Speakers were set up from the Seminole County Department of Public Safety Emergency Management Division.

Sponsors were Florida Power and Light, Southern Bell and Rich Plan of Florida.

Aircraft crashes at airport

SANFORD — A Lake Mary man remains in stable condition this morning after his single-engine experimental aircraft crashed Sunday afternoon at Central Florida Regional Airport. William E. Taylor, 69, 101 Carl Court, was affiliated to Orlando Regional Medical Center after his experimental Osprey seaplane crashed shortly after 4:30 p.m. while he was practicing takeoffs and landings. The aircraft lost power and crashed while Williams was trying to return to the ground, said Christy Williams, spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration in Atlanta. Some people at the scene said the aircraft may have been caught in the exhaust of a nearby passenger jet.

The National Transportation Safety Board are continuing their investigation today, said Steve Cook, airport director. Cook said an internal review of the accident and response will also be conducted. Cooke said airport response personnel were on the scene in less than a minute after the accident.

A new citrus pest

Destructive moth threat to local trees

By NICK PFEIFAU
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — A microscopic Oriental moth has become the newest and fastest-moving threat to Florida's burgeoning citrus industry. Evidence of the moth has already shown up in trees in Sanford.

The citrus leafminer is puzzling scientists and worrying growers.

"It mostly affects new growth trees," said Master Gardener Phil Braunschweig at the Seminole County Extension Service. We have already had some samples brought into our lab by a person right here in Sanford, so this isn't just a case of being down south anymore."

He explained, "They are easy to identify. The moth lays its eggs on the leaf of the citrus tree, and unlike some which make a hole, this one actually burrows a tunnel between the thin layers of the leaf."

Braunschweig continued, "Where most of the leaves on new citrus are green, the tunnels appear to be gray-green, and they are very wiggly in appearance."

Entomologist Phil Stansly at the University of Florida's citrus research station in Immokalee commented, "Right now, we're in a watch-and-wait period." He added, "This is one of the worst pests I've ever seen. But we'll learn to live with it just as we have with the root weevil and others. ... Most pests are under biological control."

Braunschweig said there is no good control over the citrus leafminer. "Some people have been mixing three teaspoons of malathion with

5 local students win merit scholarships

By VICKI DeSORMIER
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Five local students were among 2,000 high school students nationwide to be selected for the National Merit Scholarship Corporation's $2,000 scholarships.

"This is a very prestigious honor for these fine students," said Elaine S. Detweiler, the corporation's public information director.

The scholarships are distributed on a state representational basis, according to each state's proportion of the United States' graduating senior class.

Each of the winners was a finalist in the 1994 Merit Program. About 14,000 students were considered for the awards.

The recipients were chosen by a committee of college admissions officers and secondary school counselors who evaluated a packet of information gathered from both the student and their high school.

Their academic record (including amount and difficulty of course work, and breadth and depth of subjects studied, as well as grades earned), scored from the two standardized tests and other community and extra-curricular activities.

About 1.1 million students in more than 19,000 high schools across the country entered the 1994 Merit Program by taking the 1992 PSAT (Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test), which served as an initial screening. This fall approximately 15,000 of the top scorers were designated as semi-finalists.

Only those semi-finalists, who represent about one half of one percent of the graduating seniors in each state had an opportunity to compete for the scholarships.

Some of the scholarships awarded were sponsored by corporations and others were funded by the National Merit Scholarship Corporation.

The local winners are:

- Matthew Childster of Longwood who attends Lake Brantley High School. His scholarship is sponsored by Pfuzer Inc. He will be the school's valedictorian and he plans to be an electrical/computer engineer.
- Chad A. Hagle of Longwood

Mandela's nephew reaches churches

MIAMI — Churches can take a leading role in the creation of a new South Africa by helping the former apartheid state establish small businesses and make infrastructural improvements, says Nelson Mandela's nephew who is touring the United States to raise money.

"Churches need to help the nation pull itself together and they can do that by teaching people how to set up small home industries, construct preschools, roads and water supply systems," Bishop Joseph Kobo said Sunday to a Pentecostal group in Miami.

Kobo, founder of the 8-year-old Anointed Voice of Africa Ministries, also called on people to pray for a smooth transition to democracy in South Africa.

"Because of your prayers we've been able to see the changes that have taken place in our country," said Kobo, whose church grew from 50 to 57,000 members in 150 churches throughout South Africa.

Wetland habitat considered inside park

MIAMI — Looking to improve their chances of getting environmental permits, Blockbuster Park consultants are thinking of creating an Everglades habitat inside the proposed sports-and-entertainment complex, a newspaper reported.

Nature centers and marsh trails are popular with government regulatory agencies that protect wetlands. The park, dubbed "Wayne's World" after Blockbuster owner H. Wayne Hutzenga, will be built on the Dade-Broward line on 2,447 acres — all of it ecologically fragile.

The property lies on a belt of lowlands stretching from Lake Okeechobee to the Florida Bay, where environmentalists are considering creating a buffer zone between the wetlands and urban sprawl.

But the Blockbuster habitat could create more problems than solutions in the battle to save the fragile Everglades, said Richard Ring, superintendent of Everglades National Forest.

Teen charged with manslaughter

DEERFIELD BEACH — A teen-ager who wanted to show off his new .38 caliber revolver and his prowess with the weapon killed a 15-year-old girl, sheriff's officials said.

Tyler Kent, 17, is facing manslaughter charges in connection with the death of Luciana Pecanha of Coral Springs, authorities said Sunday.

"It's its hard to think that you're gonna go to school tomorrow and she's not gonna be there," said Pecanha's friend Joey Mince.

Kent, who had recently moved into his employer's apartment in Deerfield Beach, invited five friends to his new home late Saturday to show the revolver, said Broward County's sheriff's spokesman Jim Leljedahl.

Leljedahl said Kent is a high school dropout who purchased the gun from a customer at the pet store where he works. Detectives will try to identify the customer, he said.

NEWS FROM THE REGION AND ACROSS THE STATE

Health care alliances in business

By JACKIE HALLIFAX
Associated Press Writer

TALLAHASSEE — Kerry Kennedy doesn't have any expertise in health care reform.

