Door closed at Everglades meetings

MIAMI - Gov. Lawton Chiles, who railed against his predecessor's administration for holding closed meetings to solve the Everglades pollution problem, is trying the technique himself today.

Chiles, whose aides note that court officials demand secrecy in some cases, is dispatching his chief environmental lieutenanting the drainage water. But once exposed to public scrutiny, the deal was decried as u nfair.

We astration agreed to a permanently binding gag order on scientists involved in negotiations aimed at defusing a federal lawsuit over the pollution, records show.

Chiles spokeswoman Julie Anbender said two state agencies agreed to the secret talks, and to muzzling the scientists. because federal prosecutors insisted on it.

The Department of Justice and U.S. Attorney Dexter Lehtinen in 1988 sued the state Department of Environmental Regulation and the South Florida Water Management District over Everglades pollution. South Florida taxpayers have paid more than $5 million to defend the case.

Jurors must now decide verdict

MIAMI - Jurors must now decide whether two Manuel Noriega co-defendants traded guns for drugs or if they face charges fabricated by U.S. officials under pressure to convict the deposed Panamanian leader.

Whatever their verdict, it is unlikely to clear up all the mystery surrounding the ill-fated March 1986 voyage of the luxury yacht Krill.

The case against Brian Davidow and William Saldarriaga -Noriega will be tried separately in June - is expected to go to the 12-member federal jury later Monday, barring more of the surprises that have marked the three-week trial.

The prosecution's star witness, Ramon Navarro, died in a car crash still under investigation. Another key government witness ended up testifying for the defense, and the judge had to order an extra blanket for Saldarriaga in Jail. Distractions aside, the case against Noriega and the two men in the Krill deal now hinges largely on the testimony one man, Amet Paredes, the son of a general elbowed out of power by Norlega in 1983.

Mud wrestle may have violated law

PENSACOLA - Women who wrestled outdoors at a St. Patrick's Day festival showed more than a wee bit of flesh, a newspaper reported Sunday.

William "McGuire" Martin, owner of McGuire's Irish Pub, the festival's host, denied any knowledge of topicss wrestling and said no one complained to him. Martin said he would have stopped the event had he known the women were topless.

A Pensacola News Journal reporter and photographer recorded the bare-breasted battle as about 300 people watched Saturday afternoon.

"We try and put on a wholesome program here, but sometimes these things happen." Martin said. "We've got over 40 off-duty policemen here, and all anybody would have to do is complain to a police officer and we would have shut it

State attempts to revive colorful species LONG KEY - You can find conchs nearly everywhere in the Florida Keys. Except where they belong.

Conchs are on the flag, the county seal, the high school football team (Fighting Conchs) and the menu of most restaurants. But the large marine snails virtually disappeared from Keys waters in the 1980s.

Growing up to a foot in length, the queen conch shell is cream-colored with a rosy pink interior, and is prized among shell collectors. The fighting conch is smaller, with a dark yellow-brown shell and a white spire.

Switching parties is a gamble

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON - When Buddy Roemer is embraced at the White House as the newest Republican governor, Democrata hope the memory of Bill Grant dampens the GOP celebration.

Familiar rhetoric, smiles and embraces will greet Roemer on Monday. No doubt, President Bush will tell the former Democrat how pleased he is that Roemer Joined the GOP.

Bush used a similar phrase when he welcomed Grant to the Republican Party in February 1989. "The nation, I think, benefits from this." Bush told the Florida congressman.

The voters thought otherwise. Overwhelmingly Democratic in registration. Grant's northern Florida district stuck with the party rather than the man. Democrat Pete Peterson whipped Grant by a margin of 57-43 last November.

For elected officials, switching parties is a gamble. In Roemer's case, it looks like his best chance to win a second term this fall.

He obviously hopes to Join such successful switchers as Sens. Phil Gramm of Texas, Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Donald Riegle of Michigan, and Reps. Andy Ireland of Florida and Bob Others did not fare as well in their party switches. Among them: Grant. Eugene Atkinson of Pennsylvania, Bob Martinez of Florida, or Sheffleld Nelson and Tommy Robinson of Arkansas.

Republicans have a big edge in the party switching sweepstakes. The Republican National Committee counts 236 public officials - some elected. some not - who have joined the GOP since Bush took office.

