Fireworks fizzle again

Pyrotechnician can't be found

SANFORD — Fireworks fund-raiser Rod Laver has been forced to throw in the towel. After almost a year of fund-raising efforts, he says it is now too late to arrange for a fireworks display for this July 4th.

Laver has submitted a letter to the editor of the Sanford Herald expressing his disappointment that there will be no Independence Day event in Sanford, now for the second consecutive year.

Disappointed Laver responds

Editor's note: Rod Laver's letter to the editor is run in its entirety to accompany our news story. He details as fund-raiser the problems he has encountered and future plans for the event.

After working since July 1994 to bring back to Sanford the fireworks display with an all-day event in Ft. Mellon Park, as approved by SHDWA, I must throw in the towel for this year. When SHDWA refused to sponsor the event on May 16, it left no time to find another sponsor and to raise the $12,000 needed for the day's events. I contacted many non-profit organiza-

Casinos back before voters

SANFORD — The gentle swirl of water on the boat hull with the sounds of gambling in the background could be heard in Seminole County, possibly on Lake Monroe and the St. Johns River, if voters back a renewed effort to establish riverboat and hotel-casino gambling in Florida.

On Thursday, the Florida Supreme Court cleared the way for a proposal to be placed on the statewide 1996 ballot to allow 10 riverboat casinos and 10 hotel casinos. Based on the population requirements of the proposal, Seminole County could qualify for a SANFORD — A home invasion in Sanford left the victim shaken, but relatively uninjured Thursday afternoon, police said.

The suspects, however, remain at large with the money they took from the home.

According to Sanford Police Cmdr. Dennis Whitmore, four men forced their way into the home at 1716 Mulberry, where Corey Pryor is staying temporarily.

Pryor, 26, of Pahokee, Fla., told police investigators that he is presently in Sanford doing seasonal farm work, picking corn.

1995 Lake Mary seniors graduate

By VICKI DeSORMIER
Herald Senior Staff Writer

ORLANDO — With the hard driving beat of a rock n' roll video Lake Mary High School's graduation of the class of 1995 brought down the house at the Orlando Arena last night.

On the Dimanivision screens around the Magic and NBA festooned scoreboard and another over the unadorned stage along the western end of the arena floor, video images of the Rams' senior year experiences flickered and faded.

Faces from the halls of Lake Mary and faces from the news brought cheers, jeers and commentary from the crowd. While the images of President Clinton on David Koresch brought no notice, the faces of O.J. Simpson and Tom Hanks as Forest Gump brought the most ardent cheers from the crowd.

The arena remained dark as the graduates entered from south to the north and south of the floor. Few seats in the lower bowl remained empty as admirers and well-wishers struggled to find a place from which to watch the ceremony.

One young man, dressed as a cow cleared a path for his associates by offering a view of his udders to all who stood in their way.

Principal Raymond Gaines got the event underway by thanking the teachers and the parents who had helped to shape the young people who had earned their diplomas. He encouraged the graduates, who he called his pride and joy, to "relish the fruits of the past and to set goals for the future."

Honors speaker, Nathan Holladay, obviously nervous yet confident, waved to the crowd and said simply, "Hi" before apologizing in advance for his lack of speaking style by saying that even the great speakers were bad speakers at first.

He drew cheers from the crowd, however, as he admonished his fellow graduates to be active in the community, to become politically active, to become spiritually active and to become "family active."

He concluded by telling them to not be afraid to "stretch your wings and fly like an eagle."

Donald Delaney, the senior class treasurer emphasized that sentiment.

"Only you can put a limit on your experiences," he said.

Valedictorian Evan Forkash offered words of encouragement as he and his fellow graduates prepared to "take (their) first strides on a magnificent adventure."

Thanking parents for their contribution he explained the graduates have to make their own path.

"You may give us your love, but not our thoughts," he said, quoting Kilbrun. It was time, he said, to move on.

"Our lockers are empty," he said. "Our minds are full. Our crayons are broken, but our hearts blaze with color and emotion."

Following more retrospective looks at the class of 1995, accompanied by blaring music by Led Zeppelin and Simple Minds, the diplomas were distributed amid applause, cheers and blaring aithorns.

While Gaines awarded the majority of diplomas himself, Lake Brantley High School principal Darwin Boothe was on hand to give his son Robert his diploma and a hug.

The crowd went wild, however, when Lateefah Charlie Harrison's brother, Shaquille O'Neal, See Graduate, Page 5A

NEWS FROM THE REGION AND ACROSS THE STATE

Hospital funding woes Feds threaten to pull Medicare funds

By Associated Press

CORAL SPRINGS — A hospital under threat of losing its Medicare funding for deficiencies in its emergency medical care has said it is working to make changes.

"Coral Springs Medical Center intends to aggressively address this issue," hospital administrator Jason Moore said late Thursday in a release. "We pledge continued quality care to our patients and to our community."

In a letter to hospital administrators, the Health Care Financing Administration said "the deficiencies are so serious that they constitute an immediate threat to the health and safety of any individual who comes to the emergency department."

The investigation of the hospital was prompted by the February death of a 3-year-old girl after she waited more than an hour for treatment. Alexandra Silverman was rushed to the hospital in suburban Broward County, suffering from vomiting, diarrhea and dehydration.

The child's father became so distressed at the lengthy wait that he dialed 911 from the parking lot. Alexandra eventually was treated, but suffered respiratory arrest and shock the next morning. Her life support equipment was disconnected Feb. 15.

Investigators found in a May 4 visit that patients were having to wait an inordinate amount of time in the emergency room before receiving care.

In Florida, emergency room violations are becoming increasingly common. Ed Hicks, an official with the health care agency in Atlanta, said Thursday his office has received about 70 complaints over the past year. Violations have been confirmed in about 30 of the cases, he said.

"We don't have any other states in our region that even approach the volume of cases we have in Florida," Hicks said. The eight states covered by the agency are Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky.

The Florida Hospital Association, which represents about 500 hospitals throughout the state, is troubled by the spate of complaints.

"We're concerned about it. We're looking into it," said association spokesman Wade Edwards.

Coral Springs Medical Center has used June 30 to correct the problems or lose Medicare money for all its patients.

Losing Medicare funding would be a serious financial blow to the hospital, part of the tax-supported North Broward Hospital District.

Medicare is a federal health insurance program for the elderly and disabled. No figures were available Thursday on how much Medicare money the hospital received last year.

Nursing home costs increase

TALLAHASSEE — The average bill for a year's stay in a Florida nursing home has climbed to $68,000, an increase of 8.3 percent in a semiprivate room, a state agency has announced.

The latest figures covered the 12-month period ending in March and followed an annual increase last year of 4.4 percent, according to the Agency for Health Care Administration.

"Consumers are spending around $470 million a year out-of-pocket for nursing home care in Florida," Doug Cook, agency director, said Thursday.

The average daily charge for a semiprivate nursing home rose from $59 to $59.

The lowest nursing home charges are found in North Florida, where the median daily charge was $67 in the Panhandle and $68 in the Big Bend area.

The highest median charge was $118 in the five-county region south, east and north of Lake Okechobee. The counties are Palm Beach, Martin, St. Lucie, Okechobee, and Indian River.

Consumers can get guides that detail charges of nursing homes in their areas by calling 1-800-945-0838.

Last bombing death suspect arrested

TALLAHASSEE — The last suspect in the case involving the bombing death of Florida Highway Patrol trooper James Fulford has been arrested in New York City.

Federal and local authorities nabbed Emerson Orlando Davis during an early morning raid Thursday at a Bronx apartment, the U.S. Marshal Service said.

Davis is accused of being a leader of "The Enterprise," a drug gang made up primarily of Jamaican citizens. He faces federal charges of being part of a conspiracy that led to the fatal bombing, firearm violations and drug trafficking.

Davis is expected to be returned within two weeks to Tallahassee, where he will face trial, said Chief Deputy U.S. Marshall Ron Wierrens in Tallahassee.

Fulford, 35, was killed when he opened a booby-trapped package during a routine traffic stop on Interstate 10 in February 1986.

Abduction suspect arrested

MIAMI — The third suspect in the abduction and attempted murder of an Argentine businessman was arrested after being returned to Dade County from the Bahamas, police said.

A warrant was issued earlier this week for Daniel Lugo, who also is a suspect in the presumed kidnapping of a wealthy Hungarian businessman and his girlfriend.