He's just another small business owner who wants to provide medical benefits to his workers and has looked all over for coverage that wouldn't bankrupt him.

Kennedy got a sneak peek last week into Florida's brave new world of managed competition, which opens for business Monday.

"Oh, man. I am very impressed," he said. "I had no idea going into this meeting what it would entail."

The executive director of one of Florida's new regional health care alliances met with Kennedy and his insurance agent to review the insurance plans that will be available to small employers who join the alliances.

Kennedy, who owns a Titusville furniture store, found himself in the national spotlight last fall when his health care woes were described by President Clinton in his State of the Union address to Congress.

Kennedy had been hesitant to get his hopes up that Florida's new health alliances would make much difference in the medical insurance market.

"I'm not a health person. I'm not an insurance agent," Kennedy said. "I'm a furniture man."

But after the meeting, he marveled at how many choices of affordable plans were available through the alliances. "This is definitely a change," he said.

Starting Monday, Kennedy and other small-business employers will be able to enroll in one of 11 health care alliances across Florida.

The idea is that, by joining together, the small businesses can reap the benefits of volume purchasing already enjoyed by big businesses. That's one of the central concepts of the health care reform model known as managed competition.

The Community Health Purchasing Alliances were created by state lawmakers a year ago.

They're non-profit, private entities. Although they are state-chartered, they are run by 17-member boards appointed last fall by Gov. Lawton Chiles and legislative leaders.

Membership is voluntary and open to self-employed people and businesses with up to 50 workers.

The alliances can't purchase or negotiate on behalf of their members. They have to offer all plans submitted by insurance companies and health maintenance organizations.

But the alliances can provide their members with the data to compare one plan to another. Much of their work will be handled by outside benefits management companies hired this spring.

"You can walk through the door (Monday), get the comparative rates and begin shopping," said Doug Cook, director of the Agency for Health Care Administration.

Two-thirds of the plans submitted to the alliances had cheaper premiums than plans available in the open market, said Cook. The average drop in price was 25 percent.

"That seems to me to be a good deal," he said.

As well as lower costs, the plans offer patient choice, Cook said. Only 20 percent were closed networks like HMOs. The rest were either traditional fee-for-service indemnity plans or preferred provider organizations, which have open networks that patients can leave if they pay a higher price.

Some 50 insurers offered more than 1,300 health plans, with an average of 100 plans in each of the 11 alliance districts.

The coverage purchased by alliance members won't take effect until June.

Across the state, the directors and board members of the alliances aren't sure what they're going to be faced with when they

Alliances drawing national attention

By JACKIE HALLIFAX

TALLAHASSEE — Small business employers across Florida aren't the only ones interested in the performance of the regional health care purchasing alliances that open for business Monday.

Experts and analysts from Washington to New Jersey to Wyoming are following the fate of Florida's version of managed competition as the debate over national health care reform continues.

"Florida's a very important model," said Nancy Barrand, a senior program officer with the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation in Princeton, N.J.

Florida is the first state to have a statewide network of insurance alliances, Barrand said.

But several states have approved creating some form of purchasing alliance or cooperative, said Kevin Haugh, a senior policy analyst for the Institute for Health Policy Solutions, a private non-profit organization in Washington.

"California was actually the first state to open its doors and start enrolling people," Haugh said. "It's also the first one that was somewhat state-sanctioned."

Florida, however, is the first to have a network of 11 state-chartered nonprofit private alliances run by 17-member boards appointed by the governor and legislative leaders. The alliances are open to small businesses and enrollment begins Monday.

"The whole thing depends on how well you execute," Dr. Paul Ellwood, president of the Jackson Hole Group said. "The blueprint is right."

California has a single alliance with six geographic regions. Since last July, more than 50,000 people have enrolled. Rates dropped 6 percent this year, following a 15 percent drop last year.

"They've been very, very successful," Haugh said.

Ellwood said Florida's efforts are important because its network is different in scale from the other states.

open for business Monday. Many hope for a low-key, quiet beginning to give them time to work out any kinks before they publicize a grand opening in the middle of the month.

"We're designing the road as we're building it and we want to make sure the first day we open it we don't have bumper-to-bumper traffic," said Terry McCorvie, who met with Kennedy last week.

McCorvie is executive director of the alliance that includes Orange, Osceola, Seminole and Brevard counties. In Hialeah, Lynn Kistak, chairwoman of the alliance that includes Dade and Monroe counties, said alliance officials are excited about opening.

"There's this great sense of anticipation," she said.

Mary Jane Gallagher is chairwoman of the board that runs the alliance for Okeechobee, Indian River, St. Lucie, Martin and Palm Beach counties.

Some 250 calls from interested businesses have come in over the last two months, she said.

Way Back When

Here's a "Way Back When" photo a lot of old Sanford Giant baseball fans will remember. It was taken in 1948 during a game at the old Municipal Park. The event was the presentation of a "slush" of cash to Sanford Giant manager Hal Gruber, center. Hal had become the father of a son born that day. Presenting him with the award was Judge A. Sydney Herlong Jr., left, of Leesburg, president of the Florida State League. From the photo it is obvious Gruber has just received some "catcalls" and "jibes" from players in the visitor's dugout. The emcee was the Herald's "Way Back When" columnist, Julian Stenstrom. At that time Stenstrom was the "voice" of the Sanford Giants and sports director of local radio station WTRR owned and operated by the late Myron Reck. Gruber became a widower several years ago but is now married to Gale Billing, daughter of Dr. W.V. Billing, a pharmacist and former owner and operator of Touchton's Rexall drugstore in downtown Sanford. Gale manages a ladies' fashion apparel shop and the couple reside in Winter Park. One of Gruber's chief claims to fame is that he was the first New York Giant farm system manager to tutor the famed Bobby Thompson who hit the ninth-inning home run off Brooklyn Dodger hurler Ralph Branca to win the National League pennant in 1954. Thompson's clout has long been called by baseball writers and historians as the "shot heard 'round the world." The two teams ended the National League season in a tie and the Thompson home run defeated the Dodgers and gave the Giants the league title.

AIDS spreading among elderly

By JAMES MARTINEZ
Associated Press Writer

TAMPA — The first time Marianne Waller ever really thought about AIDS was when the doctors told her she had it — at age 56.

