Trapped Crash Survivor Asks 'Why'

By Richard Whittaker
Herald Staff Writer

I just don't understand why the pilot took that 12-hour flight, said John Hardesty, 47, of Monticello West Ave. He was trapped with a broken back in the cockpit with the plane's dead pilot from the time of the crash of the Cessna 441 twin turboprop on late Thursday night until early Friday morning.

ORMC are planning on meeting today to discuss when they will operate on him.

The survivor of a Thursday night plane crash at the Orlando Sanford Regional Airport said he's confused as to the why of the delay for the wreckage of the aircraft to be discovered in a grassy field about 300 yards north of the runway.

Hardesty was pinned in the cockpit of the plane that was found at the northeast section of the airport Friday morning.

The crash killed pilot Emmet

Martin, 64, of Uniontown Pa. Martin was killed almost instantly after the crash, according to Semole County Medical Examiner Dr. Sarah Haggan. She performed an autopsy on Martin Saturday that indicated the pilot died of massive head injuries.

His (Martin's) skull was severely fractured, Haggan said. He most likely struck his head against the windshield or yoke steering device during the crash.

Martin was apparently attempting to land at the Sanford airport Thursday night after receiving clearance from air traffic controllers in Orlando at approximately 10:12 p.m.

The plane was never heard from again and not discovered until about 8:30 a.m. Friday in a grassy field next to a paved taxiway. The field runs parallel to State Road 40.

Hardesty said he could see the road with cars on it from the time the sun came up. "I just couldn't understand why the field was so spotlit," he Hardesty said.

Hardesty said he wasn't sure of exactly what happened because the crash happened in low visibility, but that he had known the airport as they made their approach. "There was some ground fog in the area," Hardesty said.

"I was trying to look out the window to see what was going on as we made the approach into the airport," Hardesty said. He added that they finally did see the runway before the crash.

Hardesty said he thinks "that's

Independent Probes Needed

Could Attorney General Edwin Meese be expected to conduct credible criminal investigations of two of his closest longtime associates, Michael K. Deaver and Lyn Nofziger? Indeed, when allegations of wrongdoing are raised against the attorney general himself—as occurred in 1984—is it reasonable to expect his subordinates in the Justice Department to carry out an unbiased probe?

In each of these cases, special prosecutors appointed by a panel of federal judges offered the only reliable means to resolve accusations of misconduct by high-ranking government officials. Yet, if the recent ruling by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia is upheld, the essential independence provided to special prosecutors by the 1978 Ethics in Government Act will vanish.

The appeals court, in a 2-to-1 ruling, declared the special-prosecutor law to be an unconstitutional breach of the separation of powers. The Constitution empowers the executive branch alone to enforce the law, thus making the appointment of prosecutors by judges invalid, according to the court's decision. Ultimately, this crucial constitutional question is likely to be settled by the Supreme Court.

Whether the ethics statute passes constitutional muster will remain uncertain until the high court considers it. But the practical requirement for special prosecutors who are fully insulated from the political pressures of the Justice Department and the White House is amply apparent.

Independent special prosecutors were created by Congress after the tumultuous "Saturday night massacre" by which Richard Nixon fired Archibald Cox, who had been named by the Justice Department to investigate Watergate. The Reagan administration, in urging the appeals court to strike down the 1978 law, argued that all prosecutors must come under the purview of the attorney general and the president.

Such a formulation would restore the circumstances that made earlier Justice Department probes of senior administration officials suspect. In most cases since 1978, investigations by special prosecutors have involved the officials involved, including Meese. Take away the independence established by the ethics act, however, and these exonerations would have lacked credibility in the minds of many.

Regardless of the Supreme Court's final determination on the matter, the compelling need for independent probes of top officials will continue. The only question is how to guarantee a prosecutor's independence in a manner that conforms to the Constitution's strictures.

Hopis Vs. Navajos Vs. U.S. Government

Transfixed by Gaza and the West Bank, most Americans ignore a land dispute in their own back yard. It is not a conflict with international implications. It affects fewer people. But its outcome will determine whether the United States betrays yet another Indian tribe.

From the time Spanish explorers stumbled upon the Hopis in what eventually became Arizona, that ancient tribe has watched its territory being steadily clipped away. Unfortunately, the retreat may not be over.