The Democrats offer a far more modest list - a state senator in North Carolina, two others in Hawaii, a Georgia mayor, a county assersor in Oklahoma, a city councilman in South Carolina.

What kind of candidate would the Desert Storm commander make?

By JILL LAWNENCE Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON - He's more than chubby. he's less than tactful and he doesn't have much hair to blow dry. But experts agree: Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf has the makings of an excellent political candidate.

"He exudes a strength and a warmth and comes across exceedingly well on television. He'd be a media consultant's dream," said Frank Greer, a Democratic ad-maker.

The charismatic Desert Storm commander said last week that he would not "slam the door" on a political career. No one seems to know if he's a Republican or a Democrat or even if he's registered at all, so both parties are free to spin electoral fantasies.

Florida Republicana are talking up Schwarzkopf as a possible 1992 challenger to Democratic Sen. Bob Graham.

Greer is thinking on a somewhat bigger scale. "Wouldn't it be great if the Democrats could recruit him to run against George

Bush?" he mused. "He instills confidence

That's what Americans want. They're looking for somebody to say, 'We can do it.'

Hardened professionals offer nothing but rave reviews of Schwarzkopf's tough-butcompassionate persona - a hybrid of Fozzy Bear and Gen. George Patton or a teddy bear and a grizzly bear, in the words of Barbara Bush and Life magazine, respectively.

If he doesn't look like Tom Brokaw, they say, so much the better.

"He's not too pretty and that's an advantage. He looks like everybody's grandfather, father or brother," said Democratic media consultant Bob Squier, whose clients include one Bob Graham of Florida.

Lyn Nofziger, former political director at the Reagan White House, said the bulky Schwarzkopf might want to lose a few pounds for a campaign - but not too many. "I'd rather he looked like a linebacker than an inside tackle," sald Nofziger.

And by the way, he went on, forget the enough of the high-calibre material from the public school system," Chang said. A big part of the problem is a poor public image of vocational education rooted in an ignorance of the high-tech skills needed for carpentry, electronics and other trades, he said.

In 1990 he went to work designing the school district's Blue Print program, a pilot program for vocational education at Seminole and Lyman high schools.

Chang said his work on the chamber education committee led him to the organization's legislative committee in 1989. ### FDIC reform

Two years ago, in the wake of the thrift debacle. Congress ordered the Treasury Department to study how to reform federal deposit insurance. But no system of insurance can adequately protect Americans' bank deposits and insulate taxpayers from another soaking unless banks are made safer. So the Treasury has come back with something bigger and more important: a proposal to restructure the banking system itself.

Banks play two vital roles in the economy. They provide transaction accounts through which much of the nation's commerce is carried out. And they act as financial intermediaries, loaning out depositors' savings for productive investments. For 50 years, the banking industry's dominance of those services has allowed it to prosper.

But over the past 20 years, competition has begun to erode the banks' hold on those services. Money-market mutual funds have drawn hundreds of billions of dollars of cheap deposits away from banks. Meanwhile, increased corporate borrowing in commercial paper markets has cost banks many of their biggest and least risky customers. As a result, a higher proportion of bank portfolios have been concentrated in riskier loans - in agriculture, commercial real estate, Third World nations — and more banks have failed.

To preserve the ability of the system and protect the deposit insurance fund, U.S. banks need to be more diversified and able to meet their new competitors on a level playing field, and they need to be better regulated. The Treasury's proposal goes far in both directions.

Banks would, for the first time, be allowed to open branches in other states. By permitting banks to operate more efficiently, this would bolster bank earnings and the industry's capital. More important, bigger banks operating over a wider left nory would be better able to withstand local economic downturns. In the oil patch recession of the mid-1980s, nine of the 10 largest banks in Texas failed, costing the deposit insurance fund billions. If Texas banks had also operated in California and the Northeast, boom areas at the time, they would have been less likely to fail.

Under the Treasury proposal, wellcapitalized banks also would be permitted. through separate affiliates, to go into insurance, mutual funds and securities underwriting. Banks could thus meet head-on the competition that has taken away some of their least risky business.

This new diversification would be accompanied by improved bank oversight. Regulators would be required to take action against banks whose capital began to fall below prescribed levels, including suspending dividends and requiring capital infusions. Banks with lower levels of capital also would have to pay higher premiums for deposit insurance.

