Jacksonville's Relief Camp

The establishment of an Emergency Relief Camp for transients with federal funds at Camp Foster just outside of Jacksonville is proving a highly satisfactory solution of the transient problem, reports from the Gateway City indicate.

There are 418 transients at the Camp where their routine of existence somewhat resembles army life, but without the military features. The activities are under the direction of a former World War veteran and everything possible is done to make the camp one of usefulness.

Each man is required to put in 7 hours of work daily, except Sunday. For his efforts he receives five cents a day, in addition to his food, a balanced ration patterned after the army, and which costs on an average 16 cents per day.

The work is devoted to gardening, forestry, building improvements, keeping the camp grounds cleaned up, adding drain ditches, building a small airport, and other projects designed to furnish healthy outdoor endeavor. Those having educational equipment are chosen as teachers for various classes which are held for different kinds of vocational training.

Recreational activities have been provided through the ingenuity and resourcefulness of the men themselves. An old piano has been resurrected, and a radio, which was furnished by a local dealer, has been hooked up. The men have clubbed together and purchased their own iron with which they keep their clothes pressed. Religious services are conducted every Sunday with Jacksonville ministers co-operating.

The atmosphere of the camp is declared to be on a high plane. There is no talk of radicalism and the men seem to look upon the project as their own, one to be appreciated and for which they work cheerfully for the common good of all. One of them is quoted as having told the captain in charge: "I just want to tell you that I am happier than I've been for two years."

The wide extension of the Jacksonville experiment looms as one of the best plans of providing a solution of the transient problem of the United States.

Crime Heads For A Fall

Under the press of difficulties many reforms in business and political life are being accomplished by a public which only wakes up when the going is hard. Out of the depression can be expected to emerge social advancements which might ordinarily have taken scores of years to attain under ordinary circumstances. That one of these advancements will be the elimination of widespread crime, is one of the big hopes of the day. That it can be done is the opinion of the Christian Science Monitor which says:

"Crime can be checked. Practically every American city harbors speakeasies and hideouts where criminals keep their sordid rendezvous. The police know it. The courts know it. Everybody knows it. Vigilante committees fired with one-half the ardor and patriotism of the minutemen of Lexington and Concord could clean up the whole sorry mess."

"Charles Francis Coe's illuminating story now running in the Saturday Evening Post may be carefully stressed by the editors of that magazine as being only fiction. Americans know it is a distressingly true picture of civic and criminal corruption in high places and low. The hopeful aspect to that appalling disclosure is that the righteous determination of the law-abiding proves the master of the cunning of the crook. After all, the cowardice of the latter overtops his cunning."

"This is a time that calls for directness. If the legal bar is too fastidious to clean up its Augean stables, Americans will do it. If the police are hampered and blocked at every turn by greedy, unpatriotic politicians, Americans can free them from the miserable incubus. Unraveling the red tape won't do. It takes too long and Americans are weary of the tyranny of crime. Cut it, and let the knife be quick and sharp."

"You can't understand the problems of a man in my position," ventured a well-meaning but timid member on the vigilante committee in Mr. Coe's article. "I have a board of directors to consider, as well as employees who have a voice through various organizations. All these things must be taken into account."

"All those things," was the steady answer, "aid and abet the criminal when a man becomes fearful of them."

"Crime can be checked when selfish fear yields to courageous confidence that right is might."

SANFORD, TWENTY YEARS AGO

At a special meeting held last week of the Board of Directors of Florida Gardens, Inc., Mr. J. N. Whitner tendered his resignation as president and director of that corporation and Mr. B. A. Howard was elected to fill the vacancy. Mr. Whitner has been president of the corporation since its organization last May and has given practically his entire time to this work, but owing to continued ill health has been seriously handicapped and did not feel able to carry the entire burden any longer.