Some background is required to understand why. Between 1882 and 1934, the federal government expanded the nearby Navajo reservation several times until it surrounded the Hopis. Then, in 1962, a U.S. District Court reduced Hopi territory to one-fourth its former size, designating the remainder a "joint-use area" for both tribes.

Finally, a century's encroachment by the more numerous Navajos ended in 1974 with legislation dividing the joint-use area between the tribes and providing for relocation of any Indian living in the other tribe's territory.

Or at least the encroachment was supposed to end. The Hopis (and most Navajos) abided by the law, but a few thousand Navajos refused, ignoring relocation's legal deadline in 1986 and mounting a campaign to persuade Congress to overturn the 1974 law. Now a group of Navajos has filed suit against the federal government to again block relocation.

The lawsuit is revealing for the way it plays upon Americans' sentimental attitudes and ignorance concerning Indians. The plaintiffs charge, for example, that relocation violates the Navajo right to religious freedom because of their deep spiritual ties to the land.

Never mind that Hopi ties to the land go back even further, that they actually descend from the Anasazi, whose abandoned settlements dot the Four Corners region of the Southwest. Never mind, either, that the "ancient" Navajo lifestyle of sheepherding could not have existed before sheep themselves were introduced to the area by the Spanish. Such inconvenient facts don't square with the media campaign of the past few years, abetted by rock stars and actors, that portrays Navajos as mere victims sucked again into tragedy by the scheming white man.

The "documentary" film "Broken Rainbow," which won an Academy Award a couple of years ago, represents the height of this propaganda. It brims with claims that Navajos live in balance with the universe (whatever that means) that they have a special environmental ethic alien to Western culture (why then do they so overgraze their land?) and that the Hopi-Navajo dispute would melt away if white bureaucrats and greedy energy companies would leave the tribes alone (tell that to the Hopi tribal government).

Like every Indian tribe, the Navajos once suffered terribly at the hands of whites. How ironic, however, if guilt over this squalid history prompted Congress or the courts into betraying a rival tribe—one smaller, poorer and less polished at the sort of public relations and legal maneuvering that seem necessary to prevail in so many disputes these days.

Reagans Are Still Insulated

By Helen Thomas
UPI White House Reporter
WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Reagan is more insulated than ever in the White House with even the normal ration of picture taking sessions off-limits to reporters most of the time.

Even though the Boy Scouts and the White House had issued publicly releases that Nancy Reagan was to be awarded the Boy Scouts "Silver Buffalo" for her anti-drug crusade, only photographers were able to cover the event. Mrs. Reagan is the first first lady to receive the Boy Scout award.

One aide told reporters they were barred "because you wouldn't have asked questions about the Boy Scouts."

That is probably true since reporters would undoubtedly have tried to press him on events in Panama, the Middle East and Nicaragua for starters, not to mention the political campaign under way in the country.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater's response is usually that events in the Oval Office are "not appropriate" for coverage.

Reagan is obviously being protected by the small inner clique, usually known as the Palace Guard, who do not want him subjected to questions.

Some aides say that the first lady talks to White House chief of staff Howard Baker "every day" and wants him to guard the president against touchy questions. Her own aides deny she intervenes.

The president himself has his style down pat. He waves his arms and keeps moving, indicating that he would like to answer their questions if he could just hear them. He cups his ears, then points to his watch. "Got to get going," he says.

Somehow reporters are getting the message that the president is not going to be available for questioning in the coming weeks and months. He will make his speeches, travel a lot and dispense with the business of fielding questions that cannot be tossed off lightly.

The courage and indomitable spirit of White House press secretary Jim Brady is soon to be memorialized in a movie.

Hollywood is knocking on the door of Brady who was severely wounded in the head on March 30, 1981, when an attempt was made on the life of President Reagan.

Brady's comeback after several operations and relentless therapy is recorded in his biography "Thumbs Up," which the president read and liked, said Mollie Dickenson, author of the Brady book.

Candidates Specialize In Vagueness

By Jack Anderson
And Dale Van Atta
WASHINGTON—The presidential primaries have reminded us how candidates love to pontificate about the "issues." But they prefer to deal in generalities and keep silent about the specifics. They sometimes appear more concerned about the political fallout than the substance of national problems.

