SMH Conversion Wins...Or Did It?

The local legislation which would permit the conversion of Seminole Memorial Hospital to a private, non-profit facility, passed both houses of the Florida Legislature this week.

But the legislation hasn't really passed both houses.

That may sound confusing, but the Seminole County Legislative delegation understands the situation perfectly.

"It's all a matter of procedure," said Charlotte Gibb, legislative aide of State Rep. Bobby Hattaway, D-Altamonte Springs.

According to Miss Gibb, it happened this way:

The legislation requested by the Seminole Memorial Hospital board of directors with the approval of the Seminole County Commission was sponsored as a Senate bill by State Sen. John Vogt, D-Coconut Creek, and Charles Maxwell Jr., R-Melbourne, and it passed the Senate Thursday.

On Friday, the identical legislation, sponsored by State Reps. Hattaway and Bobby Brantley, R-Longwood, as a separate House bill passed the House of Representatives Friday.

Even though the bills are identical, Miss Gibb said, either the Senate bill or the House bill will have to pass the other house. She said the chances are the Senate bill will get to the House floor before the House bill gets to the Senate floor because of differences in procedures and committees in the two houses.

Miss Gibb said it is likely the Senate bill will be passed by the House in about two weeks and three days later be sent to Gov. Bob Graham for his signature.

Since the governor doesn't usually sign local legislation, she said, the bill will probably become law without his signature 15 days after it is sent to the governor's office.

The hospital legislation, she said, should become law in late-May.

Because the certified Senate bill was not available to be acted upon by the House on Friday, the day designated in that body for local legislation, she said, Hattaway submitted the legislation for action there as a House bill.

Consent Day: It Only Means Votes

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (UPI) — Friday was "consent calendar day" in the Florida House — the day lawmakers can pass the local and non-controversial bills that don't touch much but which voters back home.

Consent day is when things are released on the floor and in the gallery. The lobbyists are off doing other things and Speaker Hyatt Brown turns the gavel over to Speaker Pro Tempore Richard Hodes. Sergeant-at-Arms Wayne Westmark hands out paychecks and lawmakers banter back and forth.

This Friday was no exception. Rep. Barry Kutan, D-Miami Beach, was moving about — no doubt lobbying for Gov. Bob Graham's tax relief bill. Rep. Elvin Martinez, D-Tampa, voted several times for Rep. George Sheldon, D-Tampa, who was out of the chamber.

A review of what House members did Friday shows they:

- Named the highway patrol station in Labland.
- Raised the reimbursement to the Boards of Supervisors in Palm Beach County from $100 per year to $200. (HB 118).
- The list goes on and on, and while most lawmakers agree these bills don't mean when attached up against workmen's compensation, they are often the ones that — as Rules Chairman Ralph Haben said — the people at home remember at election time.

the St. Lucie River between Stuart and the area of Palm City as Palm City Bridge.

—Voted to allow the county commissioners of Collier County to set up a Department of Animal Control to hire officers and issue tickets to errant pet owners. (HB 940).

—Raised the reimbursement to the Boards of Supervisors in Palm Beach County from $100 per year to $200. (HB 118).

Educational Bills Have Local Interest

By SHARON CARABO

Proposed legislation that would concentrate on finding and correcting the learning problems of children from kindergarten through the third grade is "one of the hottest going," says Roger Harris, assistant Superintendent of Finance.

Harris and other Seminole County school officials were polled Friday for their opinion of the various bills pending before the legislature.

The early childhood education bill is ready for floor debate. It would establish the Florida Primary Education Program to allocate $60 million over the next three years to pay for teachers and teacher aides to implement the program in the state's 67 counties.

"This is the thing that has been most interesting to me," Harris says. "We are quite aware of the problem in early childhood. We want to catch these kids while they're young."

Seminole County school board member Pat Wilson agrees with Harris and fully supports the bill. The bill would establish three classifications — preventive, developmental and enrichment. Students who need help would be placed in the preventive component, average students in the developmental area and fast learners in the enrichment category.

"For the past year, I have been looking for an alternative program," Mrs. Wilson said. "I have come to the conclusion that what we need is to take care of the children in kindergarten through third grade."

"Maybe then, we can save these kids and they won't destroy their self-image."

That's not the only bill Seminole County officials are interested in.

Gene Groves, executive director of the Seminole Education Association (SEA), says he favors a bill that would establish a sick leave bank for full-time school employees. Participation by school employees would be on a voluntary basis.

"If they had a catastrophe, they could draw days out of the sick leave bank to cover that time," Groves says.

Information on the status of bills can be obtained by calling the toll-free number: 800-943-1897.

Muriel Is Still On The Sofa

TIPTON, England (UPI) — It took five firemen, two ambulance attendants, two police constables and a doctor to lift Muriel Brown from the floor to a sofa.

That was Tuesday. Muriel is still on the sofa, refusing to move even though her doctor needs to take her to hospital for treatment for obesity.

700 pounds and proudly claims to be Britain's fattest woman. No one is sure because she can't be weighed on normal scales.

But Muriel, 61, refuses to go to hospital to lose weight.

"If I go in they wouldn't let me out or smother," she said. "There are my only pleasures in life, as I'm just getting it from all sides."

65-year-old mother's home last week when she fell and was unable to get up. The 10 men finally managed to get her on the sofa by lifting the corners of the carpet.

"I'm terribly worried," said Muriel's doctor, Dr. Ross Tindal. "I have done everything possible to persuade her to accept medical treatment but she refuses."

"No matter where you look somebody's after the trucker," said Youngblood. "We're getting it from all sides."

Health $ Decision Due

The Seminole County Commission expects to receive word from Tallahassee in about two weeks on whether its plan for $750,000 in state funding over a three-year period to beef up programs and to add 15 new staff members to the Seminole County Health Department has been approved.

County Commission Chairman Bob French, Commissioner Sandra Glenn, County Administrator Roger Neiswender and Jeff Eichberger, director of the county's office of Management, Analysis and Evaluation (OMAE) were in Tallahassee two days this week seeking assistance with the funding from the four-member local legislative delegation.

French said the new money would be used to beef up and correct deficiencies in some programs and create additional services at the health department.

"We wanted to know whether the state through the Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services (HRS) will be just mandating programs or will be participating in the funding for those programs," French said, noting HRS has identified areas which need additional health care.

He said local legislators said they will attempt to gain the additional funding after meetings were held with State Reps. Bobby Hattaway and Bobby Brantley and State Sen.

... waiting for word from Tallahassee on whether its plan for $750,000 in state funding over a three-year period to beef up programs and to add 15 new staff members to the Seminole County Health Department has been approved.

French said the county commission delegation also discussed with the local legislators a house bill, currently under consideration, which would call for joint votes of city and unincorporated area residents on annexations to include federal and state revenue sharing funds and gasoline tax money within the scope of the double taxation issue.