The regular meeting of the Cecilia Music Club was held at the studio of Mrs. Pauline B. Munson Saturday afternoon with Miss Margaret Davis, president of the club, presiding. After the business of the club had been transacted a very delightful musical program was given with the Misses Edna Williams, Adèle Rines, Margaret Davis, and Adelaide Higgins taking part.

Miss Bertie Taylor, of Jackson, Tenn., is in the city as the guest of her uncle, J. B. Williams. Miss Taylor is a former resident of Sanford and her many friends here are giving her a warm welcome.

Mrs. H. A. Ward returned to the city Monday evening from a stay of some length at her former home in Deatur, Ind. Mr. Ward is detained there looking after his business interests.

J. P. Roberts is making many improvements in the grocery store.

Commission May Determine State Rum Control Plan

Officials of the Florida Society for Prohibition Reform have no set scheme to advance, they say. They are opposed to the Davis package law, as to the present system of prohibition, because they regard it as a demonstrated evil. Each step in liberalizing its provisions from one quart a month upward, they recognize would entail endless bargaining between small and big county blocs the kind of "horse-trading" that has reduced previous legislative sessions to a farce.

If the administration has a control plan, it is keeping it strictly under the gubernatorial hat for the present.

If nothing is done looking toward control, Florida may be left "high and dry" with an unenforceable prohibition in its Constitution and an unenviable position in regard to tourist trade.

Such a course would avert the necessity of rushing through some hastily prepared measure at the next session, to be regretted later. It should result in a model system that would stand for years and keep liquor control out of the hands of "horse-trading" political blocs.

It would be the answer to the voter who asked why he should vote for repeal until some substitute had been approved.

With it could go a county option measure, or even city option, if that were desired.

The delay would not be serious, proponents of the plan assert, since repeal probably will not be effective before 1935, and the intervening period will be needed for mature deliberation upon this all-important question of whether prohibition can be replaced by a more effective instrument of temperance comparatively free from graft and undue interference with personal liberty. Should it require a special session, even that, they believe, would be worth its price.

Tomorrow: wet and dry armies prepare to launch their campaigns.

HOARDED GOLD BEGINS RETURN INTO VAULTS

The majority of persons turning in their gold yesterday, both to the federal reserve bank and member institutions, were those who had withdrawn balances and converted them into coin during the past few weeks. At the same time, it was said that some gold appeared that had been absent for a year or more.