"I always thought it would happen to somebody else," said the divorced convenience store worker with three grown children.

"All they were talking about there for a long time was drug users and homosexuals," she said. "That's why I was so shocked."

"I lived a straight life. I wasn't out on the streets. I didn't use drugs... It's like if you don't think you're affected by it, you don't pay no attention."

With more graying Americans falling prey to the deadly virus, AIDS activists in retiree-rich Florida are beginning to spread the word that the disease and the risks that can cause it respect no age barrier.

"People seem to think that sex stops when you reach a certain age," said Geneva Miller, an 83-year-old North Miami Beach widow who has launched an awareness campaign as part of a task force on AIDS and aging. "What people need to realize is that it's going on and older people run the same risk as anyone else."

But the newfound awareness came too late for Waller. Her 18-year marriage ended in divorce in 1981. She ventured into a dating world that was much different from the one she remembered.

She figures now it was unprotected sex during two relationships with men about her age that left her infected. She's not sure because she can't find them. The last breakup came in 1990 and she said she hasn't dated since.

Four months ago, she began feeling feverish and weak. Suddenly she had trouble swallowing. Her weight, which had been 130 pounds, eventually dropped as low as 82 and it became a struggle for her to even stand up.

It wasn't until she was hospitalized that doctors tested her for AIDS and learned she may have unwittingly carried the virus for years.

A healthy T-cell count is about 1,000. Those are the white cells that fight infection. For people who are HIV positive, a count below 200 is diagnosed as full-blown AIDS.

Waller's T-cell count is 15. Twice a day, a nurse injects her with drugs through a catheter in her chest to keep opportunistic illnesses in check. Already, infections have spread to her intestines and robbed her of the sight in her right eye.

"If people ask me, I just tell them, 'I've got AIDS,'" the slight, gray-haired woman said as she puffed a cigarette. "If they can't handle it, then that's their problem."

People 50 and over account for 10 percent of the 361,509 total AIDS cases nationwide, according to the National Centers for Disease Control.

While the number of new AIDS cases among younger people has dropped steadily, new cases among older people are on the upswing. In the most recent study, new AIDS cases for those under 25 decreased 7 percent between 1990 and 1992, while the number of cases in the over-50 group increased 17 percent, according to Dr. William Adler of the National Institutes of Health.

Part of the reason, Adler said, is that older guys particularly have not taken to heart educational efforts on safe sex and have not changed their behavior patterns.

Adler estimated the median AIDS age has shifted from the 20s to the 30s over the last few years. The trend is likely to continue with most educational efforts still aimed at younger people, he said.

Florida ranks behind only California and New York in the number of older people with AIDS.

When the state began tracking residents who suffered from acquired immune deficiency syndrome in 1982, only four were between the ages of 50 and 59. Just one was over 60.

Today, 2,867 Florida residents between 50 and 59 have been diagnosed with AIDS, along with another 1,350 over age 60. And AIDS cases among older residents represent about 12 percent of the state's 35,697 total cases, according to the state Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services.

Experts say most of the cases among older people result from high-risk behavior earlier in life, since a decade or longer can pass between infection and actual AIDS. Nearly half of the state's cases of AIDS stem from homosexuality or bisexuality and 20 percent from heterosexual contact.

Tampa's debate over gay rights goes on

The Associated Press

TAMPA — The controversy in Tampa over gay rights — marked by adoption of an anti-discrimination ordinance, its repeal and a successful legal challenge of the repeal — isn't over yet.

David Caton, a leader of the Take Back Tampa repeal campaign, has warned the city council that it can expect a petition drive to put the issue before voters next March.

"Take Back Tampa is not responsible for creating this issue," Caton said after the Thursday council meeting. "It was the Tampa City Council. They thrust this upon the public."

The council approved a gay-rights ordinance three years ago and voters repealed the law in November 1992.

But 462 signatures on the petition that forced the vote were ruled invalid by the state Supreme Court and the law was back on the books last October.

Two weeks ago, the U.S. Supreme Court refused to hear arguments in the case.

Caton, also the head of the American Family Association which unsuccessfully tried to overturn anti-gay discrimination ordinances statewide, vows to make the Tampa ordinance the top issue in the 1995 city elections.

Some wish he wouldn't.

Mayor Sandy Freedman last month urged voters not to sign the petition, saying it would divide the community. She added that the issue doesn't "show up on the radar screen" in terms of the most pressing matters on voters' minds.

Mark Puig of the Tampa Bay Gay Men's Chorus said Caton is only making the gay and lesbian community more determined.

"The best way to combat the religious right is to educate," he said.

Puig's biggest beef with Caton and the media is the portrayal of the issue as "special rights" or "gay rights."

The ordinance also protects the rights of heterosexuals, Puig said.

"Portraying this as special rights is their most effective tool," he said. "It's why they are winning. Middle America does not want special rights. But this is about equal rights for gays and lesbians."

Mark Merrill of the Tampa-based Florida Family Council, a nonprofit educational group, doesn't think gays warrant the same treatment as legally protected groups.

"I don't see gay ghettos, gay homeless," Merrill said. "We haven't seen conclusive evidence that they as a class have suffered a pattern of discrimination."

Public housing: Kick lawbreaking tenants out

Public housing has fallen under fire nationwide over the last several years. Once a utilitarian shelter for poor working class residents struggling to get on their feet, many projects became home to drug dealers, gang members and various other lawbreakers.

Working class poor too scared to complain about drug deals, guns and criminal acts, mostly kept quiet. And the criminals proliferated.

President Clinton recently announced a plan to make the projects safer by allowing gang-infested public housing to be searched for guns under certain circumstances, if tenants agree.

Eviction from Sanford's public housing is supposed to be possible upon proof or conviction of drug possession, use or sale. This is in the lease with the Sanford Housing Authority.

It is not being enforced. Rarely a week goes by without names of tenants in Sanford's six housing projects being listed for drug arrests in the Sanford Herald Police Briefs.

But Sanford Police Commander Dennis Whitmire said although drug investigations and arrests are conducted in the public housing developments, he is not aware of the housing authority evicting anyone.

Whitmire said Sgt. Willie Hardin, who has worked drug cases in the special investigations unit for two years, could not recall any time when the housing authority evicted someone on a drug related case.