Some members of Congress are already balking at many provisions of the Treasury proposal, incorrectly comparing it to the savings and loan deregulation of the early 1980s. That reform unwisely allowed thrifts to engage in riskier businesses while reducing regulation; by contrast the Treasury plan would allow banks to diversify their risks and would increase regulation. That's the right way to protect taxpayers from a repetition of the thrift disaster.

elling secrets dangerous business

A wise person once said, "No one tells a secret to only one person."

I guess that makes the word "secret" sort of a non-word, doesn't it? A word that, by definition, cancels itself out. Any "secret" I ever told, even when accompanied by strict instructions not to pass it on or else I would soon sleep with the fishes and have every trace of my existence wiped away by a secret government intelligence team, was passed on to at least 10 other people before 48 hours had elapsed. Personally, I think telling secrets is not only foolhardy, it's downright dangerous. Let's say your friend tells you a secret she swears she is only telling to you. Even though she may swear you're the only person privileged enough to hear this life-changing information, chances are, she will tell it to someone else, maybe several someone elses, before the urge to confess passes. So even if you don't tell it, one of those other people probably will, and the knowledge will eventually get back to her. And when it does (and you can take this to the bank), the only person she will remember having told it to will be you.

Now, don't get me wrong: I love to hear secrets as much as anyone. I love them from the first sweaty anticipation of knowing something no one else knows, through the rapture of actually hearing them, to the self-satisfied I-know-something-you-don't-know gloat that follows. But it just isn't a safe thing to do.

The real problem isn't in the moral intent to keep a secret, but in the function of the brain once the secret is told. Secrets are like Important items you put somewhere, then forget where you put them. While someone is telling us a secret, we think we'll never forget exactly how we're supposed to treat the information. And regarding the most titillating parts of it, the brain will continue to function perfectly. If foreign spies were to torture us and force us to repeat that

Telling secrets is foolhardy and dangerous. which we promised not to, we would be able to spew forth every lurid detail, word-for-word.

The brain, however, will have misfiled the peripheral details, especially the key sentence. "Don't tell this to anyone." The gray matter will not compute whether this information is the kind one is not supposed to tell anyone under any circumstances; or if it was passed along with qualifiers. Was one not supposed to tell this to anyone, or just not to a few key people? Is there a statute of limitations on this secret, or does one have to keep it forever?

Search as it might, the brain will not retrieve these vital, protective elements of the secret. All of the brain cells carrying these little annoying details will have sloughed themselves off just as if they were so many dead scalp cells falling onto the shoulder of one's navy blue suit.

Even more amazing than the rapid departure of these memory cells is the nonchalance with which secret-tellers can dismiss their treachery. If you catch them amack in the middle of telling the story that could ruin your marriage, destroy your career and send you to the pen, they'll brush it off with an, "Oh, was I not supposed to tell that? You didn't tell me not to tell, did you? You did? Well, sorry. I didn't mean to."

Democrats on GOP bandwagon

WASHINGTON - Before the parade passes by, the smart politician marches along for a while. That's what most Democrats are doing now, and never mind that they're marching to President Bush's Republican beat.

They figure that there's time to change it before the 1992 election campaign.

'We are a long way from that election, and the world turns over many, many times," said Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., in a morning-after television appraisal of Bush's triumphant victory report to Congress. The political world is not likely to turn enough to give the Democrats anything but the longest of long shots at the White House, Republican for all but one of the last six terms. The more realistic Democratic goal is defensive - to hold a Senate majority in what could be a difficult year, and to limit their House losses in the event of a Bush landslide.

That's the point of their counterattack against Republican congressional campaigners who are after Democrats for voting against the measure that authorized war with Iraq.

And that quarrel has not muted their applause for Bush, dramatized when House Speaker Thomas S. Foley offered "warmest congratulations on the brilliant victory of the Desert Storm operation" as he presented the president to a joint session of Congress

Wednesday night. Foley said later that it would be uphill for the Democrats in 1992, but "that's a matter for 20 months from now." Meanwhile, he said. Bush's record popularity — 90 percent approval in the polls — is an asset as the nation tries to deal with its problems at home.

I think it's wonderful that we've got a popular president," he said.

Sen. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn., exemplified the two-track Democratic strategy, applauding the president while assailing Republicans who try to make an issue of the war vote.