Lugo, who left behind numerous foreign passports in different aliases when he fled, was located Thursday in Nassau. He was charged with attempted murder, kidnapping, armed robbery, burglary of a dwelling and extortion.

Argentine businessman Mark Schiller was held for a month in a Dade warehouse, bound and tortured, robbed with his own credit cards and forced to sign over millions of dollars in assets, Metro-Dade detectives said. He survived and has returned to Argentina.

1 dead, 9 injured in accident

MIAMI — A tractor trailer plowed into nine cars on a busy expressway, killing one man, injuring nine others and forcing police to close portions of State Road 896, a main roadway in Dade County.

Florida Highway Patrol said Guillermo Pena, 52, who was driving a tractor trailer, was unable to stop and struck eight cars before the tractor part of his vehicle landed on top of a Volvo. The driver of the Volvo was killed. Pena was uninjured, according to FHP spokesman Ernesto Duarte.

Duarte said the Volvo was crushed so severely that investigators planned to cut the car apart to make sure there wasn't another front-seat passenger. The driver's name was not released while relatives were notified.

Nine others were treated for minor injuries at area hospitals. No charges had been filed yet.

Chain gangs may not be used in state

CAPPSHAW, Ala. Florida's prison chief says he probably will not chain several inmates together or work them on roadsides when his state follows Alabama's lead and reinstates chain gangs.

Florida Secretary of Corrections Harry Singletary and state Sen. Charlie Crist, R-St. Petersburg, Thursday viewed Alabama's 400-inmate chain gang program at Lincoln Correctional Facility, where groups of five inmates are chained to each other and shuttle together while cleaning up roadsides.

Singletary said inmates could get more done if they were shackled individually at the ankles, and guarded by officers with guns.

Lawmakers clash over Medicaid

By Christopher Conwell
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Democratic Gov. Lawton Chiles warned against congressional plans to give states control of Medicaid, saying GOP plans to convert the program to block grants would hurt high-growth states like Florida.

Chiles, testifying before a House subcommittee Thursday, clashed with four of his Republican counterparts. GOP proposals would cut the growth in federal spending in half and convert the program to a block grant.

Chiles said it makes no sense to "lock in the inefficiencies of the past program" by allowing Michigan or Wisconsin the same growth rate as such burgeoning Sun Belt states as Florida, Texas and California.

"That kind of proposal would pose a real danger to kids, the disabled and the elderly in Florida and other growth states," Chiles said. He noted that two-thirds of Medicaid funds are spent on the elderly, and disabled.

The Republican governors endorsed block grants and limited federal oversight.

"The Medicaid system is outdated and out of control," Illinois Gov. Jim Edgar testified. "Its skyrocketing price tag has played havoc with state budgets across this nation for years and years."

Another Republican, Michigan Gov. John Engler, said Medicaid's costs were "a million" for the states. Fellow Republican Gov. Don Sundquist of Tennessee and Mike Leavitt of Utah also demanded that states be freed from rules set by Congress and the Health Care Financing Administration.

While much attention on the impact of the GOP budget proposals has been focused on Medicare, Medicaid would be in for even more dramatic changes.

Medicaid covers almost 36 million people, including children and parents on welfare.

State short half a million spaces in hurricane shelters

By Associated Press

TAMPA — Florida is short half a million spaces in hurricane shelters and is racing to beat a law requiring a solution to the problem by 1998, a newspaper reported today.

"That is a tough goal," Danny Kilcollin of the state's Division of Emergency Management said Thursday at the Governor's Hurricane Conference. "I can assure you I don't sleep over that issue."

The law was passed in the aftermath of Hurricane Andrew, which slammed Dade County in August 1992 and exposed numerous inadequacies in Florida's emergency management plans, according to The Tampa Tribune.

The state estimates there are 8.3 million residents living in storm surge zones, and 30 percent of them — 1.8 million people — would turn to public shelters for safety. Currently, there's room for only 1.3 million evacuees.

The numbers are particularly bad in some areas:

— In Pinellas County, there are more than 600,000 people living in evacuation zones in a worst-case scenario. But the county could cram only about 100,000 people into its shelters, even if it uses half the recommended 30 square feet per person.

— In Charlotte County, 118,000 people live in areas that would be swamped by a major hurricane. But there are no public shelters — zero spaces — available on ground high enough to escape the water in a Category 5 hurricane.

During Hurricane Elena, 115,000 Pinellas residents flooded to public shelters, said David Bilodeau, the county's emergency management director. Ten years later, the population continues to swell.

"I have fears that more people would knock on the door than we have room for," Bilodeau said. "It will always overwhelm us."

The state has hired four engineers, whose job is to find more buildings that can serve as shelters. Unfortunately, they've also found older sites aren't as safe as they should be.

"We didn't get this deficit overnight," said Lis Lawrence, disaster specialist with the American Red Cross in Tallahassee. "And we're not going to eliminate it overnight."

Anger over school discipline

By DAILY STAFF WRITER
AP Education Writer

WASHINGTON — The little boy was troubled, there was no doubt from the first day. He would crawl under his desk, creep into laughter during a math lesson, write with his pencil all over his head.

Most disturbing, though, were the actual hand gestures the boy named Mark made to the other first-graders in his class.

"At that point, I'd try to at least get him out of the room," said teacher Caroline Redmon. "But of course, he'd be back the next day."

For five months last year, Mark remained in Redmon's class at Mount Vernon Elementary School in Toledo, Ohio, despite her repeated pleas for help.

Protected by the nation's special education law, the boy — classified as severely emotionally disturbed — could be switched to another, special classroom only after a lengthy due-process hearing.

"And so the other 20 kids in that class just had to suffer," Redmon said bitterly.

It's not that she blamed Mark. "It's just that the system didn't work. And I can tell you one thing — there certainly wasn't much learning going on those five months," Redmon said.

It is a situation that has some members of Congress concerned. Flooded with similar stories, they are vowing to change the nation's special education law to give schools more leeway to discipline disabled children.

But advocates for the disabled are crying, "Hold on." The rules were created to ensure disabled children aren't yanked from class to class, or denied schooling, they note.

"It's segregating of kids with disabilities, pure and simple," said Jamie Ruppman, whose grown son is autistic. "We have fought so hard for what we have. And it's frightening to think they're starting down the slippery slope of taking it away."

It's not just discipline, Ruppman said.

The entire 1975 law guaranteeing disabled children a "free and appropriate public education" is coming under scrutiny as never before.

"People don't remember what we used to have," Ruppman said. "We used to deny these kids an education. We used to warehouse them in faraway classrooms. Now, we have kids given the chance to live up to their potential."

But as the number of children classified as disabled has grown — especially those with emotional disorders — special education has taken an ever-larger bite of public schools' money and time.

School boards are complaining about the amount they must spend on attorneys' fees. Governors complain that strict federal rules give little flexibility.

And some teachers distrust the growing movement to place more disabled children in "regular classrooms."

Inclusion, as it is called, sounds great in theory, said Janet Bass of the American Federation of Teachers. "But there's a big gap between what is ideal, and what happens in a lot of these classes."

In the best situations, such as at Patrick O'Hara School in Boston, disabled and non-disabled children benefit alike from smaller classes, extra teachers' aides or therapists and special equipment.

Education Department officials say they sympathize with such cases, and want classrooms to be orderly learning places.

But they also remain committed to inclusion. And they question whether disabled children are the biggest discipline problem in American classrooms.

Rather than remove "disruptive" disabled children, schools should first ensure they're given teachers the training or aides to help kids succeed, said Judith E. Heumann, the assistant education secretary overseeing special education.

"But our overall position is pretty clear," she said. "Disabled children cannot be the throwaways."

EDITORIAL

Are you prepared for a hurricane?

On June 1, the start of hurricane season, the editorial in the Sanford Herald was based on supposition. It asked people to suppose a hurricane would threaten the area and consider how to handle themselves as well as their pets.

At that time, there was no way of knowing we would have such a threat within a matter of only one more day. We can all be thankful the storm passed us out in the Gulf of Mexico, without giving Central Florida any difficulties.

Even though winds were never reported at over 75 miles per hour, Tropical Storm Allison nevertheless caused some damage. Trees were downed, flooding occurred, and related tornadoes struck outlying areas.

