decades after her death, is the first black woman to be published by the prestigious Library of America.

A two-volume set to be published in February includes many of her novels and stories set here in her hometown and other areas of Florida.

Ms. Hurston, who grew up in this mostly black community before moving to New York City, led a turbulent life and had an unorthodox career as a writer, folklorist and anthropologist.

She died penniless and unheralded in Fort Pierce 35 years ago.

Her inclusion by the nonprofit Library of America, announced in conjunction with an annual Hurston festival in Eatonville, places her among the ranks of Mark Twain, Edith Wharton, Willa Cather and William Faulkner.

"That Hurston is being included in a canonical series confirms the recovery of her status as a great American writer," Hurston scholar Cheryl A. Wall said.

"These editions will provide much more material for scholars. For general readers, it means more compact, convenient access to Hurston's works."

Her first novel, "Jonah's Gourd Vine" (1934) is set in frontier Eatonville and based on the lives of her parents. Her most acclaimed novel, "Their Eyes Were Watching God" (1937) is about a young Florida woman's search for happiness and self-fulfillment through three marriages.

"Mules and Men" is a 1935 folklore collection that owes its life to the stories she heard as a child and the folklore "collecting" trips she made to Florida in the 1920s and 1930s.

Ms. Hurston's 1942 autobiography "Dust Tracks on a Road" includes some passages that were edited out of its original publication because they were considered possibly libelous, sexually explicit or overly political.

Her works include many short stories and essays.

The sixth annual Zora Neale Hurston Festival of the Arts and Humanities in this Orlando suburb this week includes appearances by Broadway stars Etta Moten Barnett and William Warfield, chairman Sheldon Hackney of the National Endowment for the Humanities, actress Phylicia Rashad, a panel discussion by black educators, a street festival and a play about the author.

POLICE BRIEFS

Multiple charges

Sanford police arrested Kenneth Eric Anderson, 27, of Maryland on Sunday. According to the arrest report, he had apparently gone to see his wife, from whom he had been separated, at her place of employment, and took her car without her permission. Police said he was subsequently involved in a collision while driving the vehicle, in the 400 block of East Ninth Street, after which he fled on foot. Officers said they eventually located him near 13th Street and Sanford Avenue, and returned him to the scene, where they say he repeatedly gave them a false name. He was charged with grand theft auto, obstruction by a disguised person, and leaving the scene of an accident with property damage.

Disturbance call

Honored for service

Mayor Iyla Benson, left, honored retiring employee Dottie Cordell for 19 years of service to the city Monday night. City purchasing director Rhonda Ladford presented her with flowers. Starting as a receptionist on Jan. 18, 1976, Cordell and five other people worked in City Hall. She moved to the water department in 1980 collecting water bills from about 1,800 customers. At the time, Longwood's population was about 6,500 people. Later she became a supervisor. In 1988, she joined the purchasing department.

NAFTA in Florida: Winners and losers

By The Associated Press

NAFTA is one year old this month, and already its effects are being felt in Florida. There are winners and there are losers.

Williane Cyriaque doesn't understand the intricacies of the North American Free Trade Agreement, but she does know that after spending three years packing tomatoes for Regency Packing Co., she was told one day the Naples-based company was shutting down.

"They said too many tomatoes were coming from Mexico," Cyriaque said.

Ronald Asaaf, president of anti-theft device manufacturer Sensomatic Inc. in Deerfield Beach, says thanks to NAFTA, his company's sales to Mexico were nearly seven times higher in 1994 than in 1993.

"Mexico has done very, very well for us," Asaaf said.

The Clinton Administration has proclaimed NAFTA a resounding success that has created U.S. jobs and increased exports. Critics say the statistics are skewed, and point to job losses and Mexico's recent peso panic as evidence the treaty has backfired.

The U.S. Department of Commerce says the pact produced more than 100,000 jobs in 1994. The Labor Department reported that nearly 16,000 Americans were laid off by more than 135 companies.

In Florida, the Labor Department found that 1,258 workers from three different companies lost their jobs due to the pact. An additional 2,084 workers from 12 other companies in Florida lost their jobs because of foreign competition in general.

At the same time, according to the Department of Commerce, U.S. exports to Mexico grew 21.7 percent in the first nine months of 1994, reaching a record $37.5 billion.

Florida exports to Mexico also rose in the same period, although not as dramatically. In the first nine months of 1994 they grew 6.2 percent over the previous year, totaling $604.8 million, the Florida Department of Commerce said.

Cyriaque, a 22-year-old mother of two, is one of more than 1,000 Regency workers who became a casualty of NAFTA. Regency's was the largest NAFTA-related layoff in 1994.

"I said from the start all NAFTA would do is take away jobs," said Regency managing partner Steve Tivella. "You've got to be crazy to stay in this business."

Despite the job losses, proponents of NAFTA say increased trade with Mexico will result in more, higher-paying jobs for most Americans. And they argue that many companies that shifted production overseas since NAFTA would have done so with or without the pact. Nevertheless, NAFTA accelated the shift of jobs overseas, according to John Cavanagh of the Washington-based Institute for Policy Studies.

"And the threat of moving increases the bargaining power of firms to push down wages," he said.

But NAFTA's proponents say plenty of companies will continue to produce in the United States — and will do so in greater quantities because of the accord.

Citizens can fight decisions

It was the best of times, it was the worst of times. Last night's Sanford City Commission discussion on free health insurance for retiring commissioners fit that category.

It was the worst because citizens were upset over the proposal to grant the free insurance for life, for commissioners who had served at least ten years and reached the age of 62.