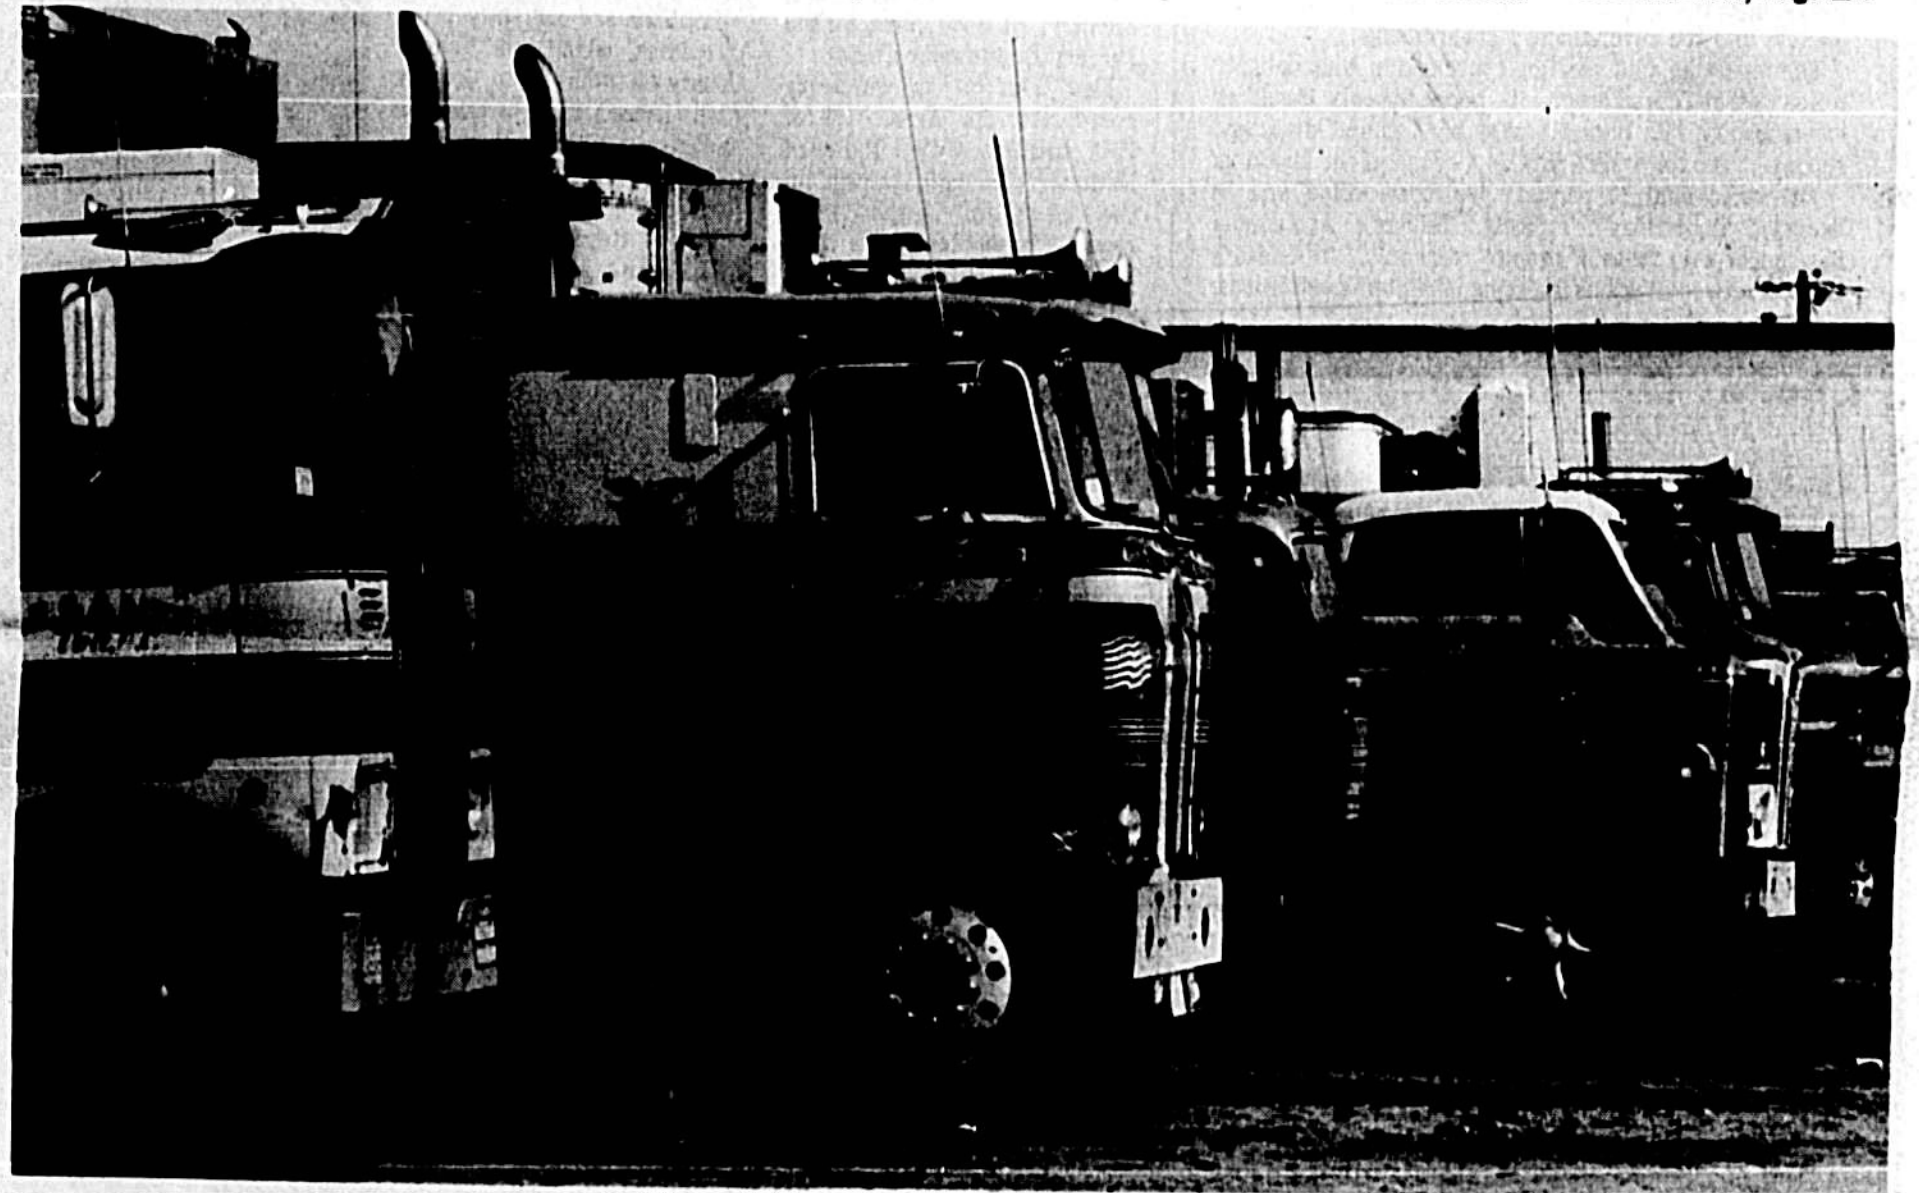

The county opposes both bills, French said, adding local legislators are sympathetic to the county's position. The annexation bill would provide inequities in that city voters could "out-vote" the dwellers in the unincorporated areas, French said.

Of the inclusion of the other tax funds in the double taxation issue, French said cities are already receiving funds from those same sources.

The areas of the health department where the money would be used, French said, would be in accordance with guidelines set jointly by HRS and the health department, as follows:

- Child care — "This area is the cause of the major discrepancy between HRS proposed standards and current performance. The six divisions under this program would reasonably, within the three-year time frame, be brought into state standards.
- Seminole County, according to statistics gathered by the state for the county commission, has the highest infant death rate in

For the past 14 years Mike Youngblood, 52, of Geneva has been able to escape the pressures of the modern day world by taking to the open road in his long-haul truck.

Now, however, Youngblood believes things are beginning to close in around him and he is being caught up like a rat in a trap by a horde of contemporary problems.

The constant increases in the price of fuel, endless rules from bureaucrats and law enforcement officials, hassles from a union not known for its benevolent attitude toward non-members and a sagging public become the greatest problem in his job. He said he has not had difficulty in obtaining gas, despite shortages, but price hikes of 10 cents a gallon every six months are hard to bear when his truck is only getting five miles to the gallon. Every time the price of gas goes up a penny, Youngblood's business says an extra 13 cents per hour to operate. And he says he cannot make up the difference by passing the cost to those he services because brokers usually set the hauling fee and they have not been as active as the oil companies in their fee hikes.

"Three years ago gas was 46 cents a gallon and when I hauled oranges from Florida to New York I got $1 per box. Now gas is in the mid 70s but I only get $1.25 now for the same box of oranges," he said.

Another hazard to the independent trucker is the strike by teamsters. When there is a strike, Youngblood says union militants have been known to threaten the independent truckers still on the road. He said he once had his windshield broken during a strike. He also said some of his fellow independents have had concrete blocks dropped on their moving trucks by persons on top of the highway overpasses.

"When it's not the public, the oil dealers or the teamsters making times hard for the independent trucker, it's the bureaucrats," says Youngblood.

"We've got to spend hours a day trying to keep up with all the rules and the paperwork. We even have to fill out a log every day telling how many hours a day we sleep," he said.

In addition, he said he and his wife have to obtain lease permits from many of the states they travel through, some of which expire each six months. They also must fill out tax forms for the federal government every three months.

Compounding the difficulty are the conflicting state laws. For example, Florida permits trucks on its highways to carry up to 80,000 pounds of freight. But the limits in other states is different. Mississippi's limit is only 73,000 pounds.