Most of us have seen the pictures on television. We hear people in the area hit by Allison saying they got off easily. It should also be noted however, that they wasted no time in making preparations. Business owners and residents had the plywood cut and ready to place over windows and glass doors.

People knew their escape routes and hardly any people hesitated when officials suggested they may be safer if they evacuated.

A few of course, reported they waited out the storm at home, but they admitted they realized it did not have the devastating winds some of the hurricanes have had in prior years.

Our point is, did Central Florida learn anything from what just happened in the Florida Panhandle?

It may be a nice day today, but within just a few more days, we could have the threat of possibly 100 mile per hour winds or more. That will not be the time to begin making preparations. The time is now.

Reporters in the Panhandle interviewed many store employees, who said they had run out of batteries and bottled water. Why wait until the last minute? Is there a home here in Central Florida that does not have adequate room in which to store a few gallons of water or several packages of batteries?

Water won't go sour. Batteries won't lose their strength in a few months. We can buy these needs now and not have to worry if and when a hurricane threatens us.

We believe tropical storm Allison was a wake-up call for all of us. Take note of what happened in the Florida Panhandle. They have gone through this many times in the past, and clearly knew what to do.

For those who may not have been involved in a severe storm here in Central Florida, we suggest that hurricanes not be considered as a Disney-type thrill ride. They are serious and can have serious consequences.

Let's treat them as such.

Lottery sales

A recent story about state lottery rankings noted sales gains by a few larger states like Texas, and some new types of expanded gaming in others. Unfortunately, the story may have left many with the impression that Florida Lottery ticket sales are down.

Quite to the contrary, the 1985 fiscal year is on track to become the best year ever for Lottery sales. We project total sales of between $2,250 billion to $2,500 billion this year. This is already our sixth consecutive year above the $2 billion mark.

As our fiscal year ends, Florida Lottery sales are $80 million above last year. This is even more astounding when you consider that Florida's vital tourism sector has been slower than expected.

We are very proud of the excellent work done this year by owners and employees of the 12,000 Florida businesses that make our lottery products available to the millions who enjoy them in all 67 counties.

While we are the fourth largest state in terms of population, we surpass all three of those bigger states in per capita lottery profits earned for the state.

Lotteries or any other businesses that only measure their success in terms of gross sales have forgotten their true purpose — earning profit for the shareholders. We take it very seriously, because our shareholders are Florida's school children, and the leaders of tomorrow's Florida.

Some things women just know

WASHINGTON — Some things, women know. As the species' more intuitive half, we understand the moon's messages, the tide's seductive pull and, of course, pregnancy. Through some magic, we can read the signs that answer the age-old question:

Boy or girl?
 From the start, my new pregnancy looked and felt utterly different. And I knew that after two sons — and years of tripping over plastic swords, assorted rubber weaponry and sharp-edged action figures — I was going to have a daughter.

I knew it was a girl from the weird, new way some foods tasted. From the unfamiliar way I smelled. From the half-drawn women who looked at my swelling form and announced, "It's a girl," because, they explained, I was "carrying high."

So I was primed for the phone call last week bearing the results of my amniocentesis — the nearly always correct genetic and sex-revealing test taken by many over-35 moms-to-be. "You're going to have another baby boy!"

Because I'm adaptable and highly spiritual, I replied, "What a wonderful surprise! Another son!"

Actually, I shrieked the expletive that the guy in "The Crying Game" must have thought upon discovering that his "female" lust-object was equipped with that which only guys possess.

Then I laughed. Mostly at myself, for forgetting that if fate has given me a motto, it's Boys R Us — as my three brothers, two sons and a lifetime penchant for surrounding myself with males proved.

I kept laughing. At having produced a black '80s version of "My Three Sons." At my best friend's insistence that my womb is the Citadel, an institution to which girls need not apply. At another pal's announcement that she'd found the perfect macho name: Ebola, a moniker that's "both virile and virulent."

After laughing for hours, I stopped. And was stunned to discover I was devastated. "It's a boy!" I kept saying. "Another boy."

After months of nausea, weariness and impossible weight gain, you're going to have ... A boy.

So, what's wrong with that? I asked myself. Your baby is healthy, your husband — who also wanted a girl — is happy. You adore your two sons. Your disappointment boils down to two shallow things:

Clothes and hair. I longed to encircle my baby girl's head with one of those ridiculous elastic "headbands." To weave braids tied with satin bows. To abandon royal, midnight, sky, baby, electric and cobalt blue, and actually buy ... pink!

But it's a boy, I decided. Get over it! And I realized that in all my musing about boys, I'd lost sight of my boys. The ones who still kiss me, tease me and tell me their secrets. Who, at great personal risk of being seen actually agreeing to accompany me to the movie "A Little Princess."

The boys, who one day will be just as nurturing to some woman's lucky little girl. Who'll be leaving husbands and fathers, like the man who has given me my newest little boy. I'm sure of it.

Some things, women just know.

You're going to have another baby boy! I tried the voice on the line. ♪

GUEST COLUMNIST

HAROLD V. SHEPPER
 Harold V. Shepper is a substitute teacher who, due to illness, is retiring from Seminole High.

Seminole High is school of quality

During the past school year, I have read the education stories faithfully looking for good news about Seminole High School where I had the privilege of serving for five years as a substitute teacher.

I found an article that pleased me mightily when it was announced that Seminole High was nominated as a "Blue Ribbon School" for excellence in education. Measures such as leadership, school organization, teaching, and parental involvement were cited.

Too frequently it seemed to me, the media suggested such things as the need for boundary changes in accomplishing economic and racial balance, to accomplish what feelings of wholeness?

Let's look at the facts. Were the lives of students attending Seminole High enriched because of the current mix of students measured by race, economic status, or the disadvantaged, or the exceptional? The answer is a resounding yes!

Substitute teachers generally hear and see more than full-time teachers because students know we can't influence grades, or much of anything else (as it should be) except how students approach their work at school, and sometimes their lifestyle. During the years I served as a substitute, I never heard a student complain about Seminole High (unless the heat or air didn't work), its students, teachers or administration. To the contrary, students exuded enthusiasm about the student body and the friends they had made, the quality of the teaching staff, and an administration they viewed as interested in them.

Like other subs, I found acceptance and friends among faculty and administration, along with respect from students. Seminole High is blessed with a superb bright and caring faculty who are constantly honing their skills so as to be able to enrich their subject matter and thus enrich their students' learning. These teachers care about their students' learning, they care about what's happening in the lives of their students. You have teachers who not only teach exceptionally, but they counsel with their students. These are teachers who care.

Caring is evident everywhere on this campus. You find it among the staff of a beautiful and functional library. The same positive attitude is evidenced in the computer lab and the AV staff. Wherever you look, caring is in evidence.

Leadership was one of the qualities noted in the nomination of Seminole High as a blue ribbon school. In my judgment, the quality that exists, and the continual striving for excellence, is the result of the superior leadership of the principal, Gretchen Scheppler. Here is a leader who cares about students, teachers, administrators, and the ancillary staff, who may not teach, but have day-to-day contact with students, teachers, parents and the public. When the leader cares, and a good leader would not tolerate less than our best. We have all the best at Seminole High.

Parents, if you're concerned about boundaries, let me suggest you may be concerned about the wrong issue. Your concern needs to be about the student, and the student's academic and maturation progress. Boundaries, fancy buildings, parking lots filled with expensive cars, won't make the difference. You and you only make the difference.

Do you make your parent-teacher conference? Do you care about the quality of your student's work, and the timeliness in which it is filed. If you don't care, the student doesn't care.

These words are my kudos and farewell to Seminole High School.

Unfortunately, a serious illness makes it impossible for me to teach again. I want to thank all of you — students, administration, ancillary staff, for five wonderful years. For acceptance, friendship, and opportunity. I count the five years I spent with you at Seminole High as one of the high points in my life.

ELLEN GOODMAN

Redefining the good life

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — The phrase began to resurface around the conference again and again: The Good Life.

It was a soft set of words that rose unexpectedly out of a serious gathering at Radcliffe College under a hard-edged mathematical title: "The New Economic Equation: Redefining the Economy, the Workplace and the Family."

In the past, when a conference was held on work and family, on the economy and the society, the family was usually defined as a problem. It was cast as the burden that made it hard for workers, especially women, to be productive on the job.