It was the best because the citizens apparently raised enough support to have the matter, approved in an unexpected and unannounced move last December, overturned by a unanimous vote.

We see this as an excellent example of government by the people and for the people, and as such, there are many people who should be recognized.

Citizen Robert Stump was angry over a government decision, and rather than sit home and do nothing, he launched a petition drive to have the matter overturned. It resulted in 385 signatures of citizens opposed to the insurance.

Mayor Bettye Smith made a good move when she allowed the item, originally listed at the very end of a lengthy commission agenda, to be moved to the top, to better serve the throng of citizens who turned out at last night's meeting.

Smith, along with Commissioner Whitey Eckstein also deserve kudos for sticking to their guns. They voted against the measure when it was first brought up, and followed through last night.

Lon Howell, who apparently drew much criticism for bringing the matter up for a vote last December without any warning, showed good judgment in being the commissioner who made the first official call during the meeting to have the earlier decision overturned.

Kerry Lyons must also be commended. He not only sought to prevent the matter from being brought up again in the future, but he has made a public announcement refusing to accept city paid health insurance.

Most of all, all Sanford residents and taxpayers must applaud the citizens who signed the petitions, turned out at last night's commission meeting, and rallied together.

It is a fine example of what people can do. Yes, you can fight City Hall. It was proven in the chambers of the Sanford City Commission on January 23, 1995.

Changing times

Watching the Republicans on their first day of ruling the country and, hot damn, what a start! Right off the bat they raise the majority to pass tax increases from 60 percent to 80 percent making it harder for taxes to go up. Great job boys! But — it turns out that doesn't apply to all taxes, just "income" tax. That's the one that affects the rich the most.

So it turns out that it takes 80 percent to raise taxes on the rich and only 60 percent to raise taxes on the poor. When it comes down to who's going to pay the national debt, guess who's going to get the tax increase. Uh huh! Well, as they say, the more things change, the more they stay the same.

Shame, shame

Shame on the Orlando Police Department for not charging Anthony Avent for filing a false police report. Is a Teflon coat applied when joining the Magic team? Taxpayers paid for a week of investigation and there was not so much as a fine? If any of the unwashed masses did such a thing, we'd learn the insides of the license tag business, or at the very least, get on a first name basis with a bail bondsman.

Shame on the Rev. Al Sharpton and the Rev. Jesse Jackson for being silent. They both made a lot of noise when Ms. Smith falsely accused a black man of kidnapping her children. When a black man falsely accused white men of attacking him, not a word!

Finally, shame on Anthony Avent for saying he would do the same thing again if he had to do it over. Where is his moral responsibility? This man needs to (a) grow up and (b) be taught a lesson and letting him off is not the way for it to be done.

Will he? Won't he? Can he? Maybe

For the ninth time in the last two years -- or is it the twelfth, or perhaps the seventh -- we find ourselves asking the all-important question: Will, can, might Bill Clinton re-invent himself? The State of the Union speech is upon us. That's the time to do it. Will he line up with the centrist New Democrats? Finally? Or will he stick with the liberal Old Democrats?

Predictably, the potential answers to these questions come like a booming thunderclap of resolve: "Maybe."

Thus, after the Republican earthquake last November, we heard that Clinton "got the message" and that he would be "moving to the center." As evidence, Clinton proposed a tax cut, although not as big as Newt's.

But then we heard administration sources say that Clinton had to keep "his base." In this context his base means liberal activists. Soon, Clinton Secretary of Labor Robert Reich said we should raise the minimum wage, which is regarded as a very liberal thing to do, although most economists believe it contracts the job market for the poorest workers.

Then we saw some of the post-earthquake appointees, and heard talk about others. Sen. Chris Dodd, D-Conn., a high-visibility liberal, was chosen for the highly visible role as co-chairman of the Democratic National Committee. It was said that the liberal Ann Lewis would take over as White House political director. Robert Greenstein, a liberal economist who heads the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, was apparently offered a top job at the Office of Management and Budget, which he declined.

Not to worry, centrists. Last weekend there was a skull session at Camp David with key center-Democrats offering opinions to the president, the vice president, Hillary and Tipper. Among the attendees were high Democratic Leadership Council officials, former DLC members now on the White House staff, as well as some centrist Democratic thinkers, including David Osborne, author of "Reinventing Government." (Also present was Clinton senior adviser George Stephanopoulos, who has publicly confessed to committing liberalism.)

Predictably, the potential answers to these questions come like a booming thunderclap of resolve: 'Maybe.'

The previous week Osborne (who had worked on the Clinton-Gore plan to re-invent government) wrote a long, tough open letter to the president in the Washington Post, which included these lines: "Most Americans see you and your administration as members of a cultural elite -- people who graduated Yale and Harvard and Oxford; people who attend Georgetown dinner parties and Renaissance Westlands; people who hang out with movie stars and vacation in places like Martha's Vineyard." In the same article Osborne criticized Stephanopoulos and his staff of Stephanoids, and wrote: "The lesson is simple: If you want New Democratic politics, get New Democratic advisers."

(Author's note: I've been to Renaissance Weekend. To the best of my recollection, I've never been to Martha's Vineyard, but will consider invitations for summer months.)

Of course at the DLC annual dinner Clinton had urged DLCers to "join me in the arena, not in the peanut gallery." That left only two unanswered questions: Who had put them in the peanut gallery for two years? And would he now put some of them in the administration? Maybe.

Abortion is part of the puzzle

BOSTON — There's at least one missing ingredient in the cauldron of welfare reform ideas brewing on Capitol Hill. It's a spoonful of something called humility.