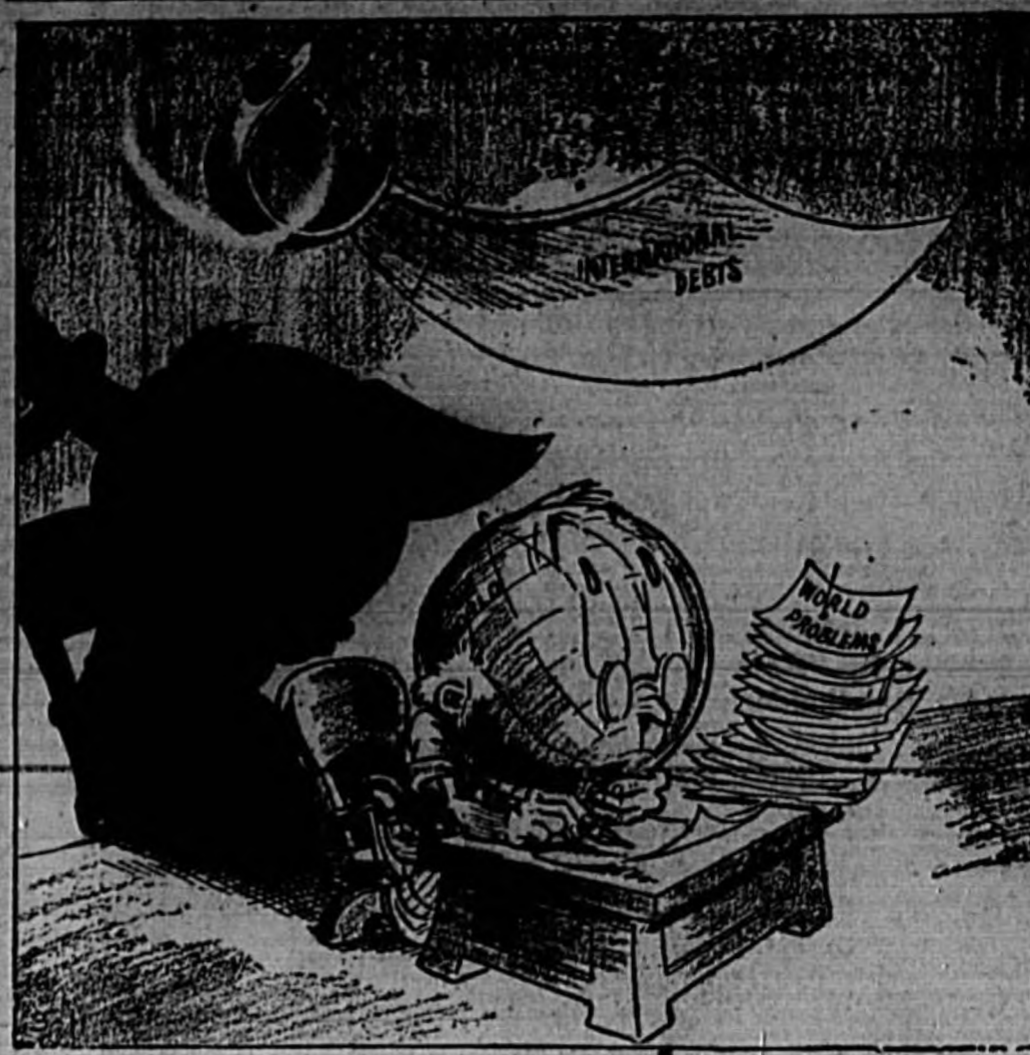

"If this keeps up," declared one tired teller, "the only gold not in the vaults of the reserve bank will be that in the teeth. And maybe they'll find some way to get that."

Fear of exposure, it was said, was an impelling reason for the turn of the gold tide. Also it was the growing belief that penalties might be exacted by Congress against those known to have gold in their possession. Previous instructions from the federal reserve board at Washington to member banks ordering the reporting of gold withdrawals since Feb. 1, were extended to include the names of those who have taken out gold during the past two years. The various federal reserve banks are said to have records of withdrawals since 1915, including the names of some international known persons.

In addition to the action of the reserve board to get the names of the hoarders, the New York stock Exchange yesterday requested its members to furnish complete records of all gold payments made to customers between Jan. 1 and Mar. 13.

During the week ended Mar. 1, it was estimated that gold amounting to some $110,000,000 was withdrawn by depositors. The country's total gold holding dropped from $4,543,036,918 at the end of January to $4,379,268,999 at the end of February. The treasury, at the beginning of March, held $3,291,684,172 of the total.

Special Highways For Speed Urged As Safety Factor

LONDON—Special speed roads fenced off, from pedestrians like railway tracks were urged here by Viscount Cecil as an essential step in lessening highway accidents. On all other roads he advocates strict enforcement of a speed limit.

The latest British Road Traffic Act has failed to halt the increase of motor mishaps because it leaves the speed of automobiles unchecked. Viscount Cecil told a meeting of the Pedestrians' Association. Rapid road traffic needed treating with the same precautions as those observed by the railways.

"We have got to recognize," he continued, "that there is, particularly among the younger members of society of all classes, an extraordinary perversion of view as to their rights and the duties of drivers of motorcars on the road. They regard pedestrians as a kind of natural enemy who have no rights and ought not to be considered at all, and seem to think that they have a right to go as fast as they can, and that anyone who stops them or impedes their speed may have his rights absolutely disregarded."