When women held such gatherings, the issue was framed in terms of equality and success. Flextime, family leave, child care, and elder care — the package of "family concerns" — were brought to the table in discussions about how to get the men in charge to listen and respond to workers or, to put it more accurately, working mothers.

But there were hints of change in the working conference that brought 40 men and women together recently from business, government and academia to begin a yearlong initiative at Radcliffe's new Public Policy Institute. In a few places like this one, the issues of work and family are being consciously enlarged into a more complex discussion of how the pieces of society should fit together.

Today the conflict between economic life and the rest of life has put our whole country into overload. Pressured by the new technology and a changing world economy, the old forms of coping in American life are stressed like an aging metal structure to the breaking point. The early indicators of collapse are the fractures in family life and children's lives.

Even at this conference of people with relatively powerful jobs and some with that form of job security known as tenure, there were stories exchanged about 70-hour work weeks, family stress, the recurring sense that something in life was awry or missing. With some bemusement, Radcliffe Public Policy Institute director Paula Rayman reported on three child care crises just among the participants.

"In politics," as Labor Secretary Robert Reich reminded the group, "the discourse is set by the dominant question." Indeed, no one ever ran a political campaign on the theme: "It's the Good Life, Stupid!" But again and again, there was evidence of how the questions can make all the difference.

As Robert Boruff, the vice president of the Saturn Corporation, said, the debate that built the new automobile company wasn't about what kind of a car to make. It was, he said,

"What kind of a company do you want to work for?" A success story grew from the answer to that question.

So too, Lois Bailyn of M.I.T.'s Sloan School talked about the work she is doing with companies to find new policies that are good for both people and the workplace. The dominant question as she phrases it: "How would you change work in order to make your lives more liveable?"

There is something radical in just these inquiries. After all, for the most part concerns about family, about community, about the good life, are set outside the margins when we talk about the economy.

We are supposed to be grateful for any job that hasn't been eliminated by technology or shipped to Thailand. We are told to be competitive and productive. The only thing we are to expect of government is less. As for family problems? They have been conveniently cast as a failure of our moral values.

Any conversation, like the one just beginning at Radcliffe, takes place against an inauspicious background. The landscape now is dominated by conservative contracts with the family, by cuts in government spending, by the daily anxieties.

Meanwhile, the good life is as hard to define as it is to lobby for. Freud listed two ingredients: work and love. In the '80s, we would add: the time for both. Add to that, a sense of security, connection, shared enterprise and the moral ease of living in a fair society. We aren't doing well by these measures.

But any "new economic equation" worth its math has to include family well-being as well as productivity, a sense of community as well as technology. When the additions and subtractions and long divisions of any "new economic equation" are being devised, the overriding issue must be the kind of life we want.

Sometimes, after all, the soft questions are the hardest.

It was a soft set of words that rose unexpectedly out of a serious gathering. ♪

Fireworks

When he became aware that the effort to obtain money for fireworks and then hire a shooter for this year was in serious trouble, he even went to officials at Disney World to see if they might consider having a Sanford fireworks display. This subsequently could not be arranged.

As for next year, Leyer is hoping to see a return of the rockets and stars and fireworks bursting in air over the Sanford's lakefront and Fort Mellon Park.

Another move is underway however, toward arranging for fireworks in future years.
During commission comments at the May 23rd meeting of the Sanford City Commission, commissioner Whitney Schstein proposed that city officials consider the possibility of increasing taxes for city property owners by one hundredth of a mill. He projected that, while increasing property taxes only slightly, it would provide sufficient funds for fireworks as well as related Independence Day holiday activities.

At that time, Schstein said to his fellow commissioners, "I'm not asking for a decision at this moment, but I am asking that you give this some serious consideration, so we can bring it back to a work session for discussion."

This Monday night, the matter is officially listed for discussion on the work session agenda.
At the present time, it is not known how other commissioners feel about the small tax increase, but there will be some objection.

"I don't think this is the right solution to the problem," Leyer commented. "I would suggest that this not be approved, because taxpayers shouldn't be asked to pay for the fireworks."
He observed, "This is something which would help the image of the entire city, especially the business community, and it should be financed by those people rather than the taxpayers."

The work session is scheduled to begin at 4 p.m., Monday, June 12, in the City Manager's Conference Room, 2nd floor, Sanford City Hall, 300 N. Park Avenue.

Sunday - June 11 - Florida Film Festival presents the screening of "Gabriel's Dream" at 11 a.m., Estlin Theater, 1500 S. Orlando Ave., Maitland. Admission to the screening and seminar is free and open to the public.
"Gabriel's Dream" is the first feature-length film to be produced under the auspices of the University of Central Florida's Film Department. Four years in the making, "Gabriel's Dream" was made on a shoestring budget by a group of dedicated filmmakers who decided against chasing the elusive "deal" and instead made a film using any and all resources available to them.

Featuring music by Peter Gabriel, R.E.M., They Might Be Giants, Bad Brains, Beastie Boys and others, "Gabriel's Dream" is an intimate story of workers and their struggle to unite against an oppressive management.
Writer-Director Eduardo Sanchez and members of the crew will be on hand to discuss the making of the film and answer questions from the audience.

tions requesting their assistance as an "umbrella" so that we could obtain insurance at a reasonable rate, and when no organization came forward to assist, it was decided to form a non-profit organization to not only do the fireworks, but other activities in Sanford. Then the Paralyzed Veterans of America, Central Florida Chapter, stepped in and indicated their organization and support for the fireworks '89.
By this time, it was almost too late to try to pull anything together, including the fireworks.
"Shooters" took very early for fireworks displays and the ones who had on standby decided against Sanford when word got back to them that SHDWA had absolved themselves from the display. And after problems in years past, I think that word is out that Sanford is not the place that will make for an easy display. We were able to locate two "shooters" willing to consider doing the display, but because of the lateness of the time, there was no time left to order the fireworks and assemble them for the Fourth of July event.

out of the fireworks for 1989 and the treasurer of that organization for a full refund, or leave the money in escrow for the start of fund-raising for 1990. I will start collecting donations for the next year just as soon as we decide whether to form a separate non-profit corporation to promote Sanford, which would include the fireworks, and open a bank account for the deposit of these funds in escrow. If we can keep the funds already donated, then this will give us some idea of how to plan for the fireworks for 1990. If the monies are donated, we can then start a new drive for the 1990 event and most likely have a much larger display. If the people who did donate do decide to leave the money in escrow, the books will be open to anyone desiring to ascertain that the escrowed money is there and available for the 1990 event.

I wish to thank all of the many people for their support and especially to John Oberl, president of Impact Media Productions for his assistance in attempting to locate the "shooter" for this important event.

Wait until next year, we'll really have a "whopper" now that we know where our support is and can call on the many fine people who did offer to help with this event.

I can still be reached at 822-8832 for anyone who wishes to discuss the situation with me. I do welcome letters, please take a moment to help me stay in touch with the thoughts of the citizens of Sanford and the north end of the county.

I must apologize to the many people who donated money for the fireworks display and to those who had refused about the possibility of fireworks on the waterfront again. For those who are skeptical, let me state that you can call Rose Mary Lense at Dalilah's, 330-2374, the person who made the motion to pull SHDWA

Whitmire said Pryor told them the four black men, known to him as Bobby Coffield, Steve, June and Oscar, forced their way into the house. Coffield then allegedly hit Pryor on the left side of his head with a nickel-plated .357 handgun.

Pryor said the men then ran from the residence with a black bag which contained $17,500 in cash.

The money, he told investigators, was the money he has earned this season for picking corn.
Pryor reportedly told investigators that Coffield and his associates had visited his home earlier in the day in hopes of selling him the very gun which they used to separate him from his earnings.
Whitmire said that investigators are still looking for Coffield, Steve, June and Oscar who were last seen driving a small, red Ford, possibly a Mustang.
Pryor did not require treatment for the bump on his head.

When the last of the diplomas was given out and the crowd fled out noisily, the arena did not fall quiet. Workers carried away chairs, dusted seats and lay down the wooden playing surface, the "Magic carpet," on which tonight, Shaq and the Orlando Magic will continue their quest for the NBA championship.

Casinos

riverboat casino, if the voters approved.
The petition would require eligible counties and cities to approve casinos. Counties with at least 200,000 residents would qualify for riverboat casinos and counties with at least half a million residents could get a hotel casino for every 500,000 people.