For a long time, conservatives in this country have accused liberals of "social engineering" — trying to change private behavior through public policy. Now they're trying it.

At this point, the prime target of the welfare reformers is the unwed, uneducated and unemployed poor woman. In the economic lingo that the Republicans prefer, welfare is now called an "incentive" for having a baby. They talk about withdrawing AFDC as a disincentive — economic birth control.

But the truth is that the reformers — left, right or center — don't know how to penetrate and turn around the teen cultures in which parenthood has become too common. There isn't a magic, one-size-fits-all policy to reduce the number of kids born to women who are out of wedlock and out of luck.

So if humility is the best policy, it's smart to think small. To think about doing what we know can make a difference.

This is what we know. In America, a striking 60 percent of all pregnancies are unplanned. That figure rises to 76 percent among the poor. Those poor pregnant women are somewhat less likely to have abortions than higher income women.

We also know that sexually active poor and low income teen-agers use contraceptives less regularly than upper income teens. And we know that they are much less likely to have abortions. Only four out of 10 poor teens have abortions compared to seven out of 10 higher income teens.

The assumption of the social engineers is that these women are getting pregnant for the welfare check. But we know from the Alan Guttmacher Institute that between a fifth and a third of poor women who had unplanned births would have had abortions if they'd had the money — if Medicaid funding were available.

Nevertheless, there has been hardly a word spoken in the welfare debate about birth control or about the way federal funding and access to family planning clinics has steadily diminished over the last 15 years. As for abortion funding? It's the rare politician who has dared to touch that hot button.

Talking about abortion and welfare in the same breath is virtually forbidden. Pro-choice politicians don't want to appear to favor abortion over birth for the poor, or to endorse abortion as a money-saver. The others oppose abortion altogether.

But if we are talking about government programs influencing private decisions, there's no way to keep abortion out of the equation.

Today the composite welfare plan being drawn up by the latest batch of social engineers looks suspiciously like a trap. The government already offers an "incentive." It will pay for childbirth but it won't pay for abortion, except in cases of rape or incest. The Republican contract would go further. After paying for the birth of a child, it would withhold AFDC from the mother who's a teen or has another child on welfare. And within two years every mother and child would be cut off, though the toddler might be offered a slot in an orphanage.

It's possible that Congress will adopt a different plan that passes the welfare buck to the states in exchange for taking on the whole Medicaid bill. What would happen then? Today 18 states pay for Medicaid abortions with their own tax dollars. After the swap, could the federal government prevent or hamper the states from paying for abortions? Nobody knows.

The Republicans insist that their welfare reform will save money, though we don't know the social cost accounting — how many homeless, how many hungry. But if we're talking money, here are some other figures. Every public dollar spent on family planning saves $4 on medical and welfare costs. So does every dollar spent on abortion.

Funding Medicaid abortions would save $612 million over two years. Not by encouraging abortion, but by enabling poor women to make their own choices. Just like women who aren't poor.

Abortion is by no means a cure for the problems of welfare dependency, of poverty, of hopelessness, of girls looking for babies to love them and boys who can sire but not father. But it's one piece of the puzzle we can put in place.

Americans don't want to pay for abortions and don't want to pay for welfare. We have tied poor women into our own double bind. Now, in this momentous debate about the future of welfare, we have to untie our tongues.

At this point, the prime target of the welfare reformers is the unwed, uneducated and unemployed poor woman.

Accountability In name only

WASHINGTON — During the delirious first day of the 104th Congress, Senate Republican leaders met secretly to defuse a family feud before it splashed across the front pages.

The conflict centered on the Congressional Accountability Act, a touchstone of the GOP's "Contract With America," which ends decades of congressional exemptions from anti-discrimination and workplace laws. Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., wanted to raise the ante by offering an amendment that no lawmaker could privately support or publicly oppose.

Members of Congress should be individually liable in cases of personal misconduct, rather than sticking taxpayers with the bill.

According to Senate sources, once McCain raised this prospect with his colleagues, Republicans were plunged into their first intraparty crisis of a congressional session that was then only a few hours old.

Enter Senate Majority Whip Trent Lott, R-Miss., who was looking to cut his first back-room deal in his new position as the No. 2 man in the Senate. Lott scheduled an emergency meeting for 3 p.m. Signifying the gravity of the situation, Lott convened it in one of the private offices of Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan. In addition to Lott and McCain, the gathering included Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, and William Roth, R-Del., who have to varying degrees been spearheading the issue in the Senate. Dole was not present.

Republican leadership sources say that Lott felt a growing urgency to get McCain to drop the amendment — before it was even offered. Most senators would find it suicidal to oppose an amendment that would prevent the misdeeds of some members from getting foisted on the taxpayers.

"The real worry for the leadership was that it would pass," said one GOP strategist. "If the amendment was offered, it would be difficult to vote against it by any senator, but if it was added to the bill it could potentially bring down the entire legislation."

Stevens, who was the most ardent opponent of the McCain amendment, argued that senators are mere employees of the federal government and aren't like small business owners. But even Stevens acknowledged during the often-tense 30-minute meeting that his own vote count showed that the McCain amendment would have passed. Had the amendment been offered, Stevens believed, Dole would have been forced to intervene personally if there was any chance of tabling it, which would have prevented a vote.

"John, we work for a large corporation," Stevens said to McCain, raising his voice. "I don't own the government. I am an employee and shouldn't be liable."

McCain retorted: "Ted, the largest group of new companies in my state are self-employed businessmen. Each and every one of those guys is personally liable if they break the law. That's the way we run our offices, and that's the way we should be treated." The meeting adjourned without any resolution, but McCain later spoke.