"You can go crazy figuring out a route without giving up part of your load," he said.

"You're an easy mark for a violation or a traffic ticket, too, because they know you'll be gone from the area by the time court date comes up so chances are you'll pay the fine."

The hardships have taken some of the romance out of the open road, but not enough so that the Youngbloods would consider another lifestyle. Said Youngblood: "It isn't all that it's cracked up to be, but we've never thought very long about quitting."

Government Must Show Way

Energy Secretary James Schlesinger is recommending that the federal government step up its support of solar energy. Significantly, his memo to President Carter on the subject was drafted before the Three Mile Island accident threw a shadow across the path of nuclear development.

From a policy standpoint the United States must continue to draw as much electrical power from nuclear plants as it feasibly can, within whatever new safety constraints may result from investigation of the problems at Three Mile Island.

The case for solar energy comes from a different direction — the rising price of oil and gas, the environmental penalties in producing and burning fossil fuels, and finally the fact that these fuels are a non-renewable resource while sunlight is an inexhaustible one.

The question for Mr. Carter and Congress is how to focus federal efforts in the solar energy field. How much pump-priming can the new solar technologies absorb? How much subsidy or incentive is needed for solar conversion in an energy market tied to oil prices which have entered a period of inexorable increase?

Various federal agencies have poured $1.5 billion into solar research, development and demonstration projects in the last five years, not counting $180 million for solar equipment in federal buildings and facilities. The level of research funding this year is $500 million.

So far the contribution of solar power to our total energy needs remains barely measurable. Mr. Schlesinger believes the nation could be deriving 12 per cent of its energy from the sun by the year 2000 if another $2.5 billion were put into tax incentives, loan guarantees and other programs going beyond those already in place.

More enthusiastic solar advocates think the sun could supply 25 per cent of our energy by then — if the government were to contribute more than $100 billion to cause.

The government must be careful to keep its legitimate interest in solar development from turning into a massive federal boon-doggie. Solar technology is developing so rapidly that it is hard to find a target for a "Manhattan Project" that could solve the problems involved in harnessing the sun to generate electricity in significant amounts.

The simpler, proven applications of solar energy — heating water in the home, for instance — hold the most immediate promise. The fact that sunshine is free, however, does not solve everything.

Household solar equipment can pay for itself in savings on utility bills, but only over a period of many years and if it is efficient and reliable enough to hold the use of a conventional back-up or supplementary heating system to a minimum.

What solar energy needs more than anything right now is more public familiarity and a more substantial record of what it can do. The federal role, quite apart from financing research or offering conversion incentives, can be significant in this respect.

Solar units have been installed or are planned for more than 500 federal buildings and installations around the country and opportunities will arise for more. As a landlord, Uncle Sam can provide a demonstration and assessment of solar's practical possibilities at the community level.

People will always buy a better mousetrap, but first they have to see it catch some mice.

Washington was just fine. How was everything around the home infrastructure?

Terry Bennett and his family are still trying to get their home in Lake Mary built... and city officials were kept telling them things aren't quite in order yet.

Bennett, you will remember, last fall pitched a 10 x 14 foot tent on an acre of land he bought just off Rindland Road in Emma. He, his wife, Beverly and their infant son, Brook, moved into the tent until they could get their home built.

But shortly after the family moved in, the Lake Mary City Council voted unanimously to declare the tent and the Bennett's canvas home had to pull up stakes. No less than six families came to the aid of the Bennetts and the trio took temporary quarters in the home of Mrs. Harley Stormes of Sanford.

Bennett's plan for his one-acre lot is to build a $60,000 home for $10,000 to $12,000 by using building materials that are used. Bennett began obtaining the materials he thought he would need and assembling them on his property.

Bennett said he was advised by city manager Phil Kulbes this week that all of the lumber used in his home must be certified as termite-free and lumber used for structural purposes must meet building standards.

Bennett said he will now have to delay work on the home until he can get the lumber certified.

Future housing developments in Florida may have to use raised utility lines rather than the underground electrical distribution lines that had been popular with builders and home-buyers in the last two decades.

The problem seems to be that the materials used in the underground lines did not stand up to the rigors of subterranean stress and Florida Power & Light Company officials say the number of underground cable defects is increasing.

There are now about three failures per 100 miles with one type of cable now in use.

State figures listing the incidence of violent crime in Florida reveal some chilling facts. For example, there is one murder in the sunshine state every 9.7 hours.

Forcible rapes occur at the rate of one every 2.9 hours and there is an aggravated assault every 18.1 minutes.

Forcible rapes occur at the rate of one every 2.9 hours and there is an aggravated assault every 18.1 minutes.

Pleasant dreams!

Future housing developments in Florida may have to use raised utility lines rather than the underground electrical distribution lines that had been popular with builders and home-buyers in the last two decades.

The problem seems to be that the materials used in the underground lines did not stand up to the rigors of subterranean stress and Florida Power & Light Company officials say the number of underground cable defects is increasing.

There are now about three failures per 100 miles with one type of cable now in use.

State figures listing the incidence of violent crime in Florida reveal some chilling facts. For example, there is one murder in the sunshine state every 9.7 hours.

Medal Of Honor Award A Sore Point Guadalcanal Hero Still Fighting For His Honors

By TOM TIEDE Special to the Herald WEST LISLIP, L.I. (NEA) — There are precious few times when a president of the United States has the opportunity to do something that, at once, is correct, judicial, decent and noncontroversial.

Jimmy Carter has recently been presented with the opportunity, but, apparently, he's letting it slip by. Let's begin in the beginning. The opportunity in question has its roots in World War II. The date was November 1, 1942, and the place was Guadalcanal in the Solomon Islands.

And that's how it began, 37 years ago. When officers hear of Casamento's survival, they properly consider giving him the Medal of Honor. Alas, in the midst of war, there was a snafu: no one could find the men Casamento had saved, and, without witnesses, the decoration for valor could not be awarded.

and fragmentation grenades. The enemy assault was so fierce that 27 or 30 Marines were quickly killed. Rather than retreat, however, Casamento stayed to protect two men who had been shot but who were still alive. He then initiated a quite extraordinary and single-handed defense against hundreds of advancing enemy troops.

To this day, no one knows exactly how long Casamento held off the Japanese forces. But in saving the lives of his comrades, he very nearly forfeited his own. When the enemy was driven back by an American rescue mission, Casamento was found slumped over his gun and suffering from at least 14 wounds.

Casamento was part of a 30-man unit that was attempting to establish a machine gun emplacement on the top of a ridge. The ridge overlooked coral formations occupied by Japanese restiers. When Casamento's unit began to dig in, the Japanese retaliated with automatic fire front of the White House. But still the award is not his. Last year Casamento's congressional representatives joined the protest. Rep. Tom Downey (D-N.Y.) and Sen Jacob Javits (R-N.Y.) sponsored bills which allowed President Carter to waive all restrictions and give Casamento the Medal of Honor. The bills passed and the president signed the legislation.

But so far Carter has refused to go further. He could award the medal anytime, and delight Congress, Casamento and many people who know the story, yet asks say he has no plans to do so. In fact, he's turned the matter back to the Navy Department, which continues to adhere to its original decision.

And there the matter stands. On square one, Tony Casamento says the long experience has been the saddest thing in his life. He believes the Marine Corps has abandoned him, the Navy has cheated him — and so has Jimmy Carter, well, "if the president of the United States can't help me, who can?"

Seniors Daily Cocktail Hour Has Some Merits

Ask me, "What do you need most to become a writer about aging?" I answer, "Get the most powerful magnifying glass you can find." Let's not blame the authors of studies about older Americans. They present their facts in a clear, readable and readily accessible way.

The fact lists with the printers. For some diabolical reason, all tables containing numbers tend to ramble. The other guy could go blind trying to read them. What saves us is the fact that some research reports need no columns of beneficial than the home's usual social gatherings. Only two drinks were allowed each day. Each resident would name his or her tipple. But if the senior opted for cocktails, he or she had to stay with cocktails daily, at least one time on the table, that's what he or she drank each day.

Before the experiment, the researchers measured each participant's physical, emotional, mental and emotional states. After each of the nine-week periods, the researchers made the measurements again.