Seven counties would qualify for at least one hotel casino: Dade, Broward, Palm Beach, Hillsborough, Pinellas, Orange and Duval. Dade would qualify for three and Broward two.

Another 11 counties would qualify for a riverboat casino: Polk, Brevard, Volusia, Lee, Seminole, Pasco, Sarasota, Escambia, Manatee, Marion and Leon.

Voters last year defeated a different casino measure by a 3-to-2 margin, despite being bombarded by the "coalition" campaign in state history.

Florida Locally Approved Gaming (FLAG), backed solely by Chicago-based Bally Entertainment Corp., will allow 10 riverboat casinos and 10 hotel casinos if approved by voters.

Bally is just 15,000 signatures shy of the 429,428 needed to make the ballot.

Gerald Braley, president of Florida Riverboat Corporation, said he could not comment on specifics of the new ballot proposal because he has not seen what the high court ruled. However, he did acknowledge the corporation exercised the first of two one-year renewal options on property at the Port of Sanford. The company proposed operating a riverboat gambling operation from the port if the measure had been approved by the voters.

"We have another option to renew after this year," he said. Port officials said the riverboat corporation renewed its $10,800 option in December. Company owners will have to discuss their plans in light of the new gambling plan.

A Bally official and FLAG leader attributed the defeat of the 1984 amendment to the provisions of that proposal rather than opposition to gambling. Opponents claim the new effort will be defeated again.

"What we have is the luxury of some time to organize and educate and put together a program that Florida voters can understand and, we think, appreciate," said Bernie Murphy, vice chairman for FLAG and vice president of corporate affairs for Bally.

In unanimous decisions Thursday, the state's high court ruled FLAG could go before voters because its language was neither confusing nor over-broad but another casino proposal wasn't worded clearly enough to make the ballot.

Gov. Lawton Chiles and the Cabinet had argued both of the casino measures fell short of the standards for clarity and scope.

Florida's high court rejected a citizens initiative by Proposition for County Choice Gaming to let all 67 counties decide whether they wanted casinos.

In November 1984, Floridians voted 3-to-2 against Limited Casinos, a proposal to allow 47 casinos around the state, even though backers spent nearly $16.5 million - the most ever spent on a campaign in Florida history.

Opponents spent just $1.7 million to persuade voters in defeat a casino amendment for the third time in 16 years.

"Voters consistently and overwhelmingly have opposed casinos because of the crime and social decay that they bring," Hood said.

Murphy said he expected FLAG to spend in the same neighborhood as Limited, Casino.

"I think it's going to take that kind of money," he said from his office in New Jersey.

The state's high court reviews citizen initiatives to make sure they deal with only one subject and the ballot language clearly describes the measure. The court doesn't review measures for their merit.

In the FLAG ruling, Justice Ben Overton wrote the proposal's deadline for implementing legislation - July 1, 1989 - doesn't void the amendment even though it appears to establish "an impossible deadline."

"The intent is clear that the Legislature must act within a reasonable time," Overton wrote in an opinion supported by all other justices except for Chief Justice Stephen Grimes, who excused himself from the case.

Abbott, Colbrunn lead Marlins

MIAMI — Kurt Abbott and Greg Colbrunn both went 3-for-4 with a home run and the Florida Marlins beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 7-3 Thursday night for their first three-game winning streak of the season.

Florida trailed 3-2 in the third when Gary Sheffield and Terry Pendleton singled with two outs. Colbrunn's bouncer up the middle was smothered by second baseman Carlos Garcia, who threw wildly past third base in an attempt to get Sheffield, who scored on the error. Abbott followed with a two-run single for a 5-3 lead.

Colbrunn hit his second homer in as many games, a two-run shot off of reliever Gary Wilson in the fifth, to make it 7-3.

Panthers fire Neilson

FORT LAUDERDALE — The Florida Panthers on Thursday closed a chapter in their young existence, firing coach Roger Neilson who led the team to within one point of the playoffs in its first two seasons.

"I want to emphasize that Roger Neilson is not being released because of past performances with the Florida Panthers," general manager Bryan Murray said. "However, we have decided that a look toward the future of the franchise is crucial at this time."

Neilson, 60, led the Panthers to a 20-22-6 record this season and fifth place in the Atlantic Division, a point behind the New York Rangers for the final Eastern Conference playoff spot.

Florida was 33-34-17 in its maiden season, the best expansion mark in NHL history.

Transplant has Mantle on mend

DALLAS — Surgeons had to take Mickey Mantle back to surgery early Friday to correct a problem caused by post-operative bleeding, according to the surgeon who handled his liver transplant at Baylor University Medical Center.

Dr. Robert Goldstein said the procedure took only 30 minutes and went very smoothly. Mantle was returned to Baylor's intensive care unit specializing in liver transplant patients. Mickey Mantle, near death with a diseased and damaged liver, was given an "excellent chance for recovery" after receiving a donated organ that was found within two days.

Mantle, 63, underwent nearly seven hours of surgery at Baylor University Medical Center in which he received a transplanted liver to replace one ruined by a malignant tumor, hepatitis C and decades of drinking.

Coming through in a pinch Hilliman fans 10 to help short-handed Marlins end skid

From Staff Reports

SANFORD — Andy Hilliman made up the difference for the short-handed R.E. Templeton Co. Inc. Marlins Thursday, striking out 10 and allowing three hits in a 15-0 blitz of the Town Centre Apartments Phillies in a Sanford Recreation Babe Ruth Baseball League game at Sanford Memorial Stadium.

The Marlins had only eight players show up, which, according to the league rules, is enough for a team to play a game if it chooses.

With Hilliman on the hill, eight was enough. Scoring at least three runs in every inning but the third, when they scored once, the Marlins forced the game to be stopped by the 15-run mercy rule with one out in the bottom of the fourth inning.

The victory snapped a two-game losing streak for the Marlins, who opened the season eight consecutive victories.

Brent Templeton and Anthony Alameda both were 3-for-3 to lead the Marlins. Templeton scored a run and drove in two while Alameda scored two runs. Donnie Hinson contributed a triple, single, a run, and three RBI.

Hilliman aided his cause with a double, single, three runs, and an RBI. Tony Lewis singled twice and scored three runs. Chris Denman hit a triple and scored two runs. Kevin Whittington singled and scored a run. Jamie Pitzer scored twice and had an RBI.

Ryan Colgate, Eddie Key, and Joe Knight each hit a single for the Phillies.

With 10 of the Phillies' 12 offensive outs coming on strikes, Hilliman was able to keep the Phillies from exploiting the Marlins' two-man outfield of Denman and Alameda. He struck out the side in both the first and third innings and ended each inning with a strikeout.

The Phillies opened the second inning with Key's single and a walk to Rick Floyd, but Hilliman got the next batter to fly out to Alameda before striking out the next two hitters.

In the top of the fourth, Floyd reached base on a two-out fielder's choice and went to third on Knight's single. Knight then stole second, giving the Phillies two runners in scoring position, but Hilliman killed the threat with his 10th strike out.

The Marlins and Phillies are supposed to play again Saturday in a 3 p.m. game at Zinn Beck Field. Meanwhile, at 3 p.m. at Sanford Memorial Stadium, the Nobles Construction White Sox will play the Good News Gang Royals.

In other games scheduled for Saturday, the Longwood Royals and Altamonte Springs Indians will play at 9 a.m. at the Lake Mary Sports Complex while the Longwood Brewers and Independence Title Inc. Red Sox will tangle in a 6 p.m. contest at Longwood's Candyland Park.

Erectors use sweep to pull away from Densch

From Staff Reports

SANFORD — Wayne Densch Inc. won but still lost ground to M.A. Erectors in the Sanford Recreation Thursday Men's Spring Slowpitch Softball League at Chase Park.

Wayne Densch (3-2) raced to a 5-0 lead after three innings and held on for a 5-4 victory over Baskin-Robbins/Florida Sport Wear (2-4). But M.A. Erectors ran its record to 6-0 with a doubleheader sweep over Beer:30 (3-3) 7-4 and Ken Rummel Chevrolet (1-5) 11-8, stretching its league lead to 2 1/2 games.

Next week, Ken Rummel takes on Baskin-Robbins/Florida Sport Wear at 6:30 p.m. before Wayne Densch a doubleheader against Beer:30 (7:30 p.m.) and M.A. Erectors (8:30 p.m.).