A demonstration of a device designed to force trucks and motor-coaches to observe their speed limits was given to the meeting. By means of an electric circuit operated by the speedometer, the moment a vehicle exceeds the limit a lamp is lighted on the roof where the police and public may see it, on the dashboard where the driver may see it, and in coaches, inside, where the passengers may see it.

Fagg Sends Letter of Appreciation Here

A letter has been received here by Miss Rebecca Stevens, as secretary of the local American Legion Auxiliary, from Marcus C. Fagg, of the Children's Home Society in Jacksonville, in which he states his appreciation for the proceeds of the recent tag day put on here by the Legion Auxiliary with the assistance of the Spanish American War Veterans Auxiliary, the Daughters of the American Revolution, and the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

The letter reads as follows: "We have just received from Miss Ruth McKlya, secretary and treasurer, a check for $102.81 which represents the proceeds of the Tag Day sponsored by the Campbell-Lossing Unit Number Fifty-three, assisted by the Spanish War Veterans Auxiliary, the D. A. R. and the U. D. C.

"A hundred dollars is a world of money these days, and I just wish I knew how to adequately express to you and the others who assisted in making this Tag Day such a success. We have never needed money as badly as we do now, and therefore, we doubly appreciate the money coming to us at this time. We appreciate, too, the valuable publicity that has come to our Society through this effort, and I want to ask that you will be good enough to say the biggest Thank You possible to all those who helped in any way.

"Assuring you that every penny of the money will be carefully expended for the provision of the actual necessities of life for our big family of homeless children, and thanking you all again, I am,

Very sincerely yours,
MARCUS C. FAGG,
State Superintendent."

CONFIDENCE SEEN AS NEED OF DAY BY DAVE SHOLTZ

TALLAHASSEE, Mar. 10.—(AP)—Lack of confidence caused the present financial crisis in the United States and in Florida and a return of confidence in the nation, state and banking system will end the trouble, Gov. Dave Sholtz said here last night in a statement addressed to "My Fellow Floridians."

"America is fundamentally sound," he said. "The bank moratorium was not due to the condition of the bank themselves. It was the mental condition of a people that made the moratorium imperative. Temporarily closing banks simply means that we are going to decide where we are going before we start anywhere."

The Governor explained that the public suddenly changed from a credit to a cash business basis "over night" and added that "the most substantial and liquid banks were forced to suspend payments against a general withdrawal of currency."

When the banks again resume unrestricted operations, the governor said, "it will be with a universal understanding that this money stampede is over and we must go on doing business as usual."

Florida banks, he said, "were not faced with any crisis until last Saturday when Florida clearing house centers as well as the city of New York and the federal reserve banks temporarily ceased to pay out money on credit.

"This caused each bank for the moment to have cash resources only to the extent of the cash in their vaults, as all banks keep a portion of their reserve with their correspondent banks and their reserve banks in each district.

"Therefore, when the federal reserve banks were unable to respond to the demands, then all institutions affiliated with them, either directly or indirectly, were forced to adopt the same policy. To use a homely comparison—you can't repair a machine while it is running."

Referring to congressional action to relieve the banking situation, the governor said "You cannot turn the United States into cash. Currency is not a measure of the nation's wealth. Currency is only the medium of exchange. The United States is only good as a going concern. If you try to liquidate it all the value would disappear."

He asked the people of Florida to "keep your chin where you have it now-up. If you have confidence in the bank, maintain that confidence."

There is nothing fundamentally wrong with Florida, "either financially or economically," Gov. Sholtz declared. "We are in better position to face the situation than most of the other states. Neither Florida nor the nation is going to get. All that is needed is just cold-headed common sense. Our job is to see that we are not swept off our feet by hysteria through loss of confidence in both ourselves and our institutions.

"I think the most gratifying thing I have found since my return to Florida (from Washington) is the staunchness of spirit of the people. When time and natural adjustment have cured our economic ills there will be no need for opportunity to rap on our door. All Florida will be on front porch."