The experimental cocktail hours seemed to prove Gordon Nash was right in saying, "Candy is dandy, but liquor is quicker." According to the researchers, moderate drinking offered "some breakthrough at ending the isolation syndrome" at the Boston senior home. "The parties at which cocktails were served were found to be superior to the other social gatherings," they reported. For this they needed an experiment?

And after the second nine-week period, the resident seniors spoke to each other more frequently as friends. In addition: — They became more active physically. — And so Jimmy Carter, well, "if the president of the United States can't help me, who can?"

They presented petitions to the directors of the facility. They cited the test's finding that the flippers pulse rates had decreased. The psychologists declared that "cardiac functions had improved as well."

Management yielded to the senior's demands. Cocktails at 2 p.m. are now a permanent part of the daily routine at this nursing-residential home for the elderly. These senior citizens are no dummies. They have learned that two cocktails a day are good for their health and happiness. Now more questions are bound to come up:

— Are two cocktails a day enough? Would three be better? How about four?

Parties & Politics Washington Delays Bids

The letting of bids for the county's emergency operations center (EOC) to be built at Five Points has been delayed for two weeks. During those two weeks architects for Architects Design Group of Winter Park will complete construction drawings for the second floor shell of the facility.

The delay wasn't brought about to give additional time for the construction drawings, but because documents from Seminole County listing the types of skills that will be needed on the project and the wages to be paid for each, according to federal guidelines, got lost somewhere in the U.S. Department of Labor offices in Washington, D.C.

County Commissioner Bill Kirchoff said the county's public works department this week to take notice of the work of some unknown persons or persons last weekend on Markham-Woods Road. He said someone went through the area, mutilating, destroying or removing virtually every traffic control sign on the road.

While there were complaints at various locations in the county concerning the inefficient way parts of the elections here for members of the Silver-Haired Legislature were held, statewide 94,126 senior citizens did not vote in the election and 40 senior senators and 118 senior legislators were chosen.

The Silver-Haired legislative session is scheduled for July 16-19 in Tallahassee. Its purpose is to develop an ongoing legislative educational program which will aid in determining the needs and priorities of senior citizens throughout the state.

Meanwhile, Seminole's State Rep. Bobby Hattaway, D-Altamonte Springs, has introduced a bill to eliminate the requirement that citizens accept a check must witness the signature or endorsement of the party presenting the check in order to establish identity as an element in a prima facie showing of intent under the state worthless check law.

He has also introduced a bill to permit any corporate officer to elect exemption from coverage under the unemployment compensation law. Another Hattaway bill would require Security to inspect carnival and amusement rides. The bill would cover "any ride which carries or conveys passengers along, around or over a fixed or restricted route or course for the purpose of giving its passengers amusement, pleasure, thrills or excitement."

A nine-member advisory board would be appointed to work with the department to establish rules and regulations.

Annexation Bill League Opposes Begs For Mercy

As indicated on this resolution, we feel the principles of the annexation commission, rather than the will of the people affected, does not provide adequate representation to those who were very vigorously protested their opposition to HB 402 to the members of the Central Florida Representation.

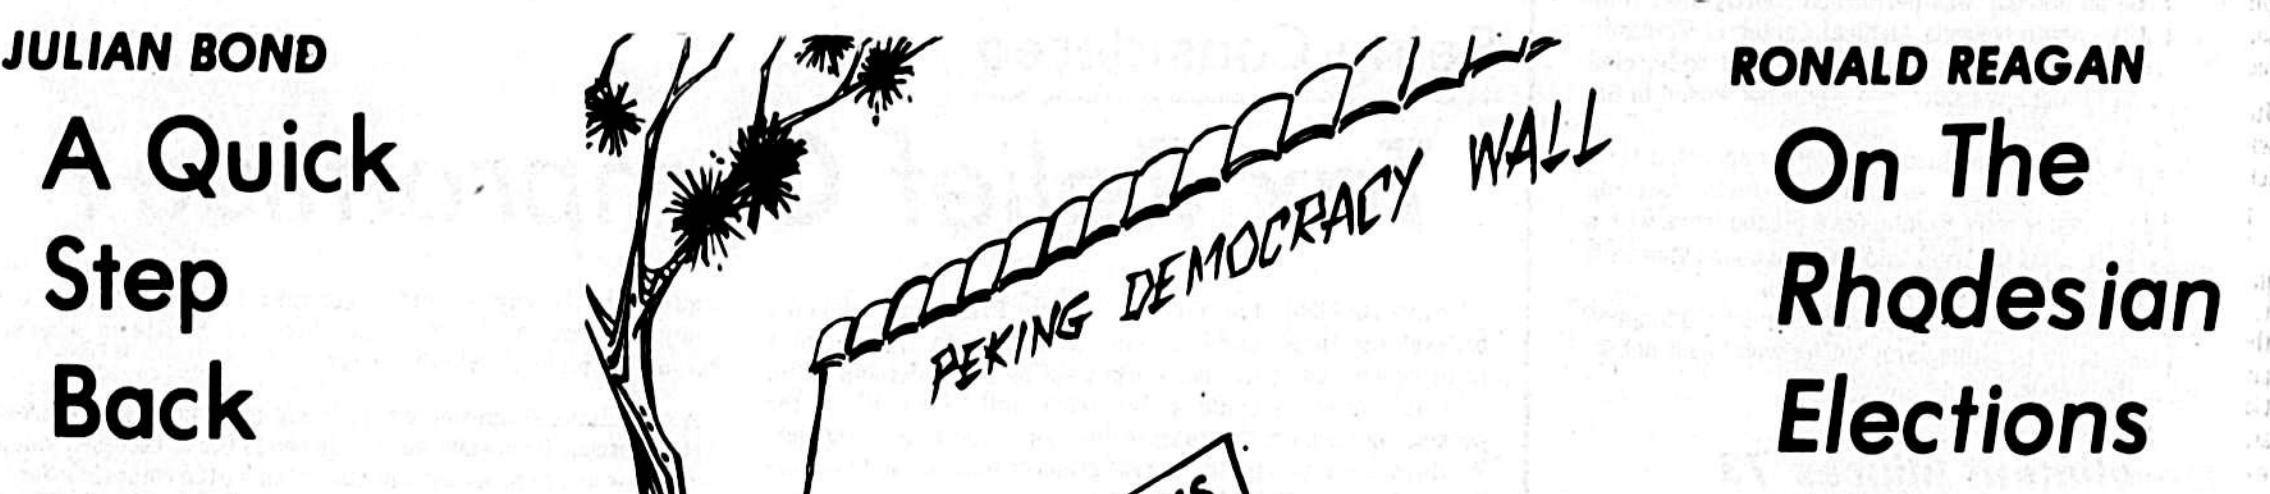

As a minister of the Gospel, having been interested in Mr. Spenklein's case for approximately two years, I am very familiar with the facts of his case, with all of its varied and numerous ramifications; and I can assure you Sir, that John Spenklein's case is just simply not one appropriate for execution.

Furthermore, the composition of the annexation commission, neither elected nor responsive to the will of the people affected, does not provide adequate representation to those who were very vigorously protested their opposition to HB 402 to the members of the Central Florida Representation.

How could the homeowners in an area perceived by a city as a desirable tax acquisition possibly influence any outcome against such odds? An effective bill should be equally fair to those affected by its ramifications without regard to political purposes.

I would further point out that when municipalities provide services beyond their corporate limits, they then levy a significant surcharge, as allowed by law, which more than offsets the taxes that those homeowners would pay as city residents.

Should this Bill also be passed by the Senate and become law, the effect throughout the state and particularly in Central Florida could be disastrous. Please contact your Senators and urge them to promptly oppose HB 402. Sincerely, Harry B. Baker, Sr. 1 Ash Worth

JULIAN BOND A Quick Step Back

Good news at last. Race and racism are "exaggerated too much," according to one of the authors of a new survey of 600 New Yorkers. I can't wait to discover the real reason why unemployment among blacks is higher now than at any other time since the Depression, or why black jobless figures are 2.3 times higher than those for whites.

It isn't race, say Louis Henri Bolce III and Susan H. Gray. In an article in The Public Interest, a New York quarterly for liberals, conservatives, the Fordham University scholars conclude that "old line black leaders" and that old devil, the media, are responsible for the great gap between black and white income, education, employment and life expectancy.