Even Linda Williams, director of management for the housing authority, said she doesn't "know of any (cases) where we have gone the full nine yards on (to eviction)."

The Sanford Housing Authority Board of Directors, James Valerino, Bernard Brown, Rosemary Charles, Edward Blacksheare and Shirley Allen, are doing a disservice to law abiding tenants by not enforcing the clause for eviction on drug charges. As tenants, these people are recipients of federal help through taxpayers dollars.

If they break the law, kick them out.

Nurses Week

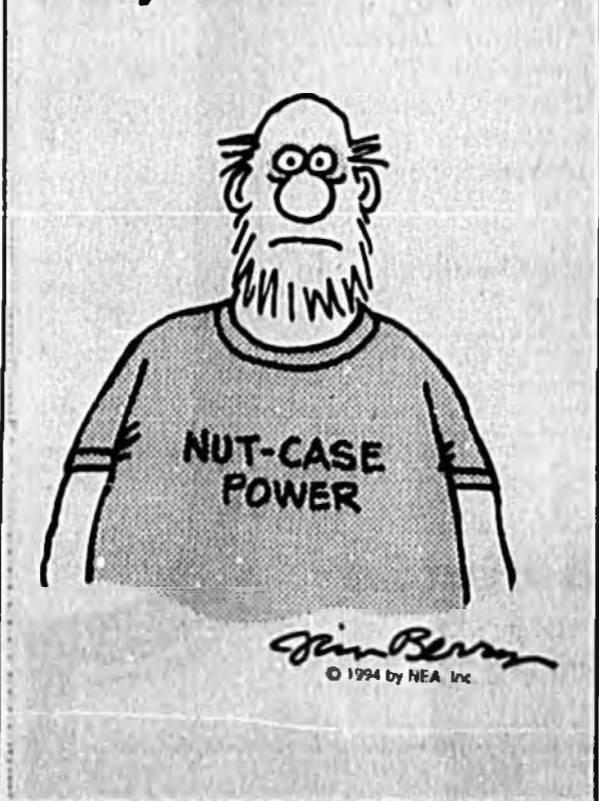

As highly skilled professionals, nurses are gifted in both inter-personal skills as well as technical know-how. Nurses are navigators on the health care team, guiding patients and their family through the unexpected and the unexplored, as well as the ups and downs of crisis and recovery.

In tribute to the profession, America's 2.2 million registered nurses will be the focus of a week-long event, National Nurses Week. With this year's theme, "Charting the Course for a Health Nation," National Nurses Week 1994 will be recognized May 6-12.

We at Olsten Kimberly QualityCare join the ANA and the Florida Nurses Association in celebrating the spirit of nursing, by extending a special "thank you" to nurses in the Seminole County area. It is my hope that you will cover the National Nurses Week events in Sanford, and help us recognize our area's nurses and their accomplishments.

Where's due process in the schools?

A few weeks before Ramon Cortines became chancellor of New York City's huge and largely failing school system, he was having lunch near Harvard with two other former city superintendents. (Cortines had retired as head of the San Francisco schools.)

All three agreed it would be suicidal to take the open New York appointment because that city, as one of them put it, is "a political sinkhole."

During his fifth month as chancellor I asked Cortines why he had changed his mind. He laughed. "It was a challenge. I will say, though, that my biggest surprise in New York has been the politicization of every aspect of education. I understand politics, but I don't believe every issue has to be politicized."

"What I have to do is not get wholly caught up in the politics of the continuous crises — asbestos in the schools, weapons in the schools, budget cuts, and local community boards fighting with superintendents."

Cortines' way of not being caught up in the quixotic politics has been to meet parents and students all over the city. So far he has visited some 80 schools and held many evening meetings with parents. "I believe in parent involvement," Cortines told me, "but there's more to that than saying it."

Cortines starts work at around 6 in the morning and often does not get home until 10 at night. On April 7, he was on his way home from an evening session with parents in Bedford-Stuyvesant, Brooklyn, when on his car phone, he was commanded to see — immediately — Mayor Rudolph Giuliani at Grace Mansion.

The two had been at odds on whether Cortines was cutting enough personnel at headquarters to fit in with the mayor's plan to reduce the city's deficit. (Cortines' boss, it should be noted, is the Board of Education, not the mayor, but Giuliani has a long reach.)

After their meeting that night, Cortines thought they had reached an accommodation — even though the mayor had publicly insulted and bullied the chancellor during the previous week.

His way of not being caught up in the quixotic politics has been to meet parents and students all over the city.

The next day, however, Cortines was told he had to fire — by noon — two of his senior aides who had incurred the mayor's displeasure. If the chancellor refused, the mayor would appoint a fiscal monitor over all expenditures by Cortines.

Refusing to fire the two aides, Cortines called the demand "blackmail," adding that "my integrity is not for sale." As for giving the mayor's operator control over expenditures, Cortines said that "such a position undermines the independence of the educational process, making it subject to political issues from which it should be insulated."

The mayor responded by appointing a fiscal monitor — without a hearing for Cortines to assert his rights in the matter. The chancellor resigned.

Not long before, we had been talking about the need for students to so learn their constitutional rights that they understand these guarantees belong to everybody. We did not get into how authoritarian mayoral politics can greatly diminish children's prospects for a useful public education — without the students or their chancellor having any due process rights.

Before coming to New York, Cortines worked for a time in Washington at the Department of Education.

Social Security can be salvaged

Suppose you know that a killer flood, the granddaddy of all floods, is going to hit the lower Mississippi Valley in 35 years. If you don't do something, everyone in its path will be wiped out and the overall American economy will suffer a devastating blow.

Suppose you further know that the longer you postpone dealing with the crisis, the more expensive the solution will become. Indeed, you have been told that if you put off dealing with the problem until the eleventh hour, the cheapest "solution" then would be the abandonment of the towns and cities along the flood's projected path.

Add one more factor. There are steps you can take beginning next year which, while expensive in themselves and disturbing to virtually everyone in the Valley, will be far less costly than either the flood they could prevent or any last-minute emergency program.

What do you do? As a question of logic, the question answers itself. You begin to take steps now to avert the looming disaster.