A McCain spokesperson, who declined to comment on the meeting, says McCain supports personal liability for violations of workplace laws, and that he "intends to move forward on the issue sometime in the near future."

Clinton freezes assets of groups suspected of terrorist activities

By ROSE POSENER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Hoping to combat Middle East terrorism, President Clinton today ordered the freezing of U.S. assets belonging to 12 groups and 18 people suspected of terrorist activities.

The executive order, which took effect after midnight, also seeks to clamp down on the ability of groups and people to get charitable donations from U.S. sources, the White House said.

Press secretary Mike McCurry released a partial list of the group cited in Clinton's executive order, including Hamas, Islamic Jihad, Hezbollah, the Palestine Liberation Front and Kach, an extremist Jewish group.

He said the move was part of the administration's sweeping effort to strike back at terrorists. Clinton joined world leaders deploring the weekend bombing in Israel that killed 19 people.

Calling the terrorists "enemies of peace," Clinton on Sunday expressed the administration's fear that continued violence in the Middle East will thwart efforts by Israel and its Arab neighbors to make peace.

"We have reason to believe they are specifically involved in an effort to disrupt and destroy the peace process," McCurry said of the list.

McCurry said the groups and people targeted by the administration are "foreign organizations and individuals who we believe lend support to terrorist activities."

The action, taken under the International Emergency Economic Powers Act, is aimed at blocking the U.S. assets of the targeted groups.

Expenses

In reconsidering the issue, Winston said the commission had not authorized the flat $100-a-month payments because that could only be done by ordinance.

A change in commissioner compensation must be done by ordinance and does not go into effect until after the next general election. That procedure prevents commissioners from granting themselves a pay raise until the voters have the opportunity to voice their opinion at the ballot box.

which is being assembled to review the city charter. The charter sets forth the ordinance requirement with the intervening election provision.

Former mayor Paul Lovestrang, among others, chastised commissioners voting for the expense payments claiming it was a veiled attempt to increase their compensation without going through the ordinance process.

In other business, the commission killed a resolution which would have allowed two public participation segments at each meeting.

Freshman Commissioner Jim Carrico changed his previous "yes" vote to "no," joining Benson and Winston who voted against the measure from the start. Sargent and Vacca voted for the additional public input.

After a lengthy discussion about board appointments, the commission voted 3-2 to make appointments from within their districts. Under the city rules, commissioners are allowed to make appointments from outside their district if the most qualified candidate lives outside the district.

Vacca noted some districts have more appointees than permitted resulting in an over representation of one area of the city over another. In addition, when it is a commissioner's turn to make an appointment, they might have to go outside their district to find a board representative if another commissioner had already chosen someone to serve from the original commissioner's district.

Vacca, Sargent and Carrico voted to appoint from within commissioner districts, while Benson and Winston opposed the measure.

The mayor likened the proposal to a totalitarian government mandating appointments only from their district. She labeled it an unreasonable approach.

"We all want to appoint from our district," Benson noted, "but when there is someone with more qualifications outside the district, we should be able to select them."

The commission may also address the problem of staggered terms on various city boards. When vacancies have occurred through the years, new appointments were made for an entire term rather than to fulfill the unexpired term of the previous appointee. In doing so, the terms of several board members all end during the same year. Staggered terms are used, in part, to prevent boards from being comprised of all new members.

The meeting was adjourned at nearly 11:30 p.m. with several agenda items remaining. The commission extended the meeting past the 10 p.m. cutoff in deference to the second period of public participation. When that was quashed, Vacca moved to adjourn.

Insurance

now like to move that the city should not offer free health insurance," he said. Again, the measure was seconded by Thomas.

Before the motion was made, Robert Stump, a Sanford citizen, appeared before the commission. "People never know what happens here until they read about it in the newspaper," he commented. "Commissioners have part time jobs, and they shouldn't have this full time life insurance."

Stump said he had obtained signatures on a petition calling for the matter to be reconsidered, and if it was ever brought up again, to do so only through a public referendum.

"With people afraid to open their doors with the crime problems these days," he said, "it wasn't easy to get a lot of signatures, but here are the ones we obtained." The petition contained about 388 signatures.

"Before we vote on the motion," said Commissioner Whitley Eckstein, "I would like to amend it that all city commissioners in the past also do not have free life insurance."

After a brief discussion, Eckstein's amendment passed on a four to one vote, with only Howell voting against it.

Commissioner Kerry Lyons, who has now replaced McClanahan on the commission, questioned, "Is there any way we can prevent this from ever being brought back for consideration by any future commission?"

City Attorney Bill Colbert

commented that there is no way a present commission can bind future commissions, that to do so would require a charter amendment.

"Once commissioners retire," said Eckstein, "they can pick up paying for health insurance for an additional 18 months, but I just can't see paying for the insurance for the rest of their lives."

Lyons added, "I just want everyone to know that I am not only against this free insurance, but I hereby decline any insurance coverage given to me as a member of this commission."

When the vote was taken on cancelling the free health insurance, it was unanimous. The packed audience expressed their appreciation with a brief round of applause.

"I've received feedback from the public — a lot of feedback," Winston commented, "and apparently the public is in favor of no additional payments to the commissioners."

Even though the expense payments did not represent a significant amount of money in the budget, Winston added, it is significant in the minds of the voters. "We have not approved any payments if we don't have an ordinance that says we did," he added.

Although Carrico noted an ordinance would be required on the expense question during the Jan. 8 discussion, Mayor Benson said that would relate only to commissioners' salaries, according to the approved minutes of the meeting.