What is at work here is a continuation of the erasure of race as a matter of policy concern. Exactly why is it that the proportion of black families that are poor increased between 1979 and 1978 in every region of the country (except the Southeast)? Tell the 200,000 black unemployed female heads-of-households why their unemployment rate is twice as high as among white women who head their families. Black male household heads will want an answer to the same question.

I'm personally, and probably so, eager to learn why my life expectancy diminished by a year in the decade of the Sixties, and I'm positive every other American black man wants to know why, too. "The black population cannot now be described as affluent or poor, educated or uneducated, skilled or unskilled, but all of these," Bolce and Gray write.

But they don't explain why college-educated black men still earn 15 percent less than white Joe Colleges do. I'm still not sure why the black 13 percent of the population has only 2.8 percent of the doctors, or what mysterious nonracial force keeps median income for blacks well below the figures for whites.

No survey has told me yet why black women are three times as likely to die in childbirth as white women are, or why black women are 50 percent of the women who earn their living by taking care of others' homes. Why do one-third of all blacks live below the poverty line? Why does death occur by cardiovascular disease, hypertension, influenza, pneumonia and diabetes more often in black than white people?

The survey quoted above is part of a campaign of containment, a quick step backward, a repudiation of the relevance of race in determining who gets how much of what from whom. Its sponsors are those who supported Alan Bakke and now Brian Weber. They assert as much sympathy for racial integration and social justice in the selfish Serenities as they did the generous Sixties. But not right now, and never at their expense.

They have created an impossible phenomenon — reverse discrimination — the result, I assume, of having 13 percent of the population force 87 percent to live in the worst homes and work at the worst jobs. It's very confusing. It's the reason for all this bad luck isn't race, I wish someone would quickly conduct a study and let me know what it is.

JACK ANDERSON Alaskan Deal Is Still A Snowy Picture

WASHINGTON — Two months ago we reported confidential government findings that an Alaskan native development corporation had tried to entice Uncle Sam out of $60 million in valuable public land by setting up phantom natives to claim the land. Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., chairman of the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, asked the corporation, Konig Inc., to respond to our column. The job was undertaken by Konig's Washington representative, Edward Weisberg. Udall and Weisberg are no strangers to each other. Both have been around Washington a long time. Weisberg was the Interior Department's miler-when Udall's brother, Stewart, was interior secretary in the 1960s. Stewart Udall is now a special counsel with Weisberg's law firm.

U.S. SENATOR HERMAN TALMADGE

Few In Senate Are Censured

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In 1860, Sen. Henry Foote of Mississippi was speaking on the Senate floor when Sen. Thomas Benton of Missouri began using "threatening language toward his colleague without gaining the floor."

Senate historians say Benton then made "menacing gestures" at Foote and finally "advanced toward him." As Benton moved forward, Foote backed away and "drew a pistol from his pocket and cocked it."

The combatants were separated before the loaded revolver was fired, but the Senate immediately ordered an investigation by a special committee. The two ultimately were censured by their colleagues for the "threatened violence," with a sharp reprimand for carrying a weapon on the Senate floor.

Things were quiet for 32 years. But on Feb. 22, 1962, the Senate turned its attention to a bill relating to the Virgin Islands and Sen. Benjamin Tamm made a disparaging remark about his fellow South Carolinian, Sen. John McLaurin.

McLaurin rushed into the chamber and on a point of personal privilege announced, "The statement is a willful, malicious and deliberate lie."

Tamm then jumped forward and struck McLaurin in the face, and they fought until separated by an assistant doorkeeper and several senators," documents say.

After a two-hour executive session, they were declared in contempt of the Senate and the matter referred to a committee that ultimately recommended they be censured. The Senate agreed on a 54-12 vote.

Foote, Benton, McLaurin and Tamm are members of one of the smallest clubs in the history of the Senate: senators censured by their colleagues.

They are in the company of such individuals as Benjamin Tappan of Ohio, censured in 1864 for furnishing confidential documents to a newspaper; and Hiram Bingham of Connecticut who in 1893 led a lobbyist into an executive committee session on a bill he was interested in.

More recently, Sen. Joseph McCarthy of Wisconsin, whose hunt for Communists in the government drew widespread criticism in the Senate, was censured in 1954 for "non-cooperation and abuse" of two Senate committees attempting to investigate him.

Ethics Panel: Least Sought-After Job

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., looked particularly grim as he sat down next to chairman Adlai Stevenson, D-Ill., on the Senate Ethics Committee. Hatfield had won — by default — the least sought-after job in the Senate.

"We weary veterans of service on this committee welcome you," Stevenson told Hatfield and the two other new committee members, Sens. Quentin Burdick, D-N.D., and Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

"I have some ambivalence about being here today," Hatfield replied, recalling that 12 years earlier as a freshman his first committee appointments were "one I picked and two that I was assigned."

"After 12 years, I find myself in the same position," Hatfield said. "I do not seek this position on this committee. I even resisted it."

"It was with great reluctance that I agreed to serve on this committee," added Helms. "I find myself in a very awkward position with respect to the distinguished senator from Georgia. The bottom line is I will do the best I can under the circumstances."

"The distinguished senator from Georgia" is Herman Talmadge, powerful Democratic chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, who is facing five serious charges of financial wrongdoing brought by the committee.

Less than two weeks before trial-like hearings of Talmadge were to begin, Helms, Burdick and Hatfield found themselves drafted to join Stevenson, Sen. Herman Schmitt, R-N.M., and Sen. Robert Morgan, D-N.C., on the ethics panel.

"They are the six 'judges' who will hear the evidence. If they decide Talmadge is guilty of financial wrongdoing, they can recommend his censure or expulsion to the Senate as a whole. Their decision could leave Talmadge's political career in shambles."

"But there is a more subtle problem facing other senators, something not openly discussed but nonetheless on all minds — the jealousy guarded Senate power structure being threatened by the Talmadge case."

Talmadge has been a member 23 years of a body in which sheer longevity translates into incredible power — not just one man's power but the power of the friends he makes up the seniority ladder.

Among Talmadge's best Senate friends are Russell Long, D-La., chairman of the Finance Committee, and John Stennis, D-Miss., chairman of the Armed Services Committee.

Together, the three men hold power cards that might be trumped by the Senate leadership — perhaps by the president — but not without a bloody fight.

Individually, each is a force to be reckoned with, but if the ethics committee determines Talmadge is guilty and sends his case to the Senate for discipline, every senator will be taking on all three powerful men.

Long and Stennis already have quietly lined up behind Talmadge, with their first power play coming on the question of who would fill the three committee vacancies.

"Without speaking a word on the Senate floor, they pushed Democratic Leader Robert Byrd and Republican Leader Howard Baker into a corner and won a major victory for Talmadge by forcing appointment of three veteran senators who know Talmadge well — not three

"I didn't think it would be fair because the central issue in this investigation of Herman Talmadge is his credibility," Long said. "A man serves here for 23 years and all these men who served here with him for all these years know he's never deceived or lied to us in 23 years."

"The question is do you believe what Talmadge tells you or what (Talmadge's chief accuser Daniel) Minchew tells you? It's one man's word against the other, and it seems to me if you've known somebody anywhere from 12 to 20 years, you would tend to give the person the benefit of the doubt to a greater degree than would people who have only known the man for a few months and never had occasion to know whether he was a man of his word or not."

Prevented — or perhaps saved — from sitting on the committee were junior Sens. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., David Durenberger, R-Minn., and David Pryor, D-Ark.

"It's a chore that nobody wants, much less even asks for," Byrd observed in naming the new members.

"Nobody seeks this assignment, nobody wants it. It's a little like serving on a jury. I realize it's a thankless task ... there are no points to be made back home, no news headlines one can send back to his home state in news releases."

"When the ethics committee gets down to the hard questions in the Talmadge case, four of the six must agree for any action to be taken. The panel is the only one in the Senate split evenly along party lines.

But party lines should be less a factor in decision-making on this lousy case than the background, philosophy and character of the members.

Stevenson, a quiet, academic and hard-working Senate liberal, is perhaps best suited to the job although he makes no secret of his distaste for being "truant officer" of the Senate. Stevenson, 48, has served on the Senate since 1970 and has announced he will not seek reelection next year.

He is a highly principled man who has labored for two years, leading the committee through a probe of Korean influence on Capitol Hill and more recently, the financial investigations of Talmadge and former Sen. Edward Brooke, R-Mass.