In front of a TV camera, they would rather make promises than offer solutions. They learn to speak in an anesthetic way. When they address disparate groups under the spotlight, they try to beam different signals to each of them without shorting out.

National politicians, especially those engaged in presidential politics, usually seek to weave enough ambiguity into their postures so that they would not appear to be hostile to any major constituency. If

JEFFREY HART

Bush's Problem

The vice president is far out in front in most polls and has put together a formidable organization. But there is a cloud on the horizon somewhat larger than a man's hand, and it is growing. Mr. Bush got a temporary lift by facing down Dan Rather, who is perceived as Mr. Macho himself, but the fact of the matter is that Bush has not devised a satisfactory way of dealing with his Iran problem.

His Iran problem is not with the substance of the arms sale to a terrorist nation. That's Reagan's problem. Bush's problem is with how he has handled his own account of his role in it. Watergate really was, as Nixon said, a "second class burglary" and a "caper." But because Nixon fumbled his own handling of the whole matter, it destroyed him. George Bush is not at that terminal stage, but he needs damage control and fast.

Here's a good formulation for Bush, free of charge. "Of course it is wrong to sell arms to terrorists or give ransom for hostages. But there are exceptions to every rule. We know that CIA station chief William Buckley was being held prisoner and tortured in Beirut. Mr. Buckley knew the identities of CIA agents and other assets throughout the Middle East. This was not an ordinary ransom operation, and we may have made a bad call, and plenty of objections were raised to it during our discussions. But, on balance, we felt that we had to try to get Buckley out. In fact, they killed him. We do not yet know what damage has been caused by whatever information they got from him."

With that kind of a statement, Bush could have put the issue to rest, but he just doesn't seem to see what the issue is. In the debate at Dartmouth College, he tried lamely to say that Iran was taking up too much room in the discussion that people aren't interested in it, and that we should turn to other matters. These comments were booed by the audience. Bush is tone deaf. People aren't all that interested in Iran, true, but they are certainly interested in George Bush, who is the Republican front runner and certainly would be the odds-on favorite to beat someone like Michael Dukakis.

But Bush has been impotently ducking. Against the accumulating documentary evidence, he says that he played only a marginal role, knew little about the whole thing, did not realize that Weinberger and Shultz were vehemently against the whole thing, had doubts about the Israeli role, felt that the matter could not stay covert, and on and on. Thus, from a man who is campaigning on the basis that he was a key figure in the Reagan administration, a man of experience who has spent seven years in training to be president, a man of administrative competence.

Early in his first term, President Reagan appointed George Bush "Crisis Manager." In part, this was a maneuver to cut then Secretary of State Al Haig down to size. But now George Bush has a political crisis on his hands, and he'd better show that he can manage it.

On the diversion of funds to the Nicaraguan contras, Bush surely knows more than he is saying. What he needs here is a flat out statement that while he did not know the nuts and bolts, the resistance fighters were at Valley Forge, cut off from arms and ammunition, were no sunshine soldiers or summer patriots, and that there would now be no Arias peace plan and no negotiations at all if the Contras had been sold down the river.

Delayed Divorce Hurts Too

By Rob Stein
UPI Science Writer

BOSTON (UPI)—When a marriage hits the skids, many parents decide to stay together until their kids go away to college, believing their children will be old enough by then to escape the trauma of their disintegrating family.

But a new study indicates that young adults are usually traumatized when they call home to find out that mom and dad don't have the same address anymore.

"The common wisdom is that it's not going to affect kids already out of the home," said Katherine Stone Kaufmann, a clinical social worker who conducted the study as part of her dissertation at Harvard University. "What I found out is that is not correct."

Kaufmann interviewed 15 male and 15 female college students ages 18 to 23 at private colleges in the Boston area in 1985 and 1986 and found most reacted strongly to the news that their parents were breaking up.

At least two-thirds of the students reported feelings of aloneness, anger, anxiety, pressure and sadness had increased as a result of their parents' separation.

Seventy-three percent of the women and more than one-third of the men in the study reported having trouble with their studies because of the trauma. Twenty percent of the students reported they increased their consumption of alcohol or drugs. Thirty-seven percent had sleeping problems. Twenty-seven percent had eating problems.