Having 'been there, done that,' Magic expect to rebound

By BOB BAUM AP Sports Writer

ORLANDO — The Orlando Magic have had this feeling before, this ugly, persistent gnawing that follows a loss that should have been a win.

Coach Brian Hill can only hope the response is the same as it was last week, when his team was stunned 94-93 in Game 4 of the Eastern Conference finals in Indianapolis.

Based on that painful experience, the Magic don't think they'll be suffering from any emotional hangover tonight when Orlando and Houston meet in Game 2 of the NBA Finals.

"I don't know of any game in my two years here that was tougher to come back from than Game 4 against Indiana," Hill said Thursday, "and this team came right back and responded with some of its best basketball of the year. So I have no doubt in my mind that we'll play well tomorrow night."

They'd better, or they face the prospect of going to Houston down 2-0 in the best-of-7 series, with the next three games scheduled for the Summit.

"There will be a lot of pressure on us," Orlando's Anfernee Hardaway said. "It would be devastating if they come in and win tomorrow's game."

Houston's remarkable 120-118 overtime victory Wednesday night was the chief subject of dissection after Orlando's practice Thursday.

Players and coaches said they'd never experienced anything quite like it, with the abrupt and extensive momentum changes, the four missed free throws by Nick Anderson in the final 10.5 seconds of regulation and the phenomenal 3-point shooting by Houston's Kenny Smith and Robert Horry.

The Magic believe their defensive breakdowns led to too many open shots for the Rockets gunners. Orlando wanted to double-team Hakeem Olajuwon on virtually every possession. But they were so eager that sometimes they'd inadvertently triple-team him.

"There were too many cases when we had three people down there and they had two or three people open on the wing," Hardaway said.

The biggest mob of reporters at Thursday's interview session surrounded Anderson, who had to talk over and over about how a player who made 75 percent of his free throws could miss four in such a crucial situation.

Anderson said he'd watched replays of his misses on television.

"I had no follow-through. It was like I jerked away," he said.

It was an experience he will have to shrug off, he said.

"I slept pretty good," Anderson said. "I'm a strong basketball player. I'm strong up top. I can't let this get me down. It's one out of many."

U.S. wins for Akers

By STEPHAN MASSTROM AP Sports Writer

over the Americans this year. U.S. goalkeeper Briana Sherry was ejected with six minutes left after a controversial call and could be out for the next two games.

She stepped too far out of the 18-yard box, pounding the ball and apparently carried it over the line on the follow-through. Referee Maximiliano Canales of Guinea flashed the red card.

"In the spirit of the game, that was an incorrect call," DeCicco said. "If she comes out and handles the ball because somebody was breaking it in, yeah, if she takes somebody down, that's the right call."

"It's very hard to take an athlete out of a tournament on a call like that."

U.S. team officials filed a formal protest after the game.

The victory gave the United States a 1-0-1 record and four points in Group C. China, which beat Australia 4-2, also has four points. Denmark has three.

Norway blanked England 2-0 to wrap up the first quarterfinal berth from Group B. England had second with three points. Nigeria rallied from a 2-0 deficit to the Canada 2-3 in the other Group B game, both teams earning their first point.

In Group A, Sweden, Germany, Brazil and Japan are tied with identical 1-1-0 records. Sweden plays Japan and Germany faces Brazil in the final group matches today.

GAVER, Sweden - Oysto resident Michelle Akers watched from the stands. On the field, the injured star striker was the inspiration for the U.S. women's World Cup soccer team.

"The players wrote Michelle's number (10) and her initials on their socks, because basically we were playing to bring her back into the tournament," said coach Tony DiCicco after the defending world champions beat Denmark 2-0 Thursday.

"If we get to the quarterfinals, there's a chance that she'll be able to play again. They were playing so Michelle would be able to play in the world championship more than six minutes."

Akers, 29, who scored both goals when the U.S. edged Norway 2-1 to capture the inaugural World Cup in China in 1991 and to the leading career goal scorer for her nation, sustained a mild concussion and a banged up right knee in a 3-3 tie with China in Tuesday's opener.

Thursday's victory virtually clinched a quarterfinal berth for the Americans, who conclude round-robin play Saturday against winless Australia.

Midfielder Kristine Lilly and striker Tiffany Milbrett scored against the Danes, who won one of two pre-World Cup exhibitions

How credit cards are managed

The importance of account monitoring

A mother might review her teen-age son's timely attendance at the dinner table and his consistency in taking out the trash before deciding whether to continue weekend car privileges.

Before she increases his weekly allowance, however, she might consult other sources — his school report, for example, or his football coach or music teacher.

Lenders track the credit performance of their card holders to make similar decisions in managing their financial risk.

But while they are familiar with the payment patterns of their own customers, they don't know how well those same customers pay other creditors or the total amounts their customers owe.

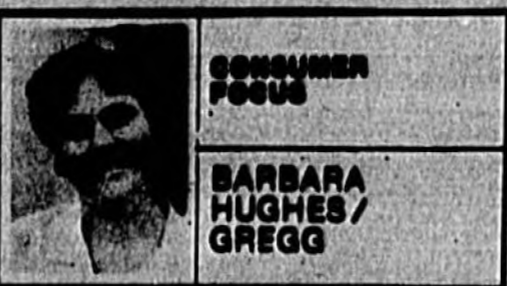

With details from other credit grantors, a lender might decide to increase an individual's credit limit, decrease it or even close an account.

Lenders monitor accounts differently. This review process is called account monitoring or account management. It's an automated process that scans customer credit records for certain risk characteristics as defined by the creditor.

Lenders depend on different pieces of information based on their individual experiences with their customers, their marketing plans, their tolerance for financial risk and many other factors.

Some credit grantors, for example, are concerned only about whether all your payments are on time. Others look only at a consumer's current account balances in relation to the total credit limit.

Monitoring allowed by law. What gives lenders the right to look at an individual's credit history at any time?

CONSUMER FOCUS

First, federal law considers account monitoring to be a legitimate business activity. Second, you gave the lender permission to access your credit report from time to time when you signed your credit application.

Account monitoring helps you as a credit-active consumer. When lenders effectively manage the business risk of extending credit, their losses are minimized, and they don't have to pass others' bad debts on to you.

What are inquiries? When a consumer's payment history is reviewed or monitored, an inquiry appears on the individual's credit report. The word inquiry refers to someone — you or a TRW customer — asking to view your credit report.

There are different types of inquiries. One is the account monitoring inquiry discussed above. Another occurs when a potential lender reviews your report after you apply for new credit.

At TRW, account monitoring inquiries stay on your report for six months. (In Maryland and Vermont, state law requires to remain for one year.) Most other inquiries remain on a credit report for one to two years.

Applying for new credit. When you apply for new credit, the potential lender will not see inquiries made for the purposes of account monitoring, unsolicited credit offers or your own request for a copy of your credit report.

This protects you as a credit-active consumer because excessive inquiries for credit purposes may make lenders uncertain about extending you additional credit.

Why? Inquiries indicate you've applied for new credit, which could result in additional debt.

On the other hand, account monitoring inquiries are not relevant to a potential lender because they do not indicate increased financial obligations. Therefore, lenders have no need to see them.

Consumers see all inquiries. You, however, have a right to see both types of inquiries, so both appear on your TRW credit report under the section "Your credit history was reviewed by."

The first group of inquiries are those initiated by your request for new credit.

Account monitoring inquiries appear second under this description. "The following inquiries are not reported to those who ask to review your credit history. They are included so that you have a complete list of inquiries."

(Barbara Hughes/Gregg is the Seminole County Extension manager. Inquiries may be directed to her at the Cooperative Extension Service, 520 W. County Home Road, Sanford, FL 32770 or phone 329-3222, Ext. 3036.)

Always give kids their ticket stubs

DEAR ABBY: I hope you will agree that this item is worth reprinting. I found it while looking through a stack of back issues of old magazines. It was in the "Letters" section of Better Homes and Gardens. I think it is a pertinent reminder to all parents of young children.

THELMA BRAND, SEASIDE, CALIF.

LOST AT THE BALLPARK
"While attending a baseball game at Fenway Park in Boston, I noticed a child who, upon returning from the snack bar, was unable to find where his family was seated. He found a security guard who immediately asked if he had a ticket stub. Fortunately, the youngster had a stub in his pocket, and the guard escorted him back to his family's seating section."

