New Device Reveals Tung Fruit Moisture

GAINESVILLE, May 2—(Special)— Tung fruit producers and miller who extract the oil are benefiting from a new quick method of determining the moisture content of the fruits. The method, which involves the use of an electric apparatus called an ohmmeter, with an attachment for hooking into the fruit, was devised by Dr. R. S. Mc-Kinney, in charge of the U. S. Bureau of Agricultural Chemistry and Engineering's laboratory in Gainesville.

too moist, the fruits yield high on the percentages of oil.

The electric method, the bureau states, is quick, since all the operator has to do is to book up the instrument to a tung fruit, turn on the current and read the result on the indicator. The more moisture, the less resistance to the current. The usual procedure is to bore two parallel holes in a tung fruit about one inch apart and one-half inch deep, insert into them the two terminals of the meter until they are tight, and read the moisture percentage from a table of resistance.

"Til say this," he added. "I think maybe the airpiane is about due to put the submarine out of business. You'll remember what Kipling called the sub — "the one-eyed death." One-eye — the periscope. And one eye isn't a full complement. It's a bad handicap to have only one lamp. But a flyer's get eyes in every side of his head."

I was curious to learn if my admiral believes a force of any formidable consequence can be landed by air upon enemy soil and actually secupy it.

"Perhaps," he agreed, "if it's a very short flight, as from Denmark, to Horway of from Sicily to Worth Africs. A plane, leaded with men to its capacity, and towing a number of equally-leaded gifders, can acrow much distances pretty fast.

We have heard a good deal lately about the rapidly increasing sales of business corporations. New records are being established as first quarter incomes of many enterprises reach a new all time high. Prosperity, it would seem has indeed returned as the greatest business turnover in over a decade is reported.

General Motors Corporation, for instance, reveals that during the first quarter of this year its net sales reached the stupendous figure of $649,192,619, as compared with $458,150,566 for the same period last year. This represents an increase in business of over 41 percent and at first blush gives credence to the theory that business is prospering again.

Closer analysis of General Motors' figures, however, shows that despite this tremendous increase in sales, it actually made less money than it did a year ago, and considerably less money than it has made in prior peak years. Actually after paying taxes, General Motors' earnings were 3,6 percent less than last year, though before taxes they were 62 where the same period control of the same period contro

However, some informed London quarters asserted the anti-British Rashid Ali Beg, in power only a month after an army coup d'etat, had opened hostillities prematurely for his own good and for Germany's desires.

"It is never too late to betray British but it might be too carlly," an authoritative spokesman said, predicting that Iraq's army of about 28,000 troops could be quickly crushed by prompt British astlen aven if General Wavell is compelled to send more forces into the sountry.

Rashid Ali Beg, it was any, mised, is trying to hold the fort against the British until the Germans arrive, presumably by air from the adjoining French mandate of Syris where many Nari aerial landings might be made.

London said tarvely "The fighting continues."

From Iraq came a report that 26 British planes had been destroyed on the Habbaniyah airfield, and that British motorized detachments had falled is an attempt to occupy another airfield. Barlin appressed the deepent sympathy for Iraq, but gave no indication that any material aid had been or will be given. The German radio brought its heavy propagands artillery into play with ominous suggestions of a "major test between British imperialism and the entire Arab world."