However, Monday night Benson said, "We all know it has to be done by ordinance."

Further, she described the commissioners as "watchdogs of the public bill." She suggested the question be turned over to the charter review committee than perhaps it should be," responded Commissioner Warren.

Sanford Mayor Bettye Smith observed, "I believe the key to this is to first see if there is a favorable response from the airport authority and the port authority. I would like to see it brought up with them first, but I agree with Commissioner Warren that this is just too ambitious."

City Commissioner Len Howell agreed, "I can't see giving any concession until we see the actual wording of an interlocal agreement."

Although Morris continued to push for the preparation and consideration of an interlocal document outlining the proposed merger, Mayor Smith and other commissioners persisted in calling for reaction and comments from the two boards before moving ahead.

The joint city/county meeting had a number of items on the agenda for the hour-long meeting yesterday afternoon. The merger matter, however, occupied almost the entire time period.

Morris and Smith both agreed that the matter needed to be brought back for further consideration by the two commissions, but no specific date was established for any future meeting on the subject.

out on dollars because they have fewer students.

Lake Mary parents say their children's school is bordering on being severely overcrowded, and they say the rezoning must be done carefully to ensure the proper student ratios at their school.

Parents at other schools are also watching the process carefully.

"Rezoning is always a painful process," said board chairman Sandy Robinson. "People do not like change. The change is necessary and we have to do it in order to grow. We will try to do this as painlessly as possible."

While the board is far from making a decision, the process is underway.

The board will be asked to approve the rezoning parameters that have been on the table for months.

Primarily, the staff parameters state, the enrollment of the high schools will "reflect the diversity of our school system, at least within the ranges currently in place." They emphasize the need to comply with the federal desegregation order.

They also will ask the board to approve the following guidelines (in this order) to help them meet that goal:

- zones should be as compact as possible
- capacities for each high school should be adjusted to anticipate areas of anticipated growth
- the creation of island or fingers that isolate identifiable socio-economic or racial/ethnic groups should be avoided
- the integrity of subdivisions should be maintained
- movement of students between attendance zones should be kept to a minimum

The district will take a look at middle and elementary school attendance zones after the high school situation is resolved, they said.

The board will meet Tuesday evening at 7 p.m. in the district board room, 1211 S. Mellonville Ave., Sanford.

before we finally located him on Saturday."

Sherrod was reportedly identified in a photo lineup by the victim's brother and another store clerk who was on hand during the shooting.

According to the incident report, the man identified as Sherrod, attempted to break line in Ideia Food Store Thursday, as a number of customers were waiting for service.

Cmdr. Whitmore said when Sherrod attempted to go to the front of the line, Faruk Ideia told him to get back in line, at which time Ideia left the area and went into an office near the counter.

Sherrod reportedly became angry and pulled out a handgun, firing one round which went through the glass enclosure of Ideia's office, striking him in the thigh. Ideia was taken to Central Florida Regional Hospital for treatment of his wound.

Sherrod has now been taken to the John E. Polk Correctional Facility, where he has been charged with one count of attempted murder, and one count of use of a firearm in the commission of a felony.

County Commissioner Dick VanDerWeide asked about the reverter clause regarding the airport. Under the original turning-over of the property from the federal government to the city, the land could be reverted back to a military base if the government saw the need.

Airport authority attorney Steve Coover responded that he had checked into the clause, and it had been eliminated last year.

"The way we should move forward," Morris continued, "is to give a local bill this year, which would be reviewed by the both boards, then in about four to five months have an interlocal agreement prepared."

"From that point on, the local bill would go before the legislature, and the two authorities could be merged by this October," he continued. "If we can't get the bills moving forward soon, it may be October of next year."

Morris said he could have a bill calling for the merger ready within one day's time. "It wouldn't be complicated," he said. "It would be relatively easy to draw up, and we could have it ready for your consideration very soon."

"This is just more ambitious than perhaps it should be," responded Commissioner Warren.

Although Morris continued to push for the preparation and consideration of an interlocal document outlining the proposed merger, Mayor Smith and other commissioners persisted in calling for reaction and comments from the two boards before moving ahead.

The joint city/county meeting had a number of items on the agenda for the hour-long meeting yesterday afternoon. The merger matter, however, occupied almost the entire time period.

Morris and Smith both agreed that the matter needed to be brought back for further consideration by the two commissions, but no specific date was established for any future meeting on the subject.

board the St. Johns River boat cruise ship. Upon docking, Gene DeVilbiss, a Sanford businessman, reportedly left the ship at the docking area, but made a misstep and fell into the river. DeVilbiss cannot swim.

Cmdr. Bronson, off-duty at the time, was also attending the party. He reportedly heard the commotion and realized the man in the water was in serious trouble. He dived in and managed to pull DeVilbiss to safety.

According to a statement written by Sanford Police Chief Ralph Russell and read during the meeting by Mayor Bettye Smith, "Thanks to Commander Bronson's professional demeanor, remaining calm in a crisis situation, his heroic efforts which were above and beyond the call of duty, resulted in the saving of a human life."

The Mayor concluded, "The City of Sanford/Sanford Police Department hereby recognizes and commends Commander T. Ray Bronson for his bravery and performance above and beyond the call of duty for the heroic action in the saving of a human life."

A number of friends and fellow officers joined with the audience and members of the commission and city staff in a standing round of applause for his lifesaving action.

Woman sues Starbucks over coffee spill

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. — A woman has sued the Starbucks Coffee chain, claiming she was seriously injured by hot coffee that spilled from "defective and unsafe" paper cups.

