The tendency of most cision by the government to start velt yesterday that he ask Congress to "increase nurtax rates, estate taxes and corporation taxes, and take messures to secure revenue for tax exempt bonds" to care properly for the nation's ployable unemployed."

In a letter to the President the committee said:

"The fifth year of economic disa helds little prospect for res ommercial employment at adequate pay. At least eight or nine million employable people are still unemployed. Many have one to three dependents.

We do not blame any individual for this situation. We believe widespread unemployment and poverty are inherent in our economic system! While that system continues the federal government cannot escape its duty to see that the unemployed and theid dependents do not suffer for lack of the necessition; and reasonable comforts of life.

Despite efforts you have made to provide employment on public works, construction, ste. comparatively few have obtained such work. It is probable that the feceral government will have to spend several years to care for the unemployed, the unemployable, and through issuing bonds."