Gore, who voted to give Bush the authority he sought, said the president's joint session speech was a national celebration of victory. national unity and resolve. "And so we all wanted to celebrate with the president and, through the president, with the country," he said in an ABC-TV interview Thursday, one day after denouncing GOP political use of the prelude to the parades and patriotic rallies that will follow as American forces come home. Bush said every city and town should make the coming Fourth of July a special "holiday they'll never forget." Congress is considering $350,000 celebration at the Capitol on Memorial Day.

In a resolution overwhelmingly approved on Tuesday the House declared that it "acclaims the president for his decisive leadership, unerring judgment and sound decisions ..." on the Persian Gulf conflict.

The vote was 410 to 8 liberal Democrats. That was unusually effusive language, but then, to the victor belongs the flattery. And as Rep. William S. Broom-field, R-Mich., observed:

"He staked his presidency on the outcome. He won. America won and the world won."

The Republicans figure it's their win. too; some of them sounded miffed that Democrats were getting a piece of the celebration. Complaining at sparse Democratic attendance during the debate on the House resolution, Rep. Steve Gunderson, R-Wis., said the missing congressmen should yield their seats at the joint session to people who really want to say thank you to Bush.

The GOP offensive is concentrated on Democratic opposition to Bush policy in the Jan. 12 vote authorizing to the use of force to drive Iraq from Kuwait. Democratic leaders said the president should wait to see whether economic sanctions would suffice without war.

The measure passed the House 250 to 183: In the Senate the vote was 52 to 45. Only 86 Democrats voted for it in the House, 10 in the Republican tacticians already talk of recruiting Desert Storm veterans as challengers for Democratic House seats next year.

The war issue reinforces a problem that has plagued Democratic tickets for more than 20 years, an image of weakness on national defense. That has been an important element in GOP presidential successes; it had seemed likely to fade as the Cold War ebbed.

Fired whistleblower could be back soon

WASHINGTON - When Gordon Hamel was fired from an obscure federal agency last year, his boss gave the reason as sexual harassment and insubordination. But congressional investigators now think Hamel may have been fired because he blew the whistle on his agency.

Hamel's complaints about the goings on at the President's Commission on Executive Exchange have since sparked at least three federal investigations into the agency that are still pending. His firing was suspended, and he is now on leave awaiting the outcome of a personnel appeal. Whether Hamel is a conscientious whistleblower or a malcontent, as his bosses claim, is up to a federal personnel board to determine. But he has managed to stir up a virtually unknown agency that would have preferred to continue business as usual. The President's Commission on Executive Exchange places corporate executives in one-year government posts and sends federal bureaucrats to work for awhile in the private sector. President Bush and White managed to stir up a virtually unknown agency.

House Chief of Staff John Sununu have hailed the program for fostering better relations between government and business.

But not everyone shares that sentiment. We recently reported on some questionable placements by the agency — putting business people in key government jobs where they were in a position to benefit the companies and industries that had their loyalties. Partisan politics are also at work, favoring the companies that are big contributors to the

In 1989, commission director Betty Heltman hired Hamel as director of placement. He soon noticed problems, including what he saw as violations of federal spending laws, and some questionable job placements.

The commission was running an experimental program that allowed corporate executives to work for the government while being paid by their companies. Heitman liked the idea and pushed to make it a permanent arrangement, touting it as a savings to

But top government attorneys didn't see it that way. Our associate Scott Sleek obtained letters written last year by both the Justice Department and the Government Ethics Office. They said the program could allow private companies to use public office for inside information and personal gain, creating public mistrust. And the savings in salaries were only modest.

Yet Heitman continued to urge President Bush and other top officials to support the idea. She even tried to get White House Counsel C. Boyden Gray to take a private lawyer into his office under the program while still on the payroll of a law firm. Gray declined in writing, saying he was concerned "about having an outside entity — even a law firm - pay the salary of an individual working for the government."

Richard Seline, the commission's chief of staff, said the lawyer merely wanted some government experience and was willing to work without a salary for a few months.

By last July, Hamel had seen enough. He took several complaints about the commission to top government investigators. Among his charges were that employee records were shoddy and that one participating business, Pepsi Cola Co., had its $18,000 fee for participation in the program waived, improperly. Pepsi donated nearly $130,000 to Republican Party interests in the 1988 presidential election.