Darby L. Bullivant is seeking unspecified damages in her lawsuit, which was filed Friday in state court. She says the lids on two cups of coffee she bought in January 1994 came off because the paper cups were flawed.

Her lawsuit also says Seattle-based chain of trendy cafes and the unnamed manufacturer of the paper cups and lids didn't adequately instruct customers how to use the products.

Bullivant's lawyer, Aubrey Boyd, had no comment Monday, his spokesman said. Laura Motz of Starbucks said the company wasn't familiar with the lawsuit and could not comment.

Last year, a jury awarded nearly $2.9 million to an 81-year-old woman who got third-degree burns from McDonald's coffee. A judge later reduced the $2.7 million award for punitive damages to $480,000. The woman settled the case in December for an undisclosed sum.

Simpson wants to address jury

LOS ANGELES — He wants to tell them.

O.J. Simpson made an unusual but not unprecedented request Monday: He wants to make himself a walking, talking court exhibit to go with his lawyers' photo blowups and fancy charts.

Simpson asked the judge in his murder trial for permission to briefly address the jury just before defense lawyers make their opening statement today. Simpson also wants to show the jury certain scars on his body, presumably to illustrate how old football injuries would have hindered his ability to overpower two people and stab them to death.

Prosecutors criticized the request as a sneaky end run to get Simpson's words safely to the jury without a challenge from the prosecution.

Superior Court Judge Lance Ito indicated after huddling with lawyers that he might let Simpson show his scars, and would rule before opening statements today.

State of the Union address

WASHINGTON — President Clinton stands before Congress tonight with promises of a leaner, kinder government, a growing job market, a safer world — and with hopes of winning back voters who deserted him after his last State of the Union address.

Working in his study most of the day Monday, the president prepared an address that aides predicted would welcome Republican cooperation whenever possible on a line-item veto, reduced bureaucracy, immigration control, and welfare and campaign finance reform.

But he will be combative — defending a few pet projects, restating intrusions on foreign policy and accusing the Republicans of threatening the poor with some of their welfare reform plans, aides said.

Few new programs or ideas will be unveiled, with the most likely exception being a proposed minimum wage increase. Aides said Clinton has decided to seek an increase to about $5 an hour from $4.25, but he won't spend much, if any, time on it in the nationally broadcast speech, scheduled for 9 p.m. EST.

Arts funding under fire

WASHINGTON — A thing of beauty is a joy forever, but it doesn't have to be financed with government money, say some conservatives wielding new power in Congress.

They're taking aim at the National Endowment for the Arts, hoping to slash the grant-making agency's $167.4 million budget — if not eliminate it altogether.

The NEA has survived controversies over public funding of homo-erotic art, sexually explicit work and a photograph of a crucifix submerged in urine. But it finally may be done in by lawmakers who say it serves no legitimate government function.

"I believe art is very important to the cultural development of this country. However, I feel strongly that the American taxpayer should not have to pay for the development of this art," said Rep. John Boehner, R-Ohio, chairman of the House Republican Conference.

Kobe finally declared disaster zone

KOBE, Japan — A week after Kobe was devastated by an earthquake, the Cabinet declared the once-vibrant city a disaster zone today, effectively shouldering huge rebuilding costs.

Opposition lawmakers assailed the government of Prime Minister Tomichi Murayama for its slow response to the quake, which killed more than 5,000 people.

"What were you thinking of?" opposition delegate Akira Kuroyanagi screamed at the prime minister in an emotional parliament session. He demanded Murayama apologize to the nation "for the suffering of the people."

Murayama avoided any apology but said the government would spare no effort to improve disaster preparedness. The Finance Ministry unveiled a series of tax breaks for quake victims based on their income and property losses.

Those whose property losses exceed their annual income after insurance payments won't have to pay income tax for 1994, the ministry said today.

One week after the quake, the death toll stood at 5,083 with 68 still missing. The government said 26,500 people were injured and at least 56,000 buildings damaged or destroyed in the Jan. 17 earthquake, which had a magnitude of 7.3.

The Health Ministry today relaxed restrictions on foreign doctors who have volunteered to help in Kobe, allowing them to treat quake victims even though they lack Japanese medical licenses.

Aftershocks jolted the city today, including one measuring 3.6, swaying buildings and shattering glass. There were no reports of major damage or injuries.

Israel bombing

BEIT LID JUNCTION, Israel — At a bombed-out bus shelter alight with memorial candles, a woman clutched a scrap of khaki she had picked up off the pavement where dozens of soldiers had fallen in a double blast.

"I came here to cry," said Yona Tsanani, 65, from nearby Kfar Saba. "If the government continues in this manner, we are all lost."

Dozens of people wandered about this junction Monday, while workers rebuilt the bus stop and snack bar gutted by Sunday's explosions. Some prayed, others lit candles and cried.

All, however, criticized Israel's autonomy accord with the Palestinians, saying it is producing only more violence and victims. Islamic militants opposed to the accord claimed responsibility for the suicide bombing.

New opportunity for Clinton

By WALTER R. BEARS
An AP News Analysis

WASHINGTON — No one message or moment, no set of words, can revive or undo President Clinton's White House fortunes or political fate.

But his State of the Union address tonight will tell the state of a troubled presidency, and foretell his design for the next two years, half a term to persuade skeptical voters that he deserves a second.

With Republicans riding the crest of their midterm takeover of Congress, the address is Clinton's opportunity to try to reclaim at least partial control of the agenda. The pageantry and speechmaking of the annual affair of state may add up to an hour or so.