The average length of their parents' marriage was 23 years. All the parents had at least separated and in 90 percent of the cases at least one parent had filed for divorce. Half the students' parents were divorced.

All the students were already at school when the separation occurred. The average length of time they were at school before the separation was nine months.

"For some there was the sense that their parents had been waiting. Some kids were even told that. What happened in other instances was that when the kid went away to school the dynamics of the family changed. We know that changes. A lot of couples become very disenchant after their children leave. They realize they have been together for the children," she said.

Kaufmann also found that the parents' problems affected their children's views on such things as marriage and relationships at a time of their lives when they were often involved in relationships or thinking about getting married.

the candidates' views, has made a heroic effort to pin down the presidential contenders. For five months, this group has pleaded with them to answer 55 simple questions, which would reveal exactly where each candidate stands on the major issues.

Most candidates responded by sending over a blarney and oversimplified position papers. The Voters Caucus contacted some campaign staffs as many as 10 times in an attempt to separate each candidate's views from the blarney and establish a truth-in-politics standard.

In most cases, the group had to dig out the candidates' views painstakingly from their past utterances—culled from newspaper clippings, TV-radio scripts, congressional hearings and other public records.

There were exceptions. Sen. Paul

Simon completed the questionnaire and mailed it back promptly. Bruce Babbitt complained that the questions weren't specific enough; he was willing to spell out his views in even more exacting detail. And the Rev. Jesse Jackson, after a delay caused by a staff shift, answered all 55 questions with complete candor.

Meanwhile, the time has come to ask the presidential candidates again: "Where's the beef?" When this question was put to them, most of them served up Pabulum.

Judy Allison Gets Special Valentine's Day Gift

DAYTONA BEACH (UPI) — This wasn't exactly Sophie's Choice.

On the brink of her 28th wedding anniversary, Judy Allison stood at Daytona International Speedway Sunday surrounded by more than 100,000 people. As the Daytona 500 approached its conclusion, Judy was trying to remain calm and decide which driver to root for.

That's not easy when your husband is leading and your oldest son is up close and personal with Dad's back bumper. Experience prevailed as 50-year-old Bobby Allison crossed the finish line in a Buick 2 1-2 car lengths ahead of 26-year-old Davey Allison, in a Ford.

For the first time since 1960, when Lee Petty edged his son, Richard Petty, at Pittsburgh's Heidelberg Speedway, a father-son combination hit the exacta at a major NASCAR race. And guess who was holding the winning ticket?

"As long as Bobby was in the lead, I was pulling for him," said Judy prior to a long post-race smooch with her husband. "That was very

DAYTONA 500

Intensifying.

The Allisons were married on Feb. 20, 1960 and Davey was born a year and five days later. Bobby didn't capture his first Grand National triumph until the summer of '66, his 29th race.

"My Dad showed me all the hard parts of this business, but he also showed me the rewards," said Davey, whose Ford simply didn't have the engine power to surpass his father's car in the final laps. "When I was a kid, I used to dream about going to the wire against my father in a race. The only difference is that in my dream, he finished second."

Judy Allison said she came expecting to root for her husband. Her vocal cords were strained as Bobby led for 70 of the 200 laps, including the final 18.

"Bobby will probably still be out here when he's 95," she said. Asked whether it would have made a difference to her down the stretch if Davey had surpassed Bobby, Judy Allison didn't hesitate.

"Oh yes it would have," she said firmly. In easily taking NASCAR Rookie of the Year honors in 1987, Davey won twice on the circuit. When Bobby looked in his rear-view mirror on that final lap, he was too concerned with the kid on his tail to feel prideful.

"I saw the nose of Davey's car out of the corner of my eye, but I thought I had enough to beat him," said Bobby after his third Daytona 500 triumph, all since 1978. "It was really good being in front and racing against the best youngster to ever come along. To know that your own son is a special feeling hard to put into words."

When the race ended, Bobby rolled down his window a quarter-mile past the finish line and waved to his son. The Allisons had just made a killing. Bobby earned $202,940 while Davey came away with $113,760.

Not bad for three hours and 38 minutes behind the wheel.