As a matter of politics and American psychology, however, the answer is less cut and dried. Until recently we were thoroughly infected with that "manana" (tomorrow) frame of mind, which the old Anglo caricature attributed uniquely to Latin Americans. If it isn't raining today, why bother to fix the roof?

For several years, that has been Washington's approach to the well advertised 21st-century crisis in the Social Security system.

The politicians, who understood fully just how horrendous the crack could be, have been reluctant to take unpopular steps to avert it. The people, many of whom actually have a pretty good idea that the future is not bright for Social Security, have shown little inclination to start paying to fix what is presently a cash machine which churns out surpluses each year.

Fortunately, last week Congress and the American people got a wake-up call. Social Security trustees told Congress that unless it takes action, the Social Security trust fund will run out of money in 2029, seven years earlier than previously predicted. Congressman Dan Rostenkowski, chairman of the House Ways and Means committee, promptly suggested a package of immediate and intermediate steps which he thinks could keep the federal retirement program on an even keel for 75 years.

The system was last "fixed" a decade ago in a memorable compromise fashioned by a Republican president and Democratic speaker of the House of Representatives. It postponed the evil day of reckoning and was widely hailed as a masterpiece of political footwork. But the underlying problem remained. We have an aging population both because older Americans live longer and because the birth rate has fallen sharply over the past 30 years. That has translated into fewer and fewer productive workers available to pay Social Security taxes so that more and more older folk can enjoy a constant set of retirement benefits. At a given point in time, now estimated to be 2029, the system will inevitably collapse of its own fiscal contradictions.

The Rostenkowski suggestions include an immediate adjustment of the benefits base. That involves reducing next year's cost of living increase, an idea widely unpopular with retirees for self-evident reasons. But a relatively small reduction in that increase would have a powerful cumulative impact.

There is a relatively simple way to understand. While the real difference in average benefits would be only $3 a month less next year, that $36 a year reduction would compound to a much higher figure by the year 2029.

The Illinois congressman has also recommended slowly extending the permissible age of retirement from 65 to 67, thereby reducing the rate of increase in the pool of retirees, and he has suggested trimming benefits for new retirees and raising payroll taxes early in the next century.

Most of these steps would hurt millions of people and make the overall Social Security package somewhat less attractive. But all of them together would not come close to the huge tax increase that would be required to keep the system going if decisions are postponed until 2029 or even the greater pain involved in scrapping the Social Security system altogether.

The political problem is that most members of Congress will be long gone by that time. So will most current retirees. Since these are the two groups which would suffer the immediate consequences of meaningful reform, persuading them to adopt the long view will not be easy.

But it ought to be easier today than it was just a few years ago. We as a nation have begun to understand better what "manana" means to everything from corporate competitiveness to the cost of higher education.

You begin to take steps now to avert the looming disaster.

Viewing legacy with open eyes

WASHINGTON — A fine line separates respect and revisionism, and this week that line got straddled in the speeches and statements eulogizing former President Richard Nixon.

For all his attributes and accomplishments, Nixon's mark on our political system is a decidedly dark and contradictory one. He fought for democracy abroad while he tried to undermine it at home.

He was a trail-blazer in foreign affairs and a trampler of civil liberties at home. Democracies cannot function without the consent of the governed, and Nixon knew he had lost that consent when he resigned in disgrace.

Nixon poisoned the atmosphere between politicians, the press and the public, promoting a cynicism and distrust of all politicians and a sense that power had become an end to itself and public service had become solely a means for private gain. This is Nixon's legacy, and it reflects each day in the disdant and doubt that clogs political discourse.

This column's history with Richard Nixon goes back to his first year in elected office — 1947. Almost from the beginning, Nixon and this column's founder, Drew Pearson, were at war. Nixon had barely arrived from California before Drew began chronicling his misrepresentations. Ironically, despite all the criticism he endured, Nixon once saved our irrepressible mentor from extreme bodily harm.

The scene took place at a posh Washington restaurant where a group of us were celebrating Drew's birthday in 1950. One of the guests in attendance was the red-baiting Sen. Joe McCarthy, R-Wis.

Drew had become disgusted with McCarthy's reckless and unsubstantiated charges of Communist conspirators in government, and he was among the first to publicly challenge those claims.

McCarthy was growing irate. During the party, McCarthy mentioned that he was planning to take the Senate floor the next day and denounce Drew as a Communist sympathizer, something of which he had no proof and which was completely false.

As the party was breaking up and Drew was gathering his coat, McCarthy's rage reached the boiling point. He took a blindfolded swing at Drew, followed by a knee to the groin. Pandemonium erupted at the restaurant, as several others got into the act. Finally, one man stepped in to break up the fight: Sen. Richard Nixon. Years later, Nixon told us he thought Drew would have been killed had the fight progressed much further.

Long before Watergate — long before we topped the "enemies list" and our office was under round-the-clock CIA surveillance — Richard Nixon's true character was evident. He was a lonely and suspicious man who spoke eloquently about law and order but willingly broke the rules when it served his own agenda. Our first major story about Nixon came shortly before his defeat in the 1960 presidential election by John F. Kennedy. It concerned his brother Donald, a wheeler-dealer who fit squarely in the now-familiar mold of embarrassing presidential siblings.

Not until 1960 did we learn that shortly after Nixon was elected vice president, his brother tapped the phantom billionaire Howard Hughes for a $205,000 loan, which was granted with only $13,000 in collateral. Donald Nixon wanted the money to launch a West Coast version of the McDonald's hamburger chain, selling "Nixonburgers" to hungry Californians. Predictably, Donald squandered the money.

Nixon's mark on our political system is a decidedly dark and contradictory one.

November after the resignation of former city attorney Becky Vose. Taylor applied for the position full time and was the top ranked candidate for the job by a screening committee of the Seminole County Bar Association. Taylor signed a contract in March becoming city attorney. Just a month later, Lovestrund called for Taylor to be fired.

Commissioner Iris Benson seconded Lovestrund's original motion to remove the attorney for the purposes of discussion and voiced concern over Taylor's reported reaction during the domestic incident.

However, Commissioner Steve Miller received the backing of Commissioners Ron Sargent and Annmarie Vacca to end the discussion.