"Parents should remember to give children their ticket stubs in case they become lost while attending crowded events."

ELLIS PERRE, BELTON, MISS.

DEAR THELMA AND ELLIS: This is a good suggestion for anyone — young or old.

DEAR ABBY: I am an 18-year-old girl and a recent graduate from high school. I have an older brother who graduated two years ago. My problem: My brother didn't receive a gift or card from our grandfather and his new wife, but I received a very nice gift.

My mother and I agreed that it wouldn't be fair to my brother if I accepted the gift, so I promptly returned it with a thank-you note. I explained (in the note) my reason for returning it, and thanked them for thinking of me.

When I attended a birthday gathering for our grandfather, I was snubbed by him and his new wife.

Abby, was it wrong for me to have returned their gift?

HUST IN KANSAS

DEAR HUST: Yes. For you to have returned the gift — even with your mother's approval — was incredibly rude. Your grandfather's failure to send your brother a graduation gift two years ago did not justify your insulting retaliation. You owe your grandfather an apology.

DEAR ABBY: I have been umpiring both men's and women's softball leagues for 30 years, and I have had my share of verbal abuse, but last Saturday I was KO'd by an irate female player.

After a close call at home plate, I called the runner safe. The first basewoman ran up to the plate and began calling me every name in the book. I told her to get out of my face. When she wouldn't let up, I told her she was ejected from the game.

I suddenly found myself lying on the ground. My jaw was numb. A crowd had gathered, and some were daring me to get up and fight. I wasn't fully aware that the woman had hit me until I got back on my feet and saw her standing over me with her dukes up, ready to hit me again. I instinctively raised my hands as if to say "enough" — when she hit me again and broke my nose! Realizing she might seriously injure me if this continued, I said, "I've had enough!"

Abby, I am 43 years old, stand 5 foot 8 inches tall and weigh 180 pounds. The female who attacked me stands 5 foot 3 and weighs about 150. She played four years of college basketball on a scholarship. How can I be expected to defend myself against someone 30 pounds heavier, a head taller and 20 years younger — male or female?

I am sick of being ridiculed. Will you please tell my wife and friends that I am not a wimp?

LETTERS SENT IN ATLANTA

DEAR BETTIE: I was KO'd by an irate female player. In a civilized society, men are taught from childhood that men should not hit women. You proved you were a gentleman, not a wimp.

However, you broke the (unwritten) cardinal rule: Never remove your mask during an altercation.

P.S. As for the Amazon who hit you, she should be traded to the Giants.

DEAR READERS: Funny, but profound: "Kissing is a means of getting two people as close together that they can't see anything wrong with each other."

BEING YASMIN

(Problem? Write to Dear Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Dear Abby, P.O. Box 6448, Los Angeles, CA 90064. All correspondence is confidential.)

Sad woman may be victim of SAD

DEAR MARY: This is my kids' last week of school and we're planning a trip to visit my family in Georgia next week. I love my family and want to see them again. I really should be feeling real good with no schedules for a while, visiting with the people I love, and generally, taking it easy.

The problem is, all I want to do is by myself, watch TV and not deal with anybody or anything. I'm having trouble sleeping. I don't want to eat and I don't even want to be around food long enough to fix decent meals for my family.

My husband is a real good guy and keeps asking me what's wrong. The problem is, I don't know what's wrong but it sure isn't going away. I'm afraid I might be having a nervous breakdown or something. What should I do to pull myself out of this?

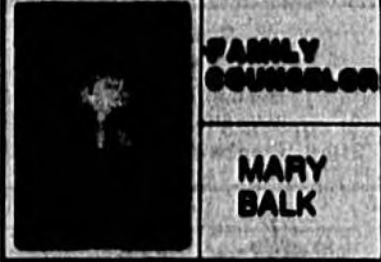

SAD AND LAST FOR NO REASON

DEAR MARY: It's good that you are in touch with your feelings and are concerned.

Women are apparently afflicted with this problem more often than men. While people experiencing winter SAD are often reacting to a lack of sunshine, heat may be the impetus for summer SAD.

Try making yourself cooler when you are feeling really low and see if it improves your mood and your other symptoms. If your problem persists, it may be wise to seek treatment to determine whether something more serious might be causing your discomfort.

Swedes perform at Holy Cross

SUSAN WENNER

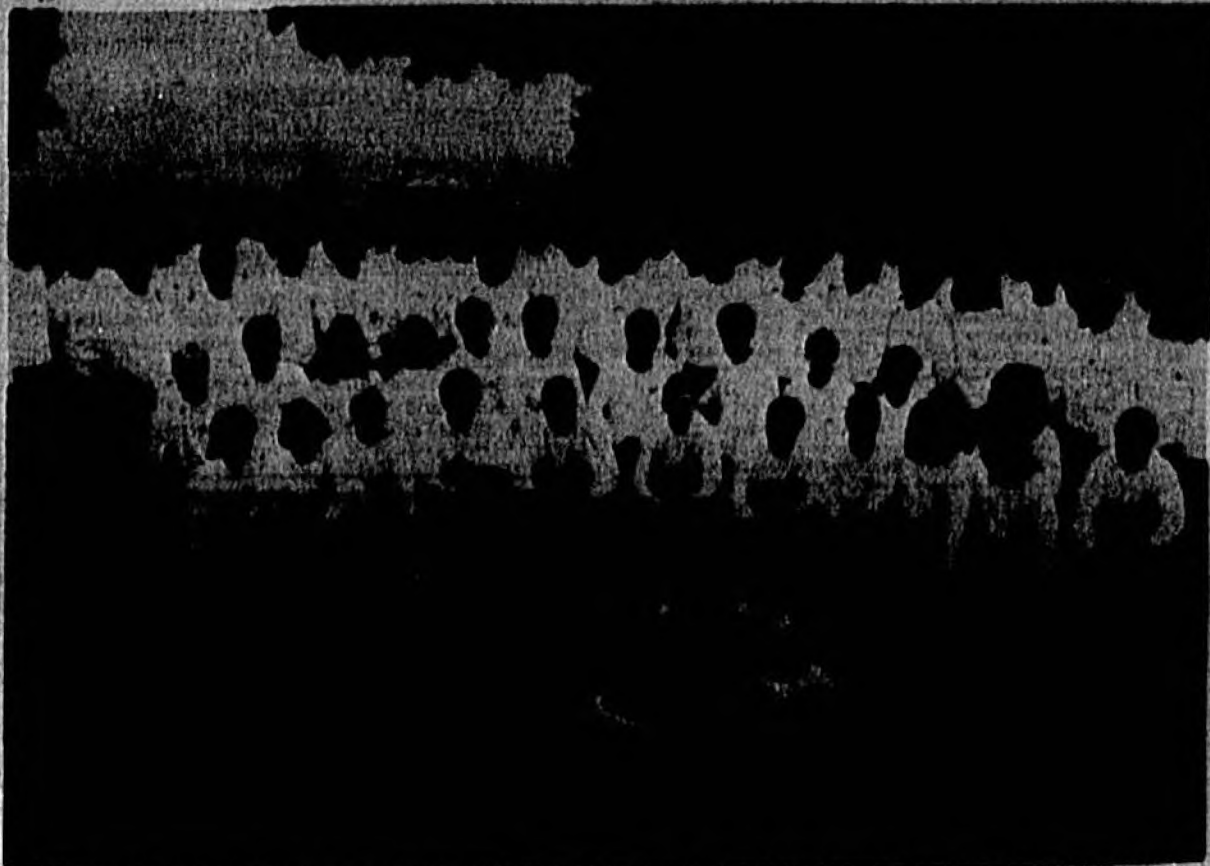

LAKE MARY — Holy Cross Episcopal Church, 760 Sun Dr., will host a 66-member group of Christian musicians from Sweden. The group will perform at Holy Cross and Lake Mary City Hall.

The young people will be touring the state of Florida from June 15 through July 2. They will perform at Holy Cross on Saturday, June 24 at 7:30 p.m. and Lake Mary City Hall Amphitheater at 10 a.m. on Sunday, June 25.

They are known in Sweden as the "Roko Musikkor." "Roko" is the name of a small southern Swedish village from which they come. "Musikkor" translates into "music corps."

According to Pastor Paul Hoyer, "their music is excellent. Several years ago, when they visited America, the head of a university music department in Dallas, Texas heard them and commented, 'That's some of the best brass I've heard since Tommy Dorsey.'"