Bartow's Wilson Finishes In 15th

By Carl Vanzura
Herald Motor Sports Writer

DAYTONA BEACH — Rick Wilson, of Bartow, ran a very smart race in Sunday's Daytona 500 as he managed to bring the Koda Film Oldsmobile into a respectable 15th place. After starting 13th in the field he had to keep out of trouble as the pack of cars he was running in at times were going four deep in the turns and down the back stretch.

By the 10th lap, Wilson had dropped down to 17th place as he was locked in a battle with Harry Gant, Bill Elliott and Dave Marcis. On the 20th lap, when Mark Martin blew and spilled oil on the track, Wilson ducked in the pits and took gas only. At that time, he had moved up to ninth place.

On the 36th lap, an unscheduled pit stop for two right side tires and gas put him one lap down as the leaders were able to pass him just as he got his car up to racing speed again. Three laps later, Connie Saylor crashed in the fourth turn and Wilson was able to pass the leaders as he raced back to the start-finish line to regain his lost lap.

On the restarts all day, Wilson would drop to the bottom of the track and better his position in the field. Wilson's short-track experience helped him on the many restarts he encountered Sunday.

By lap 122 he had moved up to ninth place and, by lap 165, the 34-year-old driver had moved up to eighth place. Five laps later, he was in seventh place which was the highest he ran all day.

Wilson had slightly slower pit stops than most of the top teams and is working on learning to work traffic better in preparation for hitting the big time on the Winston Cup circuit. If he continues to improve, it won't be long before he is seen in victory lane.

For his 15th place finish, Wilson will receive $23,165 and received 118 points in his quest for the point championship. After the race, Wilson said:

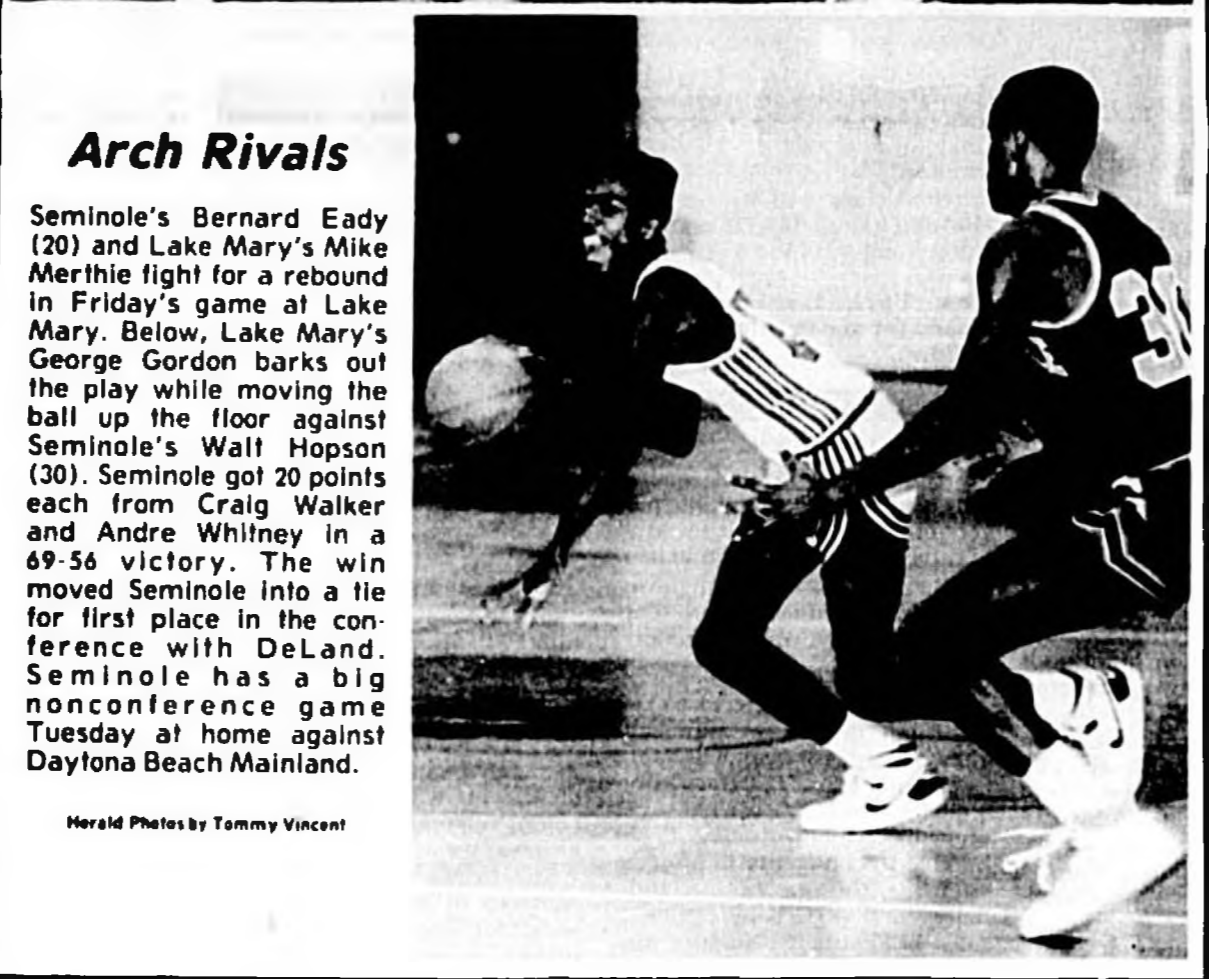

"We never could get running. The ran great and handled good, but the motor just didn't have the zing that it had Thursday (Twin 125s Qualifying race). We managed to get our lap back but really could not get running."

"At least we brought it back with all four wheels in the right direction," added Wilson. "But it was a good day for our backup car after crashing in practice earlier this week."

Another Florida-connected racer, Greg Sacks, did not fare nearly as well as Wilson. Sacks, who races for the Winter Park-based Dingman Brothers team, encountered early engine trouble and was forced out of the race after completing only 22 of the 200 laps. He ended up finishing 40th of 42 cars.

The total time elapsed during the race was three hours, 38 minutes and eight seconds. Bobby Allison's margin of victory over son Davey Allison was 2.5 car lengths.

There were a total of seven caution periods which took up a total of 43 laps. It was also a day of many different leaders as there were 26 lead changes among 12 drivers.

Seminole's Bernard Eady (20) and Lake Mary's Mike Merthie fight for a rebound in Friday's game at Lake Mary. Below, Lake Mary's George Gordon barks out the play while moving the ball up the floor against Seminole's Walt Hopson (30). Seminole got 20 points each from Craig Walker and Andre Whitney in a 69-56 victory. The win moved Seminole into a tie for first place in the conference with DeLand. Seminole has a big nonconference game Tuesday at home against Daytona Beach Mainland.

The accident sent metal and tires flying, and left Petty's Pontiac a mere shell. Despite the severity of the crash, Petty was not seriously hurt.

"We'll be back again strong next year," Yarbborough boldly predicted, but both his and Petty's age are becoming major factors. Petty has left his last three races after spins.

Bobby Allison had an accident similar to Petty's last year, but said he didn't think about it when informed of Sunday's wreck. He also said he does not think about how proud he is of his son, at least on the track.

"I think there's a real slim chance that I will retire before he does," Bobby joked. "When that happens, I can be proud of him. I'll be proud of him then."

Seven caution periods for a total of 43 laps, and the new 1-inch carburetor restrictor plates, made Allison's win the slowest Daytona 500 since 1960, when Junior Johnson won at a speed of 124.740 mph. Allison, who led seven times for 70 laps, earned $202,940 for the win, bringing his earnings for the week to $249,250.

The Allison-Allison finish was the first time a father and son had finished 1-2 in a Winston Cup race since Lee and Richard Petty did it once each in 1959 and 1960, and the first time ever in a 500-mile race. Mario and Michael Andretti have finished 1-2 several times on the Indy car circuit.

Applicant With Right Attitude Will Finish First In Job Race

DEAR ABBY: It is my job to interview applicants for employment in this rather large company. Recently we advertised for office help, and I was shocked at what came through the door. Some wore sloppy jeans, others wore stretch knit pants, hair in a ponytail, chewing gum, and their attitudes were anything but professional. I was appalled. Some were college graduates; others had vocational and business training.

Dear Abby

Please print something for the sake of those who really need employment but don't know the basic rules for dress and behavior when applying for a job. We hired a person with mediocre qualifications simply because she was well-mannered, presentable and had a positive attitude.