Miller said it was not the work of the commission to act as a moral patrol. Miller's comment that the incident was a "dead issue" proved prophetic.

Under the city charter, the mayor or three city commissioners may call a special session of the commission. However, Lovestrund noted, "It's very tough for three commissioners to get together and call a special meeting without breaking the Sunshine Law."

After withdrawing the motion to fire Taylor, Lovestrund said he did not foresee any difficulty in working with the attorney.

At tonight's city commission meeting, Taylor is scheduled to report on the adult entertainment ordinance.

The commissioners will also conduct a first reading of an ordinance amending the city code regulating cross connections with the public potable water supply.

Longwood Police Chief Greg Manning has requested the commissioners okay an additional $2,500 from the Confiscation Fund for renovations to bring the Teen Dance Center up to city code.

In other business, the commissioners will consider a request for approval of a 10-K walk route through the city and a street lighting proposal for Highway 17-02. The commission meeting begins at 7 p.m. tonight in the commission chambers of city hall.

Wilson is always on the move. Black said.

She divides her hours between the RSVP Christmas store, the Sanford Museum, the Meals on Wheels program at the Sanford Senior Center and organization and operation of the annual Whale of A Sale Program.

In addition, she is actively involved in her church, in the Sanford Woman's Club and in the Sanford Garden Club.

"She never stops," Black said. "If it were not enough that the 82-year-old Wilson keeps active in all those activities, it should be noted that she does not own a car."

According to Black, she travels from place to place on public transportation. Occasionally friends and others will give her a ride to and from a specific program.

Wilson herself was not available for comment even early this morning as she was already on the road to help out with one of the programs she assists.

"She may be out until late in the evening," Black said. "She's quite a lady.

Wilson has been volunteering through the RSVP program since 1989. During that time, she has shown little sign that she plans to slow down.

"She just keeps going," Black said. "She's always ready to help. We know that if we call her, she will make time for us and what we need."

Black said the other volunteers can count on Wilson's cheery disposition and untiring attitude to help pull them through the project at hand.

"We think she's fantastic," Black said.

Wilson was honored during the RSVP program on Friday at which volunteers were given pins and certificates for their efforts throughout the year and over the course of many years. Steve Jerve of Channel 9 Television was the master of ceremonies at the event held at Greyhound Park in Casselberry.

Citrus

one ounce of Volck oil in a gallon of water and applying it," he said, "but of course that would only be for a few small trees. There's no way grove owners could undertake such an attempted eradication program."

The citrus leafminer somehow hitchhiked into the Miami area almost a year ago and quickly established itself in much of Florida's 790,000-acre citrus belt. Officials believe it traveled to Florida from China, Thailand or Australia in a cargo shipment or in travelers' luggage.

Industry leaders are scrambling to come up with biological controls. Eradication is impossible, and much of the industry's hopes rest on parasitic wasps.

University of Florida entomologist Marjorie Hoy is in Australia to collect samples of three Asian wasps introduced to combat a leafminer infestation there.

Aussie researchers have found the parasites kill about 80 percent of the leafminers.

Wasps, often smaller than the leafminers, lay their eggs on the body of a leafminer with larvae. When the wasp eggs hatch, they eat the miners' larvae. Some native wasps are able to do this in a 15-day cycle.

"We feel that some wasps evolved specifically for that will do a better job than our native wasps are doing," said Stansly. "But the natives are learning. They may have been a bigger help than we realize this spring."

Early fears that the leafminer might severely damage this coming year's crop were largely dissipated after the important spring flush of new foliage escaped serious damage. Growers are using expensive pesticides and special culturing methods in efforts to minimize expected attacks to new growth this summer and fall.

Last year's summer flush was riddled by the destructive pest, prompting alarmed industry officials to quickly form a task force to seek financing and begin research projects to chart a battle plan.

There was some damage to young trees, but officials said it was not extensive and they were unable to estimate the cost of the damage. The insect bores into leaves and "mines" them for food.

The leafminer's speedy march through commercial groves worried many growers last year, said Walter J. Kender, director of the University of Florida's citrus research center in Lake Alfred.

"There was quite a scramble. If (the infestation) continued, we felt the important spring flush would be very vulnerable," Kender said Monday. "It turned out that didn't happen, but we're still watching it very closely."

Scientists and agricultural experts are confident they will learn to control the leafminer, just as they have other crop-eating bugs, pests, blights and infections that have descended on groves and citrus nurseries over the years.

There are five separate research projects under way in different growing regions.

Growers are taking the latest threat to their livelihoods in stride.

"We're fully apprised, totally familiar with what it can do," said Doug Bourmique, executive vice president of the Indian River Citrus League. "Right now - knock on wood - it's not a severe problem. We have problems that have been a lot more devastating."

The trade association is composed of 1,600 members in six lower East Coast counties who produce oranges, specialty fruit and most of the grapefruit for fresh fruit markets.

"Our growers are not in a panic," Bourmique added. "Whatever floats ashore or is dropped on Florida over the years, our growers learn to combat it."

Citrus industry officials say the leafminer also has shown up in Florida's southwest growing area of Charlotte, Glades, Lee, Hendry and Collier counties, and along the Gulf Coast.

What happens in the groves this year is the key to control. Citrus extension agent Robert M. Turley said.

"Last year was a scramble to find out about it. This year, we're a little better informed and well prepared. Once we've gone through a season, we'll know how to manage it," Turley said.

The leafminer was first discovered in May 1993 in Homestead. Jorge Pena, an entomologist at the Tropical Research and Education Center in Homestead, said about 3,000 acres of lime groves were quickly infested. By summer, the leafminer had traveled as far as the Florida-Guayana border.

There has been speculation that the insect was carried from West Africa by winds and ocean waves that became South Florida's Hurricane Andrew in August 1992. But most scientists consider that theory farfetched.

Pena believes it's possible the hurricane helped spread it around in South Florida after its arrival from foreign shores, probably aboard an ocean shipment.

Pena has found eight native species of wasps that are parasitic on the leafminer, two of which are common. He hopes to raise enough research money to breed the wasps in great numbers so they can be established in citrus areas that need them.

There also are some natural leafminer predators: ants, spiders, the green lacewing insect.