The group was founded in 1955 with just 10 boys playing brass instruments, directed by the father of the current director, Ingemar Karp. Today there are 65 members in this group.

Swedish group, "Roko Musikkor" ranging in age from 15 to 30.

They are making their fifth visit to the United States, having previously toured Norway, Denmark, Germany and Great Britain. They have also performed on Swedish television and radio.

The Young Musicians from Sweden's repertoire includes a fantastic variety of music such as Swedish folksongs, classical music, hymns, light music, jazz and contemporary Christian music, especially arranged for this group.

Assistant pastor, David Schilling, also commented, "This has been planned for several months. It's different and a bit unusual. It shows what Christian young people are doing in other countries. We always go to other countries and share the Gospel. It's great to know that other countries can come here and share their faith. We hope people's hearts will be touched. We planned this as an outreach for the community."

Ask the preacher Bible questions

Question: Does the Bible condemn the use of "credit?"

Answer: The answer is No. The New Testament details very little about the use of credit but the Old Testament testimony is extensive. Credit or borrowing was an economic necessity with the Jews and God gives them direction in Scripture. Some of the passages that govern the extending and collection of debt are found in Exodus 22:14-15; Deuteronomy 15:1-11; Psalms 37:21; Proverbs 9:27-28 and Proverbs 23:7.

In Deuteronomy 28:12, God instructed Israel to give of their bounty to other nations but not to borrow from them. This was to be a national policy not a private prohibition against personal credit. In Matthew 5:42, Jesus speaks favorably of extending credit. However, these passages teach us that we should be very careful about getting into debt when we are not paying a debt. Everything depends upon how you manage (or mismanage) it.

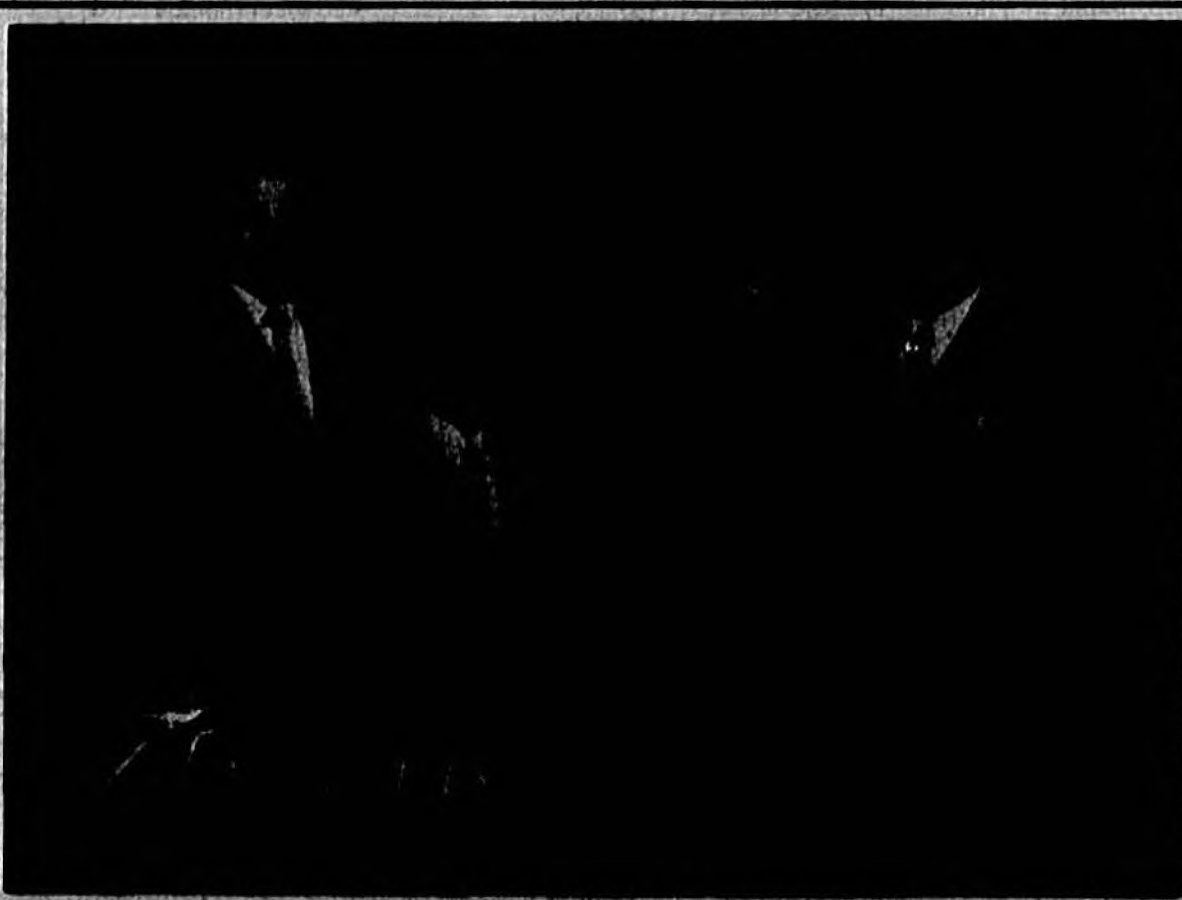

Credit is the American way. But it can cause us grief. I read an interesting quote from Howard Dayton, Jr. this week. He stated: "The modern American is a person who drives a bank financed car over a bond financed highway on credit card gas to open a charge account at a department store so that he can fill his savings and loan home with installment purchased furniture."

Credit is a "necessity" but many of us could use some "plastic surgery" to help us manage the debt load. God wants us to be responsible about our debts and honest in our dealings.

What's the cure for aching legs?

DEAR DR. GOTT: I'm an elderly female with aching legs. I take vitamins E, C, lecithin, calcium, iron and magnesium. Am I taking too many vitamins and is this what's causing the severe pain?

DEAR READER: Aching legs in the elderly can be caused by a variety of factors, chiefly bad circulation from arteriosclerosis. Other causes include nocturnal leg cramps (spasms at night) and restless legs syndrome (uncontrollable aching and restlessness, usually at night). If your symptom is due to deficient circulation, you will need specialized testing, such as an arteriogram, to identify the location and extent of the arterial blockages. If the occlusions are severe, you may have to consider surgery to unblock the arteries.

Nocturnal leg cramps are often helped by quinine, and restless legs frequently respond to the prescription drug Permax. You should be examined by your family physician to discover the reason your legs ache.

To give you more information on the numerous vitamins you are taking, I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "Fads I: Vitamins and Minerals."

DEAR DR. GOTT: I have an inflammation in my chest wall, under my breast. This has persisted for six months, causing extreme pain in my chest and back, along with shortness of breath. My doctor has me on Anasid 100 mg for control, but the problem doesn't go away.

DEAR READER: The type of chest pain that you describe could have many causes, ranging from lung inflammation and pleurisy to blood clots, inflamed muscles between the ribs or diseases of a rib itself. For example, tumors may form in (or spread to) a rib, causing pain and difficulty breathing. If your doctor, using blood tests, X-rays and other tests, has

BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder

In England, if you wish to elope and marry, you drive to Gretna Green. It is the first town across the Scottish border, where the laws are more flexible. In the United States, it is traditional to fly to Las Vegas. Innumerable ministers wait to perform the brief ceremony.

There is an elopement in bridge, too. Today's deal is an example.

West's bid of two no-trump, following South's strong two-over-one response, showed a minor two-suiter.

After ducking the diamond-king lead and winning the diamond-queen continuation, how should South have continued?

The declarer played very well. Aware that no suit could be expected to divide evenly, South cashed his two top hearts. He continued with a spade to dummy's king and cashed the spade ace, being happy to see West discard. South ruffed a spade in his hand, ruffed a diamond in the dummy, ruffed a spade in his hand, played a club to dummy's ace and ruffed dummy's last spade in his hand. South's 10 tricks were two top spades, two top hearts, the diamond ace, the club ace, one diamond ruff in the dummy and three spade ruffs in his hand. We say that South eloped with his trumps because he scored tricks with them before East could do anything about it.

Although it probably didn't make any difference on this deal, West's bid was inadvisable. Particularly at the prevailing vulnerability, East-West rated not to win the auction. So, it was pointless for West to warn his opponents about the bad distribution floating around.