"She Done Him Wrong" Features Mae West

"She Done Him Wrong" breezed into the Milane Theater yesterday and gave local film patrons an idea of what the real Mae West is like when she's starring in a play of her own authorship. They had a glimpse of her in "Night After Night," but it has remained for "She Done Him Wrong" to bring out the real Mae West—the Mae West that Broadway knows. See her picture. It's a different kind of a treat and a different kind of a thrill!

The film tells a vivid story of States highways 1, 41 and 17. A total of 11,120 tourists' cars arrived in February. Even the last week in February scored a total of 1844 cars southbound for a vacation tour. Many cars continue to travel southward during March.

BANKS MUST HAVE LICENSE TO RE-OPEN

In its provision extending the President's power, the bill provides that in time of war or other national emergency declared by the President, he may regulate transactions in foreign exchange transfers of credit between banking institutions, export, hoarding, melting or earmarking of gold or silver in or bullion or currency.

He would also be authorized to require any person engaged in any such transactions to furnish under oath complete information relative to the transaction and books or contracts.

The emergency bill would permit banks to get circulating notes from the federal reserve system in return for United States obligations, notes, drafts, bills of exchange and bankers' acceptances.

Notes would be given to the banks to the full value of the United States obligations and 90 percent of the gold value of the notes, drafts, bills of exchange and bankers' acceptances.

Notes would be receivable at par in all parts of the United States "and for the same purposes as are national bank notes" and would be redeemable in lawful money. They would be subject to the same tax as is provided by law for circulating notes of national banks secured by 2 percent bonds.

The bill provides that "exceptional circumstances" when member banks have no further eligible assets, the reserve bank may make advances to them on time or demand notes secured to the satisfaction of the reserve bank.

One of the earliest provisions of the bill provides that whenever the reserve board finds it necessary to protect the gold reserves of the system, it may by a vote of five of its members require all member banks to deliver to reserve banks all gold coin and bullion and gold certificates owned by it.

The reserve bank would pay in return an equivalent amount of any other form of coin or currency or give the member bank immediate credit in its reserve balance.

The President would be authorized during an emergency period proclaimed by him to regulate and limit the extent of business done by all reserve member banks. The state banks would be subject to similar restrictions as state officials.

Another section of the bill provides that when he decides it is necessary the comptroller of the currency may appoint a conservator for such bank.

The conservator would have "all the rights, powers and privileges now possessed by or hereafter given receivers of insolvent national banks.

The conservator could, in his discretion, terminate the conservatorship and permit the bank to resume business under such restrictions as he saw fit to prescribe.

While the bank is in the hands of the conservator, the conservator could permit him to make available for withdrawal by depositors and other credits such amounts as the conservator felt were safe and to receive deposits which would not be subject to limitation on withdrawals but would be segregated from past deposits.

These deposits would be kept in cash, invested in direct United States certificates or deposited in reserve banks.

When the bank was turned over to its directors by the conservator, with or without reorganization, the segregation of new deposits would end and they would be merged with the banks, other holdings within 15 days.

ROOSEVELT BOOK WILL REVEAL HIS ECONOMIC CREDO

Believes Future Will Consider Consumer More Than Producer

NEW YORK, Mar. 10.—(AP)—A call for a "more equitable distribution of national income" and a prediction that in the future America will think more about the consumer and less about the producer, are made by President Roosevelt in a book to be published Mar. 16.

Under the title "Looking Forward," the new President has outlined his political and economic credo. "I believe," he writes, "that we are at the threshold of a fundamental change in our economic thought. I believe that in the future we are going to think less about the producer and more about the consumer."

"In what we may call the 'new economic order,' we cannot make it endure for long unless we can bring about a wiser, more equitable distribution of the national income."

"It is well within the inventive capacity of man—to insure that all who are willing and able to work receive from it at least the necessities of life. In such a system the reward for a day's work will have to be greater, on the average, than it has been, and the reward to capital, especially capital that is superfluous, will have to be less . . ."