"Right now, the native wasps are providing 40 percent parasitism, at least in the Homestead area," Pena said. "They are here and doing a good job, so let's use them."

Between the Australian wasps and the natives, he predicted, "We will have good success."

Ag Dept: Consumers have the right to know about hormones in their milk

By PAUL A. DRISCOLL
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO — Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy says he sides with consumers who want to know if their milk comes from cows treated with bovine growth hormone.

"Consumers really ought to know" if the milk comes from treated cows, he said.

Espy was questioned Sunday after speaking at the Food Marketing Institute annual convention.

Espy said the Clinton administration is debating whether to take a position on labeling milk containers to show if the contents come from cows treated with synthetic hormones.

The Food and Drug Administration approved recombinant bovine growth hormone last November. It was the first major product of food biotechnology to hit the market.

Groups such as the American Medical Association have deemed the hormone safe. But consumer resistance has led some retailers and dairies to shun the product. Vermont has passed a law requiring mandatory labeling of dairy products that contain artificial bovine growth hormone.

Known as both BST and BGH, the hormone has been shown to boost milk production by up to 15 percent in some cows.

Espy also said he is moving forward on stopping Canada from dumping wheat in this country, although he doesn't want the dispute to degenerate into a trade war.

"Our friends to the north want their cake and eat it too," Espy said. He contends the Canadian Wheat Board undercuts U.S. prices.

The United States has filed a complaint with the International Trade Commission and wants to impose a wheat import cap of 1 million tons a year, effective in July.

Last year, this country exported $14.6 billion worth of high-value consumer food.

Farakhan says whites want black organs

By Associated Press

TOLEDO, Ohio — Louis Farrakhan told a university audience that whites won't stop black-on-black violence because it provides organs for transplants.

"When you're killing each other, they can't wait for you to die," Farrakhan told a crowd of about 6,000 at the University of Toledo. "You've become good for parts."

When a rich white person needs a kidney or a heart, they say "get us a nigger," Farrakhan told the mostly black audience at a stop-the-violence rally Saturday night.

The Nation of Islam leader also said he was there to preach love not hate.

"We can't blame white people for our self destruction," he told the audience. "Practice nonviolence on yourself. Love yourself and your people."

AROUND THE STATE

Marlins over .500

MIAMI — Gary Sheffield hit his major league-leading 11th home run as Florida took a nine-run lead after two innings and beat Cincinnati 9-4, giving the Marlins a winning record for only the second time ever.

The Marlins are 13-12, their best record since a 1-0 mark following the first game in franchise history last year.

Pat Rapp (2-1) allowed seven hits, no walks and two runs in 6 2-3 innings, his longest outing of the season. Rapp had a shutout until the seventh, when Kevin Mitchell hit his seventh homer and Bret Boone his first.

Sheffield's three-run homer was the biggest blow in the second, when Florida scored six runs, all with two out. Jeff Conine followed Sheffield with another home run.

Conine's homer was his seventh. He also had an RBI infield single in the first.

Varitek leads Tech

TALLAHASSEE — Altamonte Spring's Jason Varitek hit a three-run homer in the eighth inning to lift Georgia Tech to a 7-5 come-from-behind victory over Florida State in an Atlantic Coast Conference game Sunday night.

The Yellow Jackets won two of three games in Tallahassee to improve to 35-10 in the year, 15-6 in the ACC. Florida State fell to 40-13, 10-4.

Varitek's home run, his 11th, came with two out and made a loser of reliever David Yocum (4-2). It scored Michael Smith, who doubled to lead off the inning, and Nomar Garciaparra.

The Seminoles had clung to a 5-4 lead since the fourth inning as Georgia Tech twice left the bases loaded. But Florida State could not score either off Georgia Tech relievers Chris Myers (2-1), who picked up the victory with 4 1/3 innings of three-hit relief, or Tucker Barr, who earned his first save of the year.

Gators sweep Bulldogs

GAINESVILLE — Chris Kokinda went 4-for-5 and Shane Spears pitched eight strong innings as Florida defeated Georgia 9-1 Sunday in a Southeastern Conference game.

Florida, completing a three-game sweep of the Bulldogs, improved to 32-15 overall, 14-3 SEC, while Georgia fell to 16-27, 5-13. Florida remains a half-game ahead of Tennessee (14-4) in the SEC Eastern Division standings.

Spears (3-1) allowed one run on four hits and striking out four.

James Eddam, Brandon Marsters and Chan Perry each added a home run for Florida as the Gators pounded out 12 hits on Georgia pitching.

The Hurricanes' Mike Metcalfe had three hits. With the win Clemson improves its record to 45-13. Miami falls to 36-11.

Earnhardt nips Irvan

Is it time for high schools to drop spring football?

Today begins the curious tradition known as spring football. For the next four weeks, Florida high schools may conduct football practice, culminating with the spring jamboree on Friday, May 27.

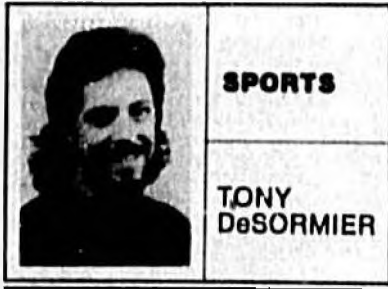

As its oxymoronic tag might suggest, spring football gives rise to mixed feelings, even for those immediately involved. It's not uncommon to hear the suggestion that spring football should be dropped from the high school calendar.

That sentiment is gaining momentum because of (A) growing concerns with achieving gender equity, (B) growing financial concerns, and (C) a change in the rule concerning coaches working with players during the summer months.

Four Seminole County coaches asked about the essentialness of spring football were unanimous in their divided enthusiasm. They look forward to getting to work, but it wouldn't break their hearts if spring football were abolished.

"Any football coach is going to want spring training," said Seminole coach Ernie MacPherson. "I'm sure there are some spring sports coaches who don't favor it too well, but as far as I'm concerned, I like it."

"Spring practice gives you a chance to look at the young guys coming up. You want a chance to in the nation is located here in Florida. Spring practice is part of the reason. That's why colleges come here to recruit our athletes.

SPORTS

TONY DeSORMIER

"Also, it gives us a chance to see what we have, what our weaknesses and strengths are, and what we should be working on over the summer."

