Brilliant Defense For N. Y. Yankees By The associated Press Re PAI' The thursder of Joe DiMaggio's big bat and Lou Gehrig's march along his consequity-game route just about drawn out any cheers that might be tossed in the direction of lesser lights of the New York Yankses.

No one ever thinks of the Yankses in terms of defense. Perhaps that is the rounn why Red Rolfe has been so completely overlooked this summer. Outsits of the little splash he made in helping the American leaguers down the National team in the annual all-star contest, little mention has been made of the excellent job the red-headed Dartmouth alumnus is doing at the hot corner for the Yankses.

If no one else appreciates Red, Manager Joe McCarthy does. McCarthy selected Rolfe for the all-star contest. No one was hap pier to see the red-head come through with a timely blow than was the Yankee manager.

Sanford is probably the most baseball conscious town in Florida and there is no youngster over the age of four hereabouts who can't tell you all the rules and who doesn't know all the expressions like bingle, bunt, bagger, muff, clout, tag, steal, and others which go along with

However, after careful research we have found that we have been suffering under delucions, that Americans really don't know their own game. Recently a couple of U. S. teams on tour in Germany played a contest before 100,000 persons—a crowd much bigger than is over present at our own World Series—and the following is a description of the game by one of the German reporters:

"Baseball began its successful career in the countries surrounding the Pacific Ocean. Both teams appeared with nine players. The team with red stockings attacked first. . . The thrower throws the ball at a certain height toward the catcher of his team against the hitters of the adverse team. The catcher must catch the ball if it is not captured by the wooden baton of the hitter. The defending team also had four men who guarded the rhombus and tackled runners, as well as three people who guarded

After three invalid throws, a player is caught and and if the ball is thrown into the rhombus before he finishes his run."

We respectfully submit this new interpretation of baseball to the umpires and the next time one of the players steps up to the plate and knocks the ball into the outer gardens with his wooden baton for a home run; we suggest that the umpire call it a successful negotiation of the inner rhombus. inner rhombus.

Optimistic Words

Persons, who would be pessimistic about the butlook of conditions in Florids, should take new courses in the words spoken by Karl Lehmann, secretary of the lake County Chamber of Commerce, as reported by the Tavares Clizen: "Florida has not seen such activity in the past ten years as is now evident in every part of the state."

In its own words the Tavares paper continues to name some of these activities which Mr. Lehmann mentioned:

"Fernandins has taken on the aspects of a boom community. Two paper pulp mills have been located there because of the deep water and the vast amount of timber adjacent. Ten million dollars will be spent in the construction of these two pulp mills.

"In the Lake Okeechobes section of the state there is new building and construction going on throughout the area, and a spirit of optimism permeates the people of that area because of the recent heavy investment, made by the Federal Government in the construction of dikes and canals to adequately drain these rich farm lands and to give nals to adequately train these rich states and protection in case of storms.