Sources close to the committee say Stevenson and his vice chairman, Schmitt, have been unwavering in their dedication to the chamber's ethics code despite the difficulty of the assignments.

"I do not seek this position on this committee. I even resisted it."

Junior members who lack allegiance and obligations. Baker and Byrd had searched months to find three veterans willing to serve on the committee and got nothing but rejections. In desperation, they had turned to three first-termers with a total of three years of experience among them.

But Stennis and Long threatened a floor fight over waiving the committee rules to allow for the appointment of junior members. With the Easter recess hours away, Byrd and Baker had no choice but to yield: the youngsters were dropped and more senior members pressed into service.

Long said naming Senate newcomers to the ethics panel would have been "prejudicial" to Talmadge.

Senate historians say Benton then made "menacing gestures" at Foote and finally "advanced toward him." As Benton moved forward, Foote backed away and "drew a pistol from his pocket and cocked it."

The combatants were separated before the loaded revolver was fired, but the Senate immediately ordered an investigation by a special committee. The two ultimately were censured by their colleagues for the "threatened violence," with a sharp reprimand for carrying a weapon on the Senate floor.

McLaurin rushed into the chamber and on a point of personal privilege announced, "The statement is a willful, malicious and deliberate lie."

Tamm then jumped forward and struck McLaurin in the face, and they fought until separated by an assistant doorkeeper and several senators," documents say.

After a two-hour executive session, they were declared in contempt of the Senate and the matter referred to a committee that ultimately recommended they be censured. The Senate agreed on a 54-12 vote.

Foote, Benton, McLaurin and Tamm are members of one of the smallest clubs in the history of the Senate: senators censured by their colleagues.

They are in the company of such individuals as Benjamin Tappan of Ohio, censured in 1864 for furnishing confidential documents to a newspaper; and Hiram Bingham of Connecticut who in 1893 led a lobbyist into an executive committee session on a bill he was interested in.

More recently, Sen. Joseph McCarthy of Wisconsin, whose hunt for Communists in the government drew widespread criticism in the Senate, was censured in 1954 for "non-cooperation and abuse" of two Senate committees attempting to investigate him.

Kingman Keys Cubs Win

By United Press International Dave Kingman says he's changed, but it's hard to figure whether it's for the better or worse.

"I've changed," Kingman announced Friday, after his eighth career grand slam powered the Chicago Cubs to a 5-1 victory over Montreal Friday.

Shrinking Strike Zone?

By United Press International Pitchers are beginning to feel the frustrations of working with the substitute umpires. Call it the year of "the incredible shrinking strike zone."

Mike Flanagan of the Baltimore Orioles complained bitterly the other day at Yankee Stadium about not being able to throw a curve because the umpires wouldn't call it a strike.

She opened the $100,000 LPGA tournament at Rio Pinar Country Club with a 6-under 27, the lowest score in eight years.

"Yesterday was like taking a walk in the park," Meisterlin said. "Today I feel like an emotional wreck. I feel lucky to be leading. I don't want to give it up. I enjoy this spot. I want to be in it more often."

Her glory may be short-lived, warned Sandra Post. She, Sandra Palmer and Hollie Stacy were close behind at 15-under 143.

Seventy-four golfers made the cut at 10-over 136. "Expect scores to improve once people learn when to lay back," said Post.

Chillemi said she had no intention of letting up. "I hope to play smart golf the next two days, but I'll be aggressive. I won't change my strategy."

Kammerl made a 69 in the second round with four birdie putts in 32, 29, 29 and 30. "I'm hitting it fairly well, but I'm not confident," she said.

Q: What do you mean by the "hardship draft" in pro basketball? — T.W., Cincinnati

The hardship draft, in my view, is a misnomer. There is no longer such a thing. It is more accurately called an "undergraduate draft" in which anybody with eligibility remaining can petition the NBA to be drafted.

Q: Can you explain what they mean by a "mist" on punt or kickoff returns? Is it any different than a miss? — Ken Brown, Alameda, Calif.

A "mist," as outlined to the NFL's officials by Norm Schacter, the retired headmaster who keeps tabs on them during the season, is actually touches his hands and is a free ball for the receiver.

Q: Who holds these major league records: slugging percentage, on-base percentage, number of double plays produced in a single game by a brystone combination? — George M. Sullivan, Oak Ridge, Tenn.

None other than the immortal George Herman Ruth holds the major league baseball career slugging record, with a percentage of .690.

Q: In your opinion, do you think it is right for fans to vote for the major league all-stars? Bill Cahn, Waynesburg, Pa.

No. It leads too easily to abuse when fans in one city lobby excessively for their own baseball stars, as happened in Cincinnati a few years ago.

Q: Here is an old one for you. In regard to the New York Yankees and wife-swapping, New York Yankee pitcher Sparky Lyle and a guy named Peterson — I am sure you know the Peterson — please put a little light on this subject. — Charlie Skeels, Covington, Ky.

"You're dropping up almost ancient history — and you've got your facts wrong. It was a cause celebre at the time — 1973 — when left-handers Fritz Peterson and Mike Ketchik and their respective spouses got romantically intertwined. Keep Sparky out of it. The Ketchik ball of a dick won't be in the news. Sparky Lyle and a guy named Peterson — I am sure you know the Peterson — please put a little light on this subject."

Watson started his second round at the La Costa Country Club with a 1-shot lead over Ron Streck and finished it with a 3-stroke bulge over Bruce Latta, who also had a second-round 66.

Latta, who was a Masters' contender until the final day when he was shot a 74, said he wasn't emotionally drained from Augusta this week.

"I don't live or die with the Masters or the other majors," Latta pointed out. "I just enjoy every year."

Olderman Well, Since You Asked...

Q: Would you compare Greg Nettles and Brooks Robinson and tell me who is the better player? — Doug Hayward, Mattson, Ill.

The third base play of Nettles, the Yankees' hot corner man, was so sensational in the last World Series that it finally called attention to his glove work, though he has in the majors a full decade.

Q: I hope that you can help me. I have looked everywhere. I would like to know the address of Lanny Wadkins. I am his third cousin by marriage on my father's side. — Blair Mosemelter, Roseburg, Ore.

Q: I recently heard Freeman Williams' name mentioned when talking about all-time top scorers in the college ranks. What is Freeman Williams doing in basketball now? What were his college statistics (total points, average per game, high game)? — Rick Bowen, Independence, Ky.

Williams finished his career at Portland State last year as the second highest scorer in the history of major college basketball.

Q: Are there dress codes for college football and basketball coaches? I've noticed, for instance, that big football coaches all seem to dress poorly. — Michael Morgan, Oklahoma City, Okla.

No dress codes. Come to think of it, they do dress poorly, especially the gridiron brethren. Some of the basketball gentry manage to get pretty spiffy. Either way, I don't think it matters. Most of us come out to see the players.

Q: Why did Sandy Koufax choose to come back to baseball after all those years of retirement? How long was he away? — N.F., Ventura, Calif.

"I'd accept Sandy's explanation that you can't duck away from civilization forever. At the age of 43, it was time he rejoined the main stream — as a Florida pitching coach for the Los Angeles Dodgers this spring — especially since the inflationary spiral had also cut into his holdings severely. Sandy was 30 and had just won all career high of 27 games in 1965 when he was a television commentator, but that wasn't his bag.

Eddie Hart's Olympic-Style Return

ALAMEDA, Calif. (NEA) — Maybe you read the report. Eddie Hart, age 30, was the star of the recent Brotherhood Games in Berkeley, Calif., winning the 100-meter sprint in 10.3 seconds.

It was chasing the impossible dream. Sprinters, to start with, are such fragile beings emotionally. They live in a world where one-hundredth of a second means the difference between winning and also-ran.

At the National Sports Festival in Colorado Springs last July, Eddie whipped down the straightaway to win the 100 meters in 10.07 seconds.

So Eddie kept running. Europe last fall. The indoor circuit — he ran in four meets, won one and finished second in Houston McTeer in 6.17 for 60

After the Munich debacle, Maggard convinced him over dinner that night that he had to get on with his life. That meant finishing up work for his degree. He is now only a thesis away from his master's degree.

"I still experience a lot of soreness," he says as a concession to age, "so I lay off more than I used to. My recovery phase is longer. "But the running is still a challenge. It's a greater sensation now than when I was a kid. I'm not in it for the fun. The fun is when you win."