Still, it wouldn't bother Peters if spring football were dropped.

"I wouldn't be too disenchanted if we wouldn't have spring practice," said Peters with a laugh. "As long as all the other coaches in the state are holding to that, if we do away with spring football, that's fine. If we're not practicing, are they not practicing? Enforceability becomes the problem."

Lake Brantley coach Fred Almon has his own reasons for being willing to part with spring football.

"I've got mixed emotions," said Almon. "Florida is one of the best producers of football talent in the nation. But the older I get, the more it (spring football) tears on me. It's the heat more than anything."

"It makes it rough on the coaches. We have to do the same preparation for spring practice as we do for the fall, all the eligibility paperwork and everything else for such a short period of time. You still have to prepare. Once I get on the field, it's fine, except for the heat."

Now that the Florida High School Activities Association has altered its rule forbidding coaches to conduct practices during the offseason, Oviedo coach Jack Blanton believes spring football may no longer be as important to prepare players.

"Now we have the opportunity to use the summer months in a manner we didn't have before," said Blanton. "If we can work out with our players the way we want to during the summer, we won't need spring football. Right now, we do."

Blanton also pointed out that spring drills often have little impact on what may happen in the fall.

"We have three linebackers that we can't use this spring," Blanton explained. "Two are ineligible and another is going through rehabilitation for an injury. In the jamboree, we won't use any linebackers that we may use in the fall."

"Now, if we can work with those kids during summer, that's different. If the kids enjoy football and they want to practice, we'll enjoy working with them. If they want to play baseball or another sport, then they should. But at least there'll be the option."

Antacids helpful in treating hiatal hernia

DEAR DR. GOTT: I have a hiatal hernia. Do you have any information on the biofeedback techniques mentioned as a possible source of treatment?

DEAR READER: Biofeedback is a technique by which patients can be taught to control certain symptoms by focusing their attention through mental concentration.

However, biofeedback will not help the symptoms of gas and indigestion that may accompany hiatal hernia, a weakness where the esophagus joins the stomach. Because of this weakness, irritating stomach juices may back wash up into the esophagus, causing pain and flatulence.

In my experience, antacids (to neutralize gastric acid) and medicine, such as Tagamet or Zantac (to curtail the production of acid), are usually effective. Ask your doctor about this.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My feeling is that medicine is only based on the almighty dollar. Before, when the dollars rolled in from prescribed tests, physicians ran every possible one to determine a problem before prescribing or operating. Now, with HMOs, tests reduce the bottom-line year-end bonuses and are to be avoided at all costs. Better to presume what's wrong and treat the problem, hoping it works. If it doesn't, the patient is probably a hypochondriac anyway and hopefully will just go away. I think HMOs are a giant step backward. Your comments?

DEAR READER: Backward step or not, Health Maintenance Organizations are not only here to stay but will probably become more important in whatever health plan is ultimately adopted by Congress. Although some of your comments about testing vs. profits are correct, you need to realize that "the bottom line" is a primary concern for health planners. Everybody seems intent on designing a system that will cost less.

I can't predict what effect this will ultimately have on the medical system as a whole. Probably not a very positive one, because patients are going to have to learn to live with rationing of one kind or another.

WIN AT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder

The American Contract Bridge League tracks the number of masterpoints won by each of its members. In 1993, the greatest total was amassed by Jeff Meckstroth, who lives in Florida. He won 1,950 points, 88 more than second-placed Paul Soloway.

Meckstroth is one of only six players to have won the three world titles: Bermuda Bowl, Open Pairs and Team Olympiad. He has a natural talent for the game, which you can appreciate if you watch him play. He is speedy and practical, using his excellent table presence to ferret out the lie of the cards. Today's deal is classic Meckstroth. It occurred during the final of the 1988 World Team Olympiad. Meckstroth had to open one diamond because one club would have been strong and artificial. North's two clubs was fourth-suit forcing, asking for more information. East was happy to double to ask for a club lead.

When East played the club jack at trick one, Meckstroth ducked. Back came a low club to South's king.

With only five tricks on the side and clubs wide open, Meckstroth had to bring in four heart tricks. And if East had the club length, West rated to have the heart length. So declarer started with the heart jack, covered by the queen and king. Meckstroth cashed dummy's heart ace, carefully unblocking his eight. Next came three rounds of diamonds ending in the South hand. Then Meckstroth led the heart four and, after West played the six, finessed dummy's seven. It held and the contract was home (C11994, NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN).

HOROSCOPE

By Bernice Bede Osoi
YOUR BIRTHDAY
May 3, 1984

In the year ahead you might be more successful with endeavors you handle alone. If you feel a need to form an alliance, be sure it's with someone who can make a definite contribution.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Success is indicated today if you are truly self-reliant. If you aren't, persons upon whom you are depending for assistance may not be available and you won't get done that which you desired. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 4485, New York, N.Y. 10163.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Instead of doing what is expected of you today, there's a possibility you might concoct remarkable excuses as to why you shouldn't.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Occasionally you have been rather fortunate in taking calculated risks, but today this or other types of gambles could backfire. It may not be your day for getting something for nothing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Persons with whom you're involved today might be as adamant as you are about having their own way. Ties could produce a bad experience.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Problems could result today if you try to exceed your limitations and capabilities. You're well aware of your boundaries, so don't take on things you may not be able to manage.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Usually you have a pretty accurate assessment regarding the values and worth of things, but today could be an exception, so be careful.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You're a pretty good starter today, but there are indications you might run out of steam in the home stretch and leave unfatigued that which you began.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Instead of doing that which you know is best for you today, you might unduly concern yourself with the opinions of others and do what you think will please them.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) An acquaintance who understands your generous nature to a "T" and who has taken advantage of you previously may have you in his/her sights again today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) There is a possibility you might take competitive situations too seriously today and end up tripping over your own feet. Enjoy challenges for challenge sake and not as a matter of life or death.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Today you might find yourself in a development similar to one you didn't handle too well recently. Profit from past mistakes. Do not repeat them.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Someone who considers you a close friend has a secret he/she doesn't want you to know. If you get too nosy, it could cause this person to withdraw from you. Copyright 1994 NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.