After Heitman found out that Hamel had gone over her head, she told the same investigators that he was disruptive.

Magee wins Nestle

ORLANDO — Andrew Magee couldn't care less about all the weather problems that disrupted and eventually shortened the Nestle Invitational.

"They have my name on the trophy, and that's all that matters," Magee said after he survived a series of delays — and a decision by Arnold Palmer — and became a winner for only the second time in a seven-season PGA Tour career.

Palmer, the 61-year-old host of this event, huddled with other tournament officials for hours Sunday before reluctantly deciding his flooded Bay Hill Club course was unplayable.

And, with the decision to abandon the fourth round, Magee became a 2-shot winner over Tom Sieckmann, who played the last 18 holes — spread over two days — in 70.

Steve Pate came on with a 68 and tied for third at 208 with Mark Calcavecchia. Mark O'Meara was next at 70-207 and Jay Don Blake followed at 70-208.

Minnesota takes down Miami

MINNEAPOLIS — Tony Campbell, who scored 24 points, made two free throws with 10.5 seconds left to lift Minnesota to a 90-87 victory

Randy Breuer added 17 points and 14 rebounds for the Timberwolves, who won their second straight game.

Miami got 30 points from Glen Rice, but the second-year forward was limited to two baskets in the fourth quarter.

Jackson out for year

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Bo Jackson has been told he will definitely not play this baseball season, a Kansas City television station, quoting an unnamed source, reported Sunday night.

"Bo Jackson's hip injury is much more serious than anyone first thought," WDAF-TV sports director Frank Boal said at the top of the 10 p.m. newscast.

"So serious, according to our source, the (Kansas City) Royals' doctors who examined Bo have already told Bo he will not play at all this season, and that all Bo's athletic activity, including football, should cease for the next 9-12 months."

Jackson is scheduled to be examined by another doctor Monday in Birmingham, Ala. The Royals, who are declining comment pending further medical tests, have scheduled a news conference for Tuesday.

SANFORD — It's been said that baseball players are smarter than football players because they know when to come in out of the rain. Softball players, on the other hand, are another breed altogether.

Tribe girls' eyes opened at Raines

From staff reports

JACKSONVILLE — Sometimes being a champion isn't all it's cracked up tp be.

The Seminole High School giris' track and field team is beginning to find that out. After four consecutive years as state champions, the Seminoles saw their run end last year. This past weekend in the Jacksonville-Raines Invitational, their first big meet of the 1991 season, the Tribe finished a disappointing 10th.

"I hope this is an eye-opener for the girls," said second-year coach Nate Perkins. "We have to get serious in practice."

Class 4A power Miami-Southridge won the meet with 81 points. Jacksonville-Ribault, the same team that ended Seminole's state title stretch in Class 3A, was second with 46 points. Seminole's team score was 13.

Andrea Brown accounted for most of the Tribe's points, registering a pair of nersonal brate white (116-0) and fourth in the shot put (35-11). Kecia Ward was second in the 440-yard dash for Seminole.

While it's not a catastrophe for Seminole not to win a meet, Perkins is concerned about his team's inability to score points. And it wasn't like the Tribe was short-handed.

"We took everybody that we could possibly take," said Perkins. "We took all the people that we think will score for us at the conference and district meets."

Normally, the Raines meet is a good way for the Seminoles to see how they stack up against the rest of the state. Now Perkins is anxiously waiting to see how the Tribe responds to the challenge they received in Jacksonville.

"I want to see how they respond to getting beat that badly," said Perkins, who added that it's been a long while since the Seminole girls finished that low in the team standings of a meet. "This was an attention-getter. The push starts now.

"We've won meets at nome. But we have to be able to compete all over the state. That's what people expect of us. And that's what we should expect of ourselves."

the discus.

Debate between fastpitch and slowpitch rages on

Failing to have anything new to discuss. let's turn our attention once again to the continuing debate of fastpitch vs. slowpitch softball for high school girls.

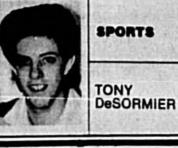

For the most part, Central Florida has been an eye in this storm, not taking any deliberate steps. No-one has stepped forward and said as much, but the collective mood seems to be a "wait and see" sort of thing.