Reality tempers his thinking. Obviously, the 1980 Olympics in Moscow are in his sights. But they are still a year away — and eight years after Munich. That's a long time between runs at world supremacy.

"I don't want to commit myself to making the Olympic team yet," he says, "but becoming more and more positive about trying for Moscow."

By United Press International Darryl Dawkins and Julius Erving just took off and ran from San Antonio Friday night.

Dawkins, who scored 23 points in the first half to lead the Kings to victory over the Suns and Erving, who scored 19 points and seven rebounds in the fourth period and Erving had a game-high 39 points in leading the Spurs to a 125-115 victory over the Supra.

The 4-foot-11 Dawkins was a tower of strength in the fourth quarter. With Philadelphia leading, 107-106, and 3:32 to go in the final period, Erving outscored the Supra, 10-4, to give Philadelphia a decisive 117-109 advantage with 1:28 to play.

DEAR ABBY: Because I read in your column about that toll-free number, which allows runaway kids to call and let their parents know they are OK, I re-established contact with my parents, went home and had the most wonderful Easter in my life. (I'm a 19-year-old boy who dropped out of school and hit the road 15 months ago.) Will you please run that item again, Abby?

DEAR LUCKY: With pleasure: Runaways, dial 800-331-6946. An operator will telephone your parents.

In And Around Longwood Lyman Group Nixes Roast Iguana On Mexican Jaunt

Viva Mexico! This thought must have gone through the minds of Sharon and Karen Stanley, Angela McCoy and Sandy Seagraves as they enjoyed a visit to our friends "south of the border."

The girls were among 16 students and parents from Lyman High School who participated in this cultural "field trip," coordinated by Lyman Spanish teacher, Mrs. Eugenia Rodriguez.

"We spent five nights in Mexico City and one night in Tuxco," said Sandy. "One thing the girls all agreed upon was the uniqueness of the Indians along the roadside to Tuxco."

"Everywhere we looked, there were Indians with iguanas perched upon their heads. All we had to do was choose one and they cooked it for us," added Karen.

"I graduated from Seminole Community College on Apr. 19 with an Associates of Arts degree. It was a long time coming but it was worth every hour, tear and bead of perspiration put into it. I would like to congratulate all the Spring '79 graduates. I would like to especially thank John for being so supportive of me during the last two and one-half years. I would also like to thank the academy... oh, wrong speech. Maybe some day I'll get to see it!"

In addition to her teaching duties at the college Bettye is a full-time employee of the Seminole County's Sheriff's Department.

She is a former president of the General Henry Shelton Sanford Museum-Library, past president of Seminole Mutual Concert Association and the wife of Dr. Robert W. Smith.

Grove Marion, stopped by my desk. Dora, who is 76, is as radiant as any young bride. Dora was too busy globe-trotting in an exciting career to get married, she says.

Her bridegroom, Paul Marion, 91, has got to be a lucky man. Vivacious Dora says she has already begun remodeling their home.

And how are the newlyweds getting along? "Very good," Dora beamed shyly. A friend accompanying Dora, Mary Roy laughed and kidded. "They're like two teen-agers. It's sickening."

Is your home not as clean as you would like it to be? If so, call Crickets. They have a team of women trained before they ever go on a job, who clean your house from top to bottom. If it's not clean, it's not Crickets. And it only takes a day. And Windows! They thoroughly wash the screens, the window frames and the glass door tracks. Spring is a season of warm sunshine, fields of flowers, lingering twilight and gentle breezes. Spring is tender and romantic. It is a wonderful time to be alive.
This delightful season draws us like a magnet to the magic world of the great outdoors. Flowers begin to bloom in all their radiance, and birds sing once more. There's an assurance in the air itself of fresh, new hope.
Spring is also a time when we're more receptive to thoughts of the eternal mystery of life. It's a special time to marvel at God's supreme plan for each of us and for all His creation.
This week discover a new sense of wonder of the divine power that sends us a bright, new spring year after year... in church.

Is Illness Punishment?

QUESTION: I have been sick for a long time. I cannot seem to make contact with God when I pray for healing. Is God punishing me for my sin?
ANSWER: If God punished with sickness, we would all be sick. "For all (absolutely no exceptions) have sinned and come short of the glory of God" (Romans 3:23). God does not bring about sickness. He comes and we are replaced with hope and the faith that God wanted to send and COULD help me. I saw him walk without any aid whatever, and I knew the removal of the "God-is-punishing-me" myth had been my full recovery.

How Television Is Different From Life

NEW YORK (UPI) — How do you end a telephone conversation? Goodbye? Bye-bye? So long? People in television shows don't have to say and hang up. When TV characters make appointments — say for dinner or a date — the time is never, ever specified unless some plot element is involved. A real person might say, 'Want to see a movie at 7?' To which the reply might be, 'Can we make it 8?'

HELP FOR HOMEMAKERS

DEAR HELOISE: My grandfather suggested this suggestion. At the plant where he works, they take a blow dryer and blow it across a bumper sticker or decal. It pulls off easily without scraping the surface. But don't get it too hot, and pull it easily. When I came home I saw this stamp that I wanted (I collect stamps), so I did what my grandpa did and it worked just like the bumper sticker and decal! I was surprised!

Sincerely,
Kendall Litchfield

DEAR HELOISE: I enjoy your column and hints

DEAR HELOISE: I have two little boys I take with me in the car. As always, when emptying a bottle of dish detergent (it still has a lot of soap), I fill the bottle three-fourths full of water and add one-fourth cup of household ammonia. This is great for cleaning bathroom tile, or the ring around the tub, or finger marks on walls.

Mrs. Batson

papers, pop cans, etc. seem to accumulate. I have tried paper bags and plastic wastebasket liners (too expensive). So I save all my bread wrappers and put them in the glove compartment. They take up very little space and yet hold a lot of trash. Inexpensive too!

Raising The Drinking Age Gains Some Local Support

By DONNA EYTES
Herald Staff Writer

Proposed legislation to raise the legal drinking age in Florida to 21 or 21 was met today with widespread support from local educators, law enforcement officials and legislators.

"Alcoholism is one of the greatest problems in high school today," said Don Reynolds, principal at Seminole High School, endorsing legislation proposed by Rep. Frank Carlton, D-Orlando and co-sponsored by Rep. Bobby Hattaway, D-Altamonte Springs, and Rep. Bobby Brantley, R-Longwood, to raise the legal drinking age from 18 to 21.

The legislation is to be considered in subcommittee today, said Hattaway. "A serious problem exists in our schools. The Legislature made a serious problem a few years ago by lowering the drinking age to 18 years old," he said.

"As of a week ago there were 50 co-sponsors on the bill and it will be quickly passed by the House when it comes out of committee," Hattaway said. He said the committee is considering today not only the bill but is co-sponsoring but two others as well to raise the drinking age to 21.

"When the law was 18 years old, people started drinking at 18," said Reynolds. "When the legal age was dropped to 18, they started drinking at 15," he said. "Eighteen-year-olds are not mature enough to be drinking. Some get into trouble before they are really mature enough to make decisions.

"The use of alcohol is a greater problem among young people than marijuana and drugs at my school," Reynolds said.

Rep. Carlton, says teen-age alcoholism has grown rampant since Florida lowered the drinking age from 21 to 18 six years ago. There are statistics, she says, showing that youthful drinking is responsible for poor school grades, increasing juvenile crime, and a soaring number of highway deaths.

Carlton Henley, principal at Lyman High School in Longwood is "most definitely in favor" of raising the legal drinking age. "We have noticed a decided amount of evidence of alcohol being available to young people. Soon after the legal drinking age was changed to 18, we noticed beer cans and bottles in the parking lot at school much more than ever before."

"Seniors are allowed to leave the campus at lunchtime and it is more difficult for vendors to tell the difference between 17 and 18-year-olds unless they are going to ask everyone for identification," Henley said.

Dan Pelham, principal at Sanford Middle School, said students of middle-school age are also drinking. "I've heard counselors talk about the availability of liquor in the homes. The young people believe getting 'baked out on alcohol' will not have the long term repercussions nor will those repercussions be as great as with some drugs," Pelham said.

"I cannot agree completely with the analogy at the time the legal drinking age was lowered that if an 18-year-old is old enough to go to war, he should be old enough to drink. I cannot go along with that," Pelham said.

Meanwhile, Seminole County Chief Deputy Sheriff Duane Harrell believes raising the legal drinking age is a good move.