That's not long to begin turning things around, and it will be followed at once by more than the predictable partisan pro and con reactions. There'll be a chorus of radio talk shows — live from the Capitol, courtesy of House Speaker Newt Gingrich — virtually all of them likely to be critical to outright hostile.

White House press secretary Mike McCurry said there often is a temptation to label major presidential speeches as make-or-break events, but Clinton doesn't see it that way. He said Clinton means to outline his vision of America's future, going back to the themes that got him elected in the first place.

George Bush once tried to minimize "the vision thing," but it is a vital ingredient of any winning presidency. State of the Union appraisals don't ordain the next election, but they can offer clues. "The State of the Union is not good," Gerald R. Ford said a year before he was voted out. Stumping, Bush advertised his 1992 State of the Union address as one that would point the way to economic recovery; nine months later, his political stock was still slumping, so he tried a second instalment. That didn't help, either. Part of Clinton's problem now is that once he'd defeated Bush, his vision and his priorities seemed subject to change — constant change, the Republicans taunted.

The Clinton White House insists that he has kept, in full or in part, more than three-quarters of his major campaign promises of 1992. But that isn't the way the voters saw it when they rejected droves of Democrats in the elections 11 weeks ago.

Haley Barbour, the Republican Party chairman, boasts that the initiative has shifted from the White House to the GOP-led Congress, and that certainly has been the focus so far.

That was underlined when Clinton signed into law the first bill of the new Congress on Monday, requiring congressional compliance with workplace and other laws that apply to private employers.

Usually, the State of the Union address is the equivalent of congressional New Year, with nothing much happening until the president sets his priorities. Even divided control of the government hadn't changed that, until now.

This Congress has been at work for three weeks. The legislation Clinton signed is one the Democrats tried to get passed late in the last session of Congress, when Republicans blocked action. Clinton said he was pleased to have it done now.

There are other common aims: the bill to prevent the federal government from dumping unreimbursed costs on the states; and a measure to let this and future presidents veto specific items in spending and perhaps tax bills without blocking the whole thing.

But there are more on which goals conflict. One is on the State of the Union menu, although perhaps for only passing mention, a proposal to increase the $4.25 hourly minimum wage.

Hijack technique poses new threat to global net

By ANNE MOOREHEAD
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Hackers call it "getting root" — electronically breaking into the very heart of a computer system.

Now, somebody has figured out how to pierce hardware and software "firewall" barriers and gain top-level access to the kinds of computers that give millions of people gateways to the Internet.

This major security threat is emerging just as the worldwide computer "network of networks" is starting to become an important medium for commerce.

The loot collected by electronic thieves can include credit-card information and even the "digital cash" being tested as currency for on-line shopping. Commercial secrets can be pried loose from corporate computers.

Intruders can "hijack" target systems, then copy or destroy documents or do other damage by masquerading as an authorized user on the host system, the government-financed Computer Emergency Response Team warned in an advisory posted Monday on the Internet.

And when the thieves are done, they leave little or no evidence behind.

"We're in a real battle now," said Sanford Sherten, president of Data Security Systems of Natick, Mass.

"There have been a lot of cases where credit card information has been asked for and given" on line, Sherten said. "People might as well stand on a street corner and yell the information out, or get a plane and trail it in the sky."

An estimated 20 million people use the Internet. Most log on through host computers at universities, corporations or commercial access providers.

Hackers might be able to use the new technique to gain access to individuals' home or office computer files, said Ann Redelfs, spokeswoman for the San Diego Supercomputer Center, where the first break-in was reported. But "until people start doing large-scale banking (on line), that's just not the type of information that hackers are looking for," she said.

The first known victim was computer security specialist Tautomu Shimomura of the San Diego center. One or more culprits controlled his computer for more than a day and electronically stole a large number of security programs he had written. Shimomura said the intruders also destroyed files in an apparent effort to cover their tracks.

It took four days for officials at the supercomputing center to confirm what had happened, he said.

An unknown number of attacks have been reported since then, said Tom Longstaff, manager of research and development at the CERT coordination center in Pittsburgh.

The New York Times, which first reported the attack Monday, said federal officials are investigating. FBI officials wouldn't comment.

The technique used in the attacks — called Internet protocol spoofing — isn't new, at least in theory. It exploits a weakness in the Unix operating system, the backbone of the Internet, that was described in an academic paper in 1985 and 1986.

The Internet breaks computer messages into digital data "packets" with addressing information — the protocols — used by network computers known as routers, which deliver the data. Spoofing can fool the router into believing a message is coming from an authorized source.

"Intruders can use IP spoofing to gain root access for any purpose," the CERT advisory said.

Once inside a system, intruders can use a "hijacking tool" to take over connections from any user on the system, the advisory said. Some types of networks already include filters that should prevent the attacks, but many others don't, the advisory said.

Individual computer users also can protect data transmissions by encoding them with encryption programs widely available on the Internet.

Encryption itself is controversial, however. Law enforcement officials fear it can be used to hide crimes, and the Clinton administration has proposed letting the government hold "keys" that could be used for court-ordered wiretapping. Privacy advocates oppose that idea.

Classified government computer systems are not thought to be at risk from the new attacks because they are not directly connected to the Internet.

Commerce on the Internet is expected to get a big boost this year with rapidly growing use of World Wide Web technology. It gives businesses flashy, low-overhead digital "storefronts" on the Internet. Consumers have shop-at-home convenience that made cable TV shopping networks popular.

The Internet wasn't initially designed for commerce — it evolved from a computer network created by the Defense Department in the late 1960s. By the mid-1990s, academic researchers had developed it as a way of easily sharing computer data worldwide.