DISGUSTED IN KENTUCKY

DEAR DISGUSTED: Some time ago I published a piece that appeared in William Raspberry's column that addressed itself to this problem. He quoted Karen Rak, a high-school English teacher in Strongsville, Ohio, who wrote a letter (ostensibly from an employer) designed to let her youthful job seekers see themselves as they are seen.

I think this piece deserves all the exposure it can get. DEAR KID: Today you came to me for a job. From the look of your shoulders as you walked out, I suspect you've been turned down before, and maybe you believe by now that kids your age can't find jobs. "But I hired a teen-ager today."

appear reasonably willing. "Maybe jobs aren't as plentiful right now, but there are jobs. You may not believe it, but all around you employers are looking for young men and women smart enough to go after a job in the old-fashioned way."

"If you have even the vaguest idea of what I'm trying to say, let it show the next time you ask for a job. You will be head and shoulders above the rest."

"For both our sakes, get eager. Will you?"

THE BOSS"

DEAR ABBY: I live in a nice place, but my landlady drives me crazy. She comes into my apartment while I'm at work. I've asked her not to do that because I have a cat who runs out the door the minute it's opened. Also, I feel violated when I know she's been snooping around, which I'm sure she does.

Have you any suggestions?
WENDY IN WEST HOLLYWOOD

DEAR WENDY: Yes. Write a letter to your landlady and tell her that you have been made aware of your legal rights in California, when someone leases an apartment, according to Civil Code 1954, 24-hour notice must be given the tenant before anyone enters the apartment in his or her absence.

Tell your landlady that if your privacy is violated against you, you have the basis for a lawsuit. For current renter's laws in the other 49 states, contact your local fair housing organization.

Ken Ober Is 'Remote' Host

There are those who insist that no one is going to gain any useful knowledge from gluing oneself to MTV day in and day out.

That's not entirely true. One can, after all, win a new car, stereo system or Caribbean vacation by identifying music-video artists (as well as characters from "The Flintstones" or "Leave It to Beaver") on "Remote Control."

"Remote Control," which has run on MTV since December, is finding a loyal audience. The half-hour show is hosted by "a man who's spent his whole life watching TV, idolizing game-show hosts," according to Ken Ober, who plays Kenny, the show's host.

"In his basement, he creates his own game show. He makes the rules, does everything. 'Remote Control' is his baby."

As the "captain of the steamer," Ober gets to do pretty much what he pleases — so long as he fits in a few TV and music trivia questions along the way. Free-form to the max, the show's momentum usually depends on the personality of the contestants, who are chosen in talent searches on college campuses.

Video Beat Ethlic Ann Varc

often wished for a trick like that on "Jeopardy!?" and finds a new batch in the studio audience.

Ober, 30 — "for the next five years at least," as he puts it — was himself a television baby, not a far cry from the Kenny character he portrays on "Remote Control."

"I wouldn't just watch television," he says. "I got physically into the television as far as I could get."

"We had this big Motorola with legs, and I would lie underneath the television — get under it to about chest level and prop my head up at this weird angle. Especially for sporting events."

A graduate of the University of Massachusetts and recipient of a teaching credential in speech and drama, Ober still watches sports on a daily basis. And attends games whenever possible. Working stand-up in comedy clubs off-season, he arranges his summer schedule to ensure that he only plays in towns with a baseball team.

Hosting a game show was not the real-life Ken's dream. He was doing TV commercials when he auditioned for — and got — the MTV job.

"It's great," Ober enthuses. "It's the loudest and most exciting creative venture I've ever been involved in. Who else has a job where they can do whatever they want?"

Child's 'Hyperactivity' May Really Be Normal

DEAR DR. GOTT: My 2-year-old son is never still. He even moves in his sleep. He wakes up at 7 or 7:30, doesn't nap, and I can't get him to bed until midnight. People tell me he's hyperactive. What is hyperactivity and what can be done about it?

DEAR READER: The medical term "hyperactivity" is obsolete, having been replaced by "attention deficit disorder." ADD is a syndrome that usually affects children and adolescents of normal intelligence, and is marked by learning and behavior disabilities. It is classed as a nervous-system disorder and can be either mild or severe. In its characteristic form, it causes problems in language, motor skills, memory and vision. Short attention span, emotional instability and behavioral overactivity are part of the syndrome, which is treatable with medication.