Or at least, that was the case until a group of parents pushing for fastpitch softball filed a lawsuit against Orange County. In a move hardly anyone could have predicted. Orange County suddenly mandated an immediate changeover to fastpitch softball less than a month before the start of the 1991 season.

Aside from the obvious chaotic effect it had within Orange County, that kneejerk decision had an immediate impact in Seminole County. Because Orange County schools are supposed to play only fastpitch softball and Seminole County schools play slowpitch, Orange County schools aren't allowed to play Seminole County schools this season.

That resulted in some serious holes in the schedules of every Seminole County school. And because the decision came down so close to the start of the season, the scramble to fill those holes has been largely unsuccessful. For example, Seminole and Lake Brantley will play a doubleheader this Tuesday, the nightcap being the third non-tournament game between the two schools this season.

At the risk of downplaying the importance of those games, it's really beside the point in the larger scheme of things. The question now is, what does the future hold for Seminole County high school softball?

Without naming names, Seminole

County coaches are evenly divided on the issue, a couple preferring to play fastpitch, a couple preferring slowpitch and a couple not having any real preference. Of course, the way Orange County made its decision (without any substantial imput from the coaches) shows you just how important the opinion of the coaches can be. Hopefully, Seminole County wouldn't make the same mistake.

There are several ideologies at odds here, participation vs. competition, fan appeal vs. athletic aesthetics.

What's more important, the high schools offering a sport that is available (in terms of level of competition) to more girls or to offer a sport that would prepare them for the college game (which, at the four-year level, is fastpitch)?

Is the idea for the schools to play a sport that is more physically challenging to the athletes or a sport that is more attractive to fans? Personally. I'd like to see the switch made to fastpitch because it's easier to make the change from fastpitch to slowpitch. Don't laugh. There's some logic to it. While the physical demands on defense are much the same in slowpitch and fastpitch (with the exception of the pitchers and catchers), fastpitch requires much different athletic skills on offense. Where offense in slowpitch is a combination of patience and strength, fastpitch demands better hand-eye coordination and footspeed.

The logical progression would seem to dictate that a marginal fastpitch player would still make a competitive slowpitch player. Of course, there are exceptions, but you get the basic idea.

So, since fastpitch is the game predominantly played on the international level as well as the four-year collegiate level, it would also seem to make sense that the athletes would be better served if they're being taught that sport as they grow up, not once they're done growing up.

And even if only one percent of those young players go on to play at a four-year college, the other 99 percent have the skills necessary that would allow them to participate in the slowpitch game at the junior college or recreational levels.

North Carolina nets 11th straight berth in NCAA Sweet 16

Associated Press

For North Carolina, it's an annual affair. For Eastern Michigan, it could be a once-in-a-lifetime event.

Both teams advanced to the final 16 of the NCAA tournament on Sunday, setting up a showdown at the East Regional semifinals in East Rutherford.

Top-seeded North Carolina overpowered Villanova 84-69 to reach the Sweet 16 for the 11th straight year, while 12th-seeded Eastern Michigan edged Penn State 71-68 in overtime and moved into the regional semis for the first time.

"All the streak means is that I'm old and I've had a lot of good teams," said North Carolina coach Dean Smith.

While Smith took the victory in stride. Eastern Michigan's Marcus Kennedy was stunned by his team's achievement. 'It hasn't sunk in yet," he said. "I'll be sitting in my room tomorrow and somebody will come in and say, 'You're in the final 16.' That's when it might hit me.' North Carolina won't be satisfied unless it reaches the Final Four, a goal that has cluded the Tar Heels since winning the national title in 1982.

"I want to accomplish one more thing in life, and that's getting a regional championship," senior Rick Fox said. The North Carolina-Eastern Michigan game will be part of a doubleheader Friday at East Rutherford. N.J. Temple plays Oklahoma State in the other

The top-ranked Runnin' Rebels passed their toughest test of the season on Sunday beating Georgetown 62-54 to extend their winning streak to 43.

"It was a really tough game. one of the toughest games I can remember being in," said UNLV coach Jerry Tarkanian.

It was the second-closest game this season for UNLV, but this one was even more competitive than the Rebels' seven-point

Caladiums add color, dimension

Both color and dimension can be added to the home flower garden with the selective use of caladiums. Caladiums are tropical foliage plants and are Tropical American in origin, with a large portion of them coming from the Amazon basin in Brazil.