"We have witnessed not only the unrestrained use of bank deposits in speculation to the detriment of local credit but we are also aware that this speculation was encouraged by the government itself. I propose that such speculation be discouraged and prevented. . . ."

"I have good reason to believe that many nations who, like us, are suffering from the stoppage of industry will meet us half way and put all the cards on the table for the purpose of breaking an actual deadlock which has paralyzed world trade. . . . Let me at the same time make it clear that a trade conference with the other nations of the world does not . . . involve the renewal in any way of the problem . . . of American participation as a member of the League of Nations."

"American participation in the League would not serve the highest purpose of the prevention of war and a settlement of international difficulties in accordance with fundamental American ideals; the League has not developed . . . along the course contemplated by its founder, nor have the principal members shown a disposition to divert the huge loans spent on armaments into the channel of legitimate trade, balanced budgets and payment of obligations."

LABOR PRESENTS ITS PLAN TO GET OVER DEPRESSION

One Point Off Program Deals With Putting Idle Men To Work

WASHINGTON, Mar. 10.—A program for "strong federal action" to check the forces of deflation and turn business upward was made public recently by the American Federation of Labor in its "monthly survey of business," devoted to an analysis of the current banking situation and its implications.

The labor organization's economists presented, as "essential measures," a three-point program, looking to federal action for putting men back to work and starting production, balancing the budget and reviving world trade.

"The present bank crisis marks a new stage of the depression," it was observed. "Such crises often occur toward the end of a deflation period, when heavy strains on banks become acute and frightened depositors suddenly demand payment."

"The present banking difficulties are too widespread to be met by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation alone," the federation bulletin said, and it held that "if this process of deflation continues it can not but bring worse crises, more business wreckage, worse unemployment, further destruction of human as well as economic values."

"The only way to stop deflation," it continued "is to get our business mechanism back to producing and distributing goods again. The outgoing administration has attempted to do this, basing its policies on the theory that deflation could be cushioned by loans from the R. F. C. and business vitality would of itself be enough to start us on the road upward once confidence was restored. But in order to make this program effective certain fundamental adjustments had to be made and Congress did not take the necessary steps to make them. The chief difficulties are: 1. Unemployment; 2. Huge private debts; 3. War debts and other obligations to international . . . 4. Federal revenue insufficient to cover current operating expenses of the government."

"Only strong federal action can check the forces of deflation and turn business upward. This emergency calls for an immediate and vigorous program. The following are essential measures: "1. Put men back to work and start production. It would be entirely possible for federal action to start production of absolute necessities, such as foods, shoes, textiles, clothes, using federal resources to underwrite loans when necessary as suggested in the Kent plan. Harveys of local needs could establish the extent of production necessary; production could be allotted and loans made on the basis of production and employment. As men are taken back to work and buying power restored, business will gradually right itself and federal support could be withdrawn.

"2. The federal budget. Balancing the budget is not done for one year but a period of years. First, a distinction should be made between current running expenses of the government and capital expenditures for public works which will be used by future generations and may rightly be paid for by them, and emergency relief payments. A genuine effort should be made to bring current operating expenses within current income, provide for capital outlay over a period of years, and increase income where necessary by taxes which will fall on those best able to pay. Care must be taken to avoid destructive measures such as: first, further reduction of government employees' incomes, which would only tend further to impair standards and reduce buying power; second, general sales tax on necessities of living, which would further reduce workers' living standards.

"3. World trade. The first task is to set in motion the mechanism for joint consideration of world trade problems. An understanding of mutual interdependence is all important.

"If all nations let it be known at the outset, that they are willing to submit these vexing problems of international debts, currencies, obstructions to trade, to discussion on the basis of fact, with a genuine effort to reconcile differences and arrive at agreements for the best interest of all, we will have gone three-quarters of the way to a speedy settlement.

cannot hope to restore prices until international trade is resumed."