Two-year-old children are almost always overactive by adult standards. Be careful that you don't label your son "hyperactive" on the basis of non-professional judgments. This would place a needless and unfortunate stigma on him. Better to discuss the situation with his pediatrician. There may be other causes for your son's constant activity. In fact, it may be normal. A doctor should examine your child and establish a diagnosis. If your son is normal, the pediatrician will be able to give you some tips about getting through this difficult period, known familiarly as "the terrible twos." If your son has ADD, the doctor can advise you about what course to take.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My nephew was accidentally shot with a .38 revolver when he was 8. He's had to have reconstructive surgery on his mouth and face but, miraculously, he suffered no brain damage. I've never seen you discuss guns in your column, but perhaps it's time for you to remind gun owners to lock up their weapons and ammunition.

DEAR READER: The necessity for gun owners to exercise extreme caution with their weapons (and to keep pistols, rifles and ammunition under lock and key) is so self-evident that it hardly needs reiteration.

Yet, as you point out, innocent people are shot every year because of carelessness. You are right: gun owners need constant reminding. A gun in the house should be unloaded, preferably field-stripped or locked up, and the ammunition stored in a safe, inaccessible location.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My son got his front tooth knocked out four months ago. The dentist put it back and it looks good. How long do we have to wait before we'll know if it takes?

DEAR READER: Teeth knocked out by an injury can often be put back in place — and survive. If your son's tooth looks good at four months, I think that he is home free.

WIN AT BRIDGE

By James Jacoby
West's takedown double helped North, whose hand was difficult to describe after his initial pass. By redoubling first, then raising hearts, he showed slightly more than 10 support points. South stretched when he invited game, but the final contract was good. Unfortunately declarer did not take full advantage of the information he had from the bidding.

After winning dummy's ace of clubs, declarer played a low diamond. West took the ace and continued clubs. South won the king, ruffed a club and then played a spade. West won the king and played another spade, won by dummy's queen. Declarer now played the nine of hearts. East played low and South went right up with the jack. When West showed out, it now became impossible for South to avoid the loss of two trump tricks.

Declarer should assume that West does not have more than four spades. (With five cards in the suit, he would have overcalled one spade.) If the assumption is correct, South is safe for his contract if he simply leads the heart queen from dummy instead of leading the nine of hearts and putting up his jack. Although East can win the heart ace and exit with a diamond, declarer can ruff, ruff his low spade with the trump nine and play a low heart from dummy to finesse against the 10-spot in the East hand.

HOROSCOPE

What The Day Will Bring...

By Bernice Bede Osol
YOUR BIRTHDAY
FEBRUARY 16, 1988

Try to be more of an originator than you have been in the past. Success will be achieved more rapidly if you initiate instead of vegetate.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Somewhere down the line you stepped on the toes of an individual who had an impact on your career. Today this person might try to retaliate. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Matchmaker set instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Today you might step out of character and look for the worst in others rather than searching out nobler qualities. This style doesn't suit you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) If you allow yourself to be drawn into an association at this time with people who don't measure up to your standards, you might get tainted in the process.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Someone who has not been cooperative in the past may be even more difficult than usual to deal with today. This relationship bears watching.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Try to accept others for what they are instead of trying to make them over in your own mold today. They are likely to resent being your clone.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Be very careful today not to stick your nose into situations where you're neither involved nor invited. You could create a problem you'll wish you hadn't.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Avoid rehashing an old, unresolved issue with your mate today. What was just simmering previously could turn into a real potboiler.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Your critical faculties are finely tuned today. However, don't abuse this asset by pointing out to others all of their little faults.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Be extra protective of your personal possessions today. If you have to park your car in an unfamiliar area, be sure it is properly secured.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Your household is not a military installation, so don't treat family members like your personal army today. If you do, there will be rebellion in the ranks.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Your pride and ego could be a trifle vulnerable today. It may take only a sideways glance from a detractor to reduce you to tears or anger.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Well-meaning friends could turn out to be poor financial counselors today. Size things up for yourself instead of relying too heavily on their recommendations.