"I think it ought to be raised. I feel it should never have been lowered. I see no useful purpose in it," Harrell said, adding, however, as a law enforcement officer he hasn't really detected that much of a change in the drinking problem at the county level.

Sanford Police Chief Ben Butler said in many cases the young people are getting the liquor from their own homes.

"We occasionally catch juveniles drinking, but it's a real problem catching the person who sold it to them and trying to get one young person to tell on another is almost an impossibility," he said.

Butler said his department has had much trouble with young people driving while intoxicated.

EYEING THE ACTION

It's too early in the season for bubbles to burst, which is probably okay with Leo Carter, in Medical Center's dugout in a recent game in Sanford. The Medical Center team was expected to be one of the top squads in Sanford Little League this season, but has yet to arrive at its full potential. Medical Center goes into action again Tuesday afternoon at 5 on the Bay Avenue field against First Federal. Little League games are slated in Sanford Monday through Thursdays on Fort Mellon and Bay Avenue fields.

Billy: Hardest Thing To Do Was Admit I'm Alcoholic

LONG BEACH, Calif. (UPI) — Billy Carter, looking trim and fit after 40 days in an alcoholic treatment program, said today the hardest part of his treatment was admitting, "I was an alcoholic."

He told reporters at his first news conference since he entered the facility March 6 that President Carter had nothing to do with his decision to seek treatment.

He said that his brother has kept in touch with him but added, "He had nothing to do with my decision to seek treatment."

He said he had been drinking regularly for 20 years but it wasn't until February that his family convinced him he needed help. "The decision to seek treatment was made by me and my family."

Carter said after being without alcohol for many weeks, "I feel so damn well I wish I would get the flu."

He will personally pay the $12,100 cost of the treatment, he said.

Carter said being in the public spotlight contributed to his being at the Naval facility but did not cause him to seek help. "I would have needed a program anyway," he said.

Carter admitted he was a bit nervous about facing reporters knowing he could not have a drink. He said he would be replacing his booze with soda, milk, or just plain water.

"I found out water can be drunk straight," he said, laughing.

"The worst part of the treatment was when I made up my mind to stop drinking."

During the first days of the treatment, he said, "All I could think about was going home."

The special detoxification unit, where former First Lady Betty Ford and Georgia Sen. Herman Talmadge recently underwent treatment, is recognized as one of the best of its kind.

VANDALISM... Still Around, 'But Little Can Be Done'

By SHARON CARRASCO
Herald Staff Writer

"I warned them. If they spin their tires on my lawn again, I'll shoot them."

Those are the frustrated sentiments of a Sanford man whose home and neighborhood subdivision have been the target of vandals for a couple of years now. Paul (not his real name) and his neighbors have reached the boiling point and aren't going to tolerate the vandals any longer, he says.

"It just got to the point where the people were afraid to say anything for fear of retaliation," Paul explains.

The vandals, he says, are a group of about 10 teenagers who congregates on street corners or sits in the street night after night "drinking beer and smoking pot."

"There's a curfew here in Sanford," Paul says. "Everytime I hear a siren, I call the police but the kids are gone when the police get here."

Being awakened in the middle of the night because of drag racing down the block or the sound of shattering beer bottles is not unusual in his neighborhood, Paul says.

"When I get up in the morning, I think maybe my mailbox will be knocked down or I'll have egg on my house," Paul says.

To combat the vandals, Paul and his neighbors are considering organizing a vigilante group equipped with citizen's band radios to survey the neighborhood's night activities.

"Friday and Saturday between midnight and 3 a.m. are the worst nights. The parents go out and the kids have a ball."

Sgt. William R. Bernosky Jr. says he can sympathize with Paul's situation but there is just so much the Sanford Police Department can do about it.

"I sympathize with the citizens but generally we are dealing in petty, neighborhood grievances and it isn't the retaliation by the kids involved," Bernosky says. "Nine out of ten times, it's not a life-threatening situation."

From Jan. 1 to April 15, there were 148 cases of vandalism reported in Sanford, Bernosky says. Broken windows account for 30 of those cases and vehicle damages which covers everything from all tires to scratched auto paint accounts for 48 cases, he says.

Another 78 cases go in the miscellaneous category of vandalism from soaped windows to egging a house, he said.

The city of Sanford is divided into five zones and Paul lives in Zone 5 where the highest incidence of vandalism is reported, he says. Zone 5 runs from 26th Street south to the city limits and houses the "nice" subdivisions and residential areas, most of the car dealerships and the plaza, Sgt. Bernosky noted.

"We care, we report, we go but it's a sad situation," Bernosky says. "It's so sad because it's so real. I cannot measure the terror, the pure realism of this situation that the people involved are experiencing."

There are measures that citizens can undertake to help alleviate the vandalism situation, Bernosky suggests the creation of a neighborhood watch system where the citizens are aware of who is and who is not supposed to be in their neighborhood. Call the police department and come forth with the information when help arrives, he suggests.

"Be willing to testify and insist your case be heard," Bernosky says.

"We were told this by the state's attorney. You make the arrests, we will prosecute and we will decide when and if to prosecute."

Owners Can't Afford To Free Them

Two Prize Dobermans Face Death In County Shelter

By GEOFFREY FOUNDS
Herald Staff Writer

Two prize Doberman Pinschers have less than 24 hours to live unless their owner can raise $70 to secure their release from the Seminole County Dog Pound.

The dogs were impounded on April 18 by county animal control officers who said they resembled the dog who maulled a 6-year-old Sanford girl on April 7.

The owners of the dogs, Bruce and Judy Crocker, said their dogs were locked in a car at the time of the incident. They said they surrendered the animals to county officials but now cannot get them back because they don't have the funds to pay the $70 bond required by the county. They said they are unemployed and were counting on the thousand dollars they hoped to make from the sale of registered paper.

"On Thursday they told us at the pound that we had five days left to get the money or they are going to put the dogs to sleep," said Judy Crocker.

But Jeff Etchberger, acting Seminole County Animal Welfare Director, said the dogs could be spared if anyone comes forward with the $70 before Tuesday.

"After 10 days the animals become county property and a disposition will be made at that time," he said.

The dogs could be released to anyone willing to pay the $70 bond, or if no one comes forward, he said the dogs would be destroyed.

Bruce Crocker said the girl who has bitten could not identify either of his animals as the attacker. She once visited the pound and said his dogs were not the animals involved, he said. But she later changed her mind and said the male dog might have been the animal who bit her.

Etchberger confirmed Crocker's account of the identification, but he said he was satisfied the girl's second thoughts merit keeping the dog impounded.

"She was badly maulled and the dog did not have a registration. We were not going to take any chances," he said.

He said the Crockers could have picked up their female Doberman after it had been positively identified as not being the attacker. He said the Crockers could not or would not do that, however.

Crocker said he went to retrieve his female, but did not have the money to pay for the required registration tag fee charged by the county. He was able to produce papers to verify the female had had the proper shots. The county still requires a tag, however. But he said the male's papers were lost when the couple recently moved to Sanford from Ocala.

Etchberger said the Crockers signed the impoundment papers, which gave the county the authority to charge them for the cost of boarding the animals during quarantine.

"I'm sure it wasn't our dogs. We breed them and a dog that bites would be of no use to us. But we weren't going to fight it. We wanted to make absolutely sure," Crocker said.

But he said he was unprepared to have to pay the $3 per day fee plus the tag fee of $5 per dog. He said he thought the registered dogs would be released to him after it was determined they were not the ones involved in the biting.

"They knew it was a male that bit the girl, I don't know why both dogs were taken if it doesn't make any sense," he said.

Etchberger said it was believed a male dog bit the girl, but at the time the impoundment papers were served that had not been clarified and both dogs were taken because they each fit the general description of the attacker.

Persons interested in obtaining the dogs prior to their destruction can contact the Seminole County Animal Control Office at 400 S. Orlando Drive, that department's employees said.

BAKER'S DOZEN COUNTDOWN!

A magician drops 13 coins into a hat, one at a time, counting: one, two, three, four, etc., up to 13. Then, removing the same coins one by one, he counts thirteen, twelve, eleven, ten, nine, eight, at which point he picks up five, adding "and five makes thirteen." Now, however, he inserts the hat and two more coins are discovered. How come? Secret: His second count requires only 11 coins. When five are removed, two are left.