Two different types of caladiums are available. These include the fancy and lance leaves types. The most popular and familiar is the fancy leaved caladium. Large somewhat rounded leaves are characteristic of this type. The distinguishing characteristic of the lance leaved type is a narrow, elongated leaf. The length of the leaves is similar to the fancy leaved type but the plans are usually more dwarf in stature.

Caladiums add a cool look to the summer garden and are easy to grow, providing the gardener observes a few basic growth guidelines. Plant the caladium tuber in moderately rich wellprepared soil in a shaded or partly shaded location. Soils for caladiums should be porous and contain organic matter. These conditions insure acration, drainage, and sufficient waterholding capacity for proper growth. To obtain these solid conditions it is generally neces-with organic matter.

Sources of organic matter include coarse peat moss, well rotted manure or well rotted leaf

The caladium is rugged but it will not tolerate the full summer sun. For best results, plant caladiums in a semi-shaded location. From 40 to 60 percent shade is considered ideal. The fancy leaved varieties can be used in areas exposed to full sun for one to two hours per day. preferably in the cooler morning hours. Longer exposure destroys the chlorophyll in the leaves and limits growth. Overexposure to full sun may cause foliage bleaching or even burning of the thinner leaved varieties.

The caladium prefers a moist soil but not a soggy or poorly sary to amend our sandy soils drained one. Overwatering in decay of the fleshy tubers or roots. Mulching plants and maintaining a high relative humidity are beneficial in maintaining healthy, turgid foliage. If soils are allowed to dry, wilting occurs rapidly. Foliage loss is likely if plants remain wilted for any considerable length of time.

Caladiums respond to proper fertilization. A complete fertilizer should be mixed with the soil and organic matter at planting time. A minimum of two pounds of a garden fertilizer (8-8-8) per 100 square feet (2 teaspoons per square foot) is suggested. Thereafter, apply one pound of 8-8-8 fertilizer per 100 square feet [1 teaspoon per square foot) each month during the growing

Wait until all danger of frost is past to plant out in the open. Tubers should be planted two inches deep and about 18 inches apart. Pack the soil firmly around them when planting.

There is a wide choice of colors in selecting caladiums for the yard. The popular Candidium and White Christmas varieties are white with strongly contrasting green veins. These varieties brighten shaded areas when interspersed with white ext. 5556.

geraniums, white petunias. variegated vinca or hydrangea.

Popular pink or rose colored leaves appear on such varieties as Lord Derby, Pink Cloud, Kathleen, Rosebud, Carolyn Wharton and others. Crimson Wave has a showy crimson crinkled center. Red is found in the Blaze, John Peed, Red Flair and Freda Hemple varieties. Dark green veins and borders give added accent to the red leaves. Spangled Banner has red glowing leaves with pink spots. Caladiums are also easy to grow in a pot or tub for a shaded spot on the patio or in an entrance area. When in pots, the thirsty plant will call for extra watering due to the drying of the pot during the summer.

Whether in a container, in masses or as border material this popular summer tuber will provide color accent to the home garden all summer long for very little cost and upkeep.

Prevent tragedy: Put poison in its place

DEAR READERS: Spring is here - and so is National Poison Prevention Week. This year's theme is a reminder to parents: Put poisons in their place!

It is estimated that 2 million children will swallow a poison before the end of 1991. Polson centers report that 60 percent of the calls they receive are related to children 5 years of age and younger. A few simple precautions could prevent many Familiar containers of aspirin, acetaminophen and antihistamines are often kept in unlocked medicine cabinets. women's handbags or left standing on bedside tables or windowsills. Young children are curious and will cat or drink almost anything - even if it doesn't taste good.

USE ONLY CHILD. RESISTANT COVERS ON MEDICATIONS: Although this may pose an inconvenience to senior citizens, it could save a grandchild's life.

KNOW THE NAMES OF THE PLANTS IN YOUR YARD AND WHERE YOUR CHILD PLAYS: The bright-colored berries, leaves and flowers of a wide variety of common, colorful plants can be poisonous. A child learns with his eyes and ears and mouth!