Rio's funk music: Warning of gangs' distant rumble

By ANNE MOOREHEAD
Associated Press Writer

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil — The rival gangs square off, 800 teen-agers shadow-boxing and screaming threats under the dizzying whirl of a nightclub's neon lights and pounding metallic music.

Between them is a line of eight bouncers, equipped with clubs, rubber whips and an all-in-a-night's-work disdain for the ritual mayhem about to erupt.

Suddenly, one teen-ager kicks at a rival's face. A bouncer clubs him in the stomach and the youth falls to the floor, gasping for breath through rotting teeth.

As yellow and pink lights swirl overhead, 30 youths break through the line and attack the enemy gang with flying kicks and punches. The bouncers soon break it up, and the combatants melt back into the awing mass of dancers.

Minutes later, another skirmish breaks out. Then another, and another, throughout the night until the club closes in the wee hours of the morning.

This is Rio's funk music scene, an explosive mix of entertainment and violence sweeping the poor outskirts of this metropolis of 10 million people.

"This is just fun," said one teen-age "funkero" outside the Pavunense dance club in Rio's Pavuna slum district. He shrugged at the gang battle behind him.

"That's normal," he said. "When somebody gets really violent, security kicks him out." After catching his breath, he cocked his fists and danced back into the fray.

Learning to live with tinnitus

DEAR DR. GOTT: I have consulted several ear, nose and throat specialists about a loud and persistent ringing in my right ear that has lasted almost a year. After CT scans, MRIs and blood tests - resulting in quite an investment - I was told I would probably have to learn to live with it and that hearing aids might mask the noise.

I have, for unknown reasons, considerable hearing loss, but feel that I can "live" with it if I can just get the ringing to stop. I've read extensively on the subject and know that this is a common and difficult medical problem, but I'd like to know if there is any new research or treatment for the condition. This is frustrating and irritating, especially for someone who enjoys the quiet.

I'm a 58-year-old male and suspect that a virus I had a few years ago may have led to the hearing loss. I do suffer from allergies and have taken allergy injections for almost the entire time the ringing has persisted. Could there be a connection?

DEAR READER: Tinnitus (ringing in the ears) and loss of hearing could certainly have been caused by a virus infection of the inner ear, so you may have to "learn to live with it," as your doctors suggested.

These permanent symptoms can also result from noise damage, an especially troublesome consequence of modern living - particularly that caused by chronic exposure to electronically amplified music.

I am not aware that anti-allergy medicine commonly causes tinnitus, although the possibility exists. To test your theory, try stopping the medication (with your doctor's approval, of course) to see what happens. If the tinnitus stops, you've got your answer.

There are no recent research breakthroughs to treat tinnitus. To give you more information, I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "Ear Infections and Disorders."

Other readers who would like a copy should send $8 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2433, New York, NY 10163. Be sure to mention the title.

Everybody has themes for deals that appeal to them. I particularly like the ones in which the "normal" play isn't right, for whatever reason. But I also enjoy deals like today's, because most players would go down. Yet if you think of the right play, immediately you know it is right.

Be warned, though, that the theme isn't quite in Herman Melville's class. In "Moby-Dick," he wrote, "Give me a condor's quill! Give me Vesuvius' crater for an inkstand! To produce a mighty book, you must choose a mighty theme."

South might (should?) have bid four spades over four diamonds, reaching an easy contract to make as the cards lie. However, in love with his eight-card suit, South went for five diamonds. After West led the club king, how should South have planned the play?

The declarer ruffed the lead, drew trumps and cashed dummy's top spades. This was reasonable play because if West had the spade queen, the contract was always safe. However, when South led a third spade, East produced the queen and switched to the heart queen, defeating the contract. Where did South go wrong?

As so often happens, the error occurred at trick one. South should discard a spade. Let's suppose West continues with another club. South ruffs, draws the trumps, cashes dummy's top spades and ruffs a spade in hand. Declarer returns to dummy with a trump and discards his two hearts on dummy's brace of spade winners. Instead of one down, declarer harvests an overtrick.

YOUR BIRTHDAY
Jan. 25, 1996

Both your social and material prospects look encouraging for the year ahead. A new romance is possible, as well as material gains through unusual circumstances.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Timing will be extremely important concerning your objectives today. Pushing matters prematurely could lead to your undoing. Waiting too long, however, could also invite failure. Aquarius, treat yourself to a birthday gift. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions for the year ahead by mailing $1.25 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 4485, New York, NY 10163. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Your first ideas will be your best ones today, so try to act on your initial instinct. Overanalyzing a situation can dull your brightness.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) If something unexpected and opportune develops for you today, keep it to yourself. A jealous onlooker may try to throw a monkey wrench in the machinery.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Promises made in haste today might have to be reconsidered later. Try not to put yourself in a position of having to go back on your word.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You are usually the type who abides by procedures once they are implemented. Today, however, you could get off track by making too many unnecessary changes.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Keep everything light in social situations today. Avoid prying into the personal affairs of acquaintances or letting them dig too deeply into yours.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Your productivity could suffer today if you feel your work is too closely monitored. You need an environment away from supervision and scrutiny.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Do not gamble on the advice of persons you do not know well. They might be better talkers than prognosticators.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Today you might cover the gamut in your financial dealings. You could turn a large profit and then foolishly eradicate your gains.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You can accomplish your goals today by maintaining a friendly attitude. Behaving too aggressively could ruin your chances.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You are usually a generous person, but today you're not likely to share with others unless you think you will get something in return.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You should have fun and enjoy yourself today, but don't dig too deeply into your resources to do so. Seek inexpensive or free diversions.