GARDENING AND SPRING CLEANUP PRODUCTS: We should always be mindful of the extremely dangerous products we use to kill insects, rodents, snalls and weeds. These products are also toxic to humans and are capable of killing. Keep them well out of reach of children and use them with original containers, with the labels attached, and use them only as directed.

THE KITCHEN; THE BATHROOM AND THE GARAGE ARE THE MOST COMMON SITES OF AC-CIDENTAL POISONINGS:

common household products, such as carpet and upholstery cleaners, rust removers. furniture polish, oven cleaner, kerosene, paint temover and thinner, room deodorizer and mothballs, are poisonous. Never store household cleaning products in unlabeled soda bottles

WHEN POISONINGS HAPPEN: Call your local poison center's 24-hour hotline immediately, before following the first aid instructions printed on the product container, if your child becomes ill or exposed to a poisonous substance. Keep syrup of Ipecae on hand if there are young children in the home. But use it only when recommended by a trained health-care professional. And remember, the best antidote for poisonings is poison prevention. Parents and grandparents should be aware that every time they replace the child-resistant cap on a medicine bottle or household cleaner, or return a dangerous product to a safe place, they are saving the lies of their loved ones.

Extra heartbeats usually harmless

DEAR DR. GOTT: I'm a 46-year-old woman diagnosed with premature ventricular contractions. An echocardiogram revealed mitral valve prolapse. My doctor says the condition is not life-threatening, yet after hearing of the death of a young basketball player who suffered from arrhythmiss, I'm terrified this could happen to me. Now I refuse to even take a brisk walk. How dangerous is my condition?

DEAR READER: Premature ventricular contractions are extra heartbeats. They are exceedingly common and affect most people once in awhile. They are harmless and do not require treatment unless they are frequent or occur in long bursts that lead to lightheadedness, shortness of breath or other symptoms.

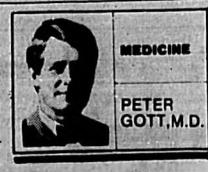

PVCs are not usually associated with mitral valve prolapse, a weakness of the mitral valve that causes a murmur (extra heart sound). Rather, patients with MVP are more prone to supraventricular tachycardia, prolonged episodes of rapid heart rate due to electrical impulses arising in cardiac tissue above the ventricles. This is usually treated with beta-blockers, such as Inderal.

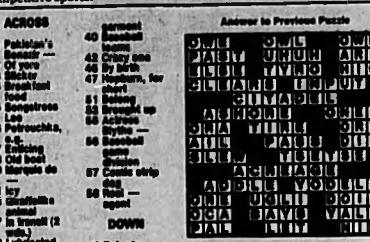

If your physician has pronounced you in good health and has judged your PVCs to be harmless, I believe you can relax and engage in normal activity. Brisk walking and other exercise is entirely appropriate for you.

Young athletes occasionally dle unexpectedly and tragically from heart irregularities. In most cases, such arrhythmias are caused by unsuspected cardiac abnormalities, especially disorders in the heart's conduction system. Death can occur during periods of strenuous physical activity. Fortunately, such devastating events are extremely rare, given the huge number of young people who engage in competitive sports.

Tournaments that are open to all comers and that offer generous cash prizes have been popular in Europe for many years. Recently, though, there has been an increase in the number of invitational events, restricted usually to 16 pairs. The Netherlands has been at the forefront of this move. In the middle of January, The Hague hosied the Car Gemini Pantlera to dummy's ace and a second World Top Tournament, won by diamond ruff brought down the Benito Garozzo and Billy Elsenberg, Garozzo, who had won 13 world titles for Italy, is now living in Palm Beach, Florida. Eisenberg, a former member of the Aces now living in Los Angeles, won five Bermuda Bowl titles for the United States in the 1970s.

hearts were agreed on, and South used Roman Key Card Blackwood to discover that his partner held all four aces but not the queen of hearts.

West led a deceptive 10 of diamonds. Garozzo put up dummy's ace and immediately ruffed a diamond. Declarer cashed the heart king, learning about the bad split, and ran the heart jack through West. A club king. Now declarer was in control. He played a trump to dummy's ace and led winning diamonds. West could ruff whenever he liked, but the dummy was high.

Garozzo was the only declarer to bid and make six hearts. Everyone else in the slam went down. The other declarer to bring home 12 tricks was in seven hearts.
