Sundown Stories By BARY GRAHAM BONNER

The Tumble
Mr. Quacko lifted the chicken with one wing up to his shoulder and started the procession back through the woods to the pond. The chicken's feet felt a little better, but the darkness that was coming along more rapidly now made him feel quite frightened, even though he was with his kindly collection of ducks.

He had never really known any ponds. There had been a few in a pond near the barnyard where he had been born, but they had frightened him with their noisy chatter, their constant splashes, their love of that awful thing they called the pond. And yet he was lost and alone and he had to trust these ducks or go back to the woods with his landlaid feet and then what might happen?

He was so young. He did not know the woods. The woods were even darker than where they were now. Wild, strange animals roamed in the woods. Oh, he wished to be a little older, knew a little more.

And then a dreadful thought came to him. Perhaps these ducks would take him back to their pond and toss him into the water to cure his feet without knowing he couldn't swim, without realizing he dreads water.

Or maybe they were enemies that could do even greater harm than that.

Nervous he wiggled around on Mr. Quacko's shoulder, and Mr. Quacko in his hurry to get home was waddling more unevenly than ever. The chicken thought of his tiedup feet. Had the ducks really

Concrete Roads Need 'Vacation' For Longest Wear

University Experts Show Elasticity Of Cement Highways

ITHACA, N. Y., Aug. 25.—(AP)—That concrete highways can rest and regain their strength when traffic is light is demonstrated in tests at Cornell university.

In these tests, square bars of concrete the thickness of pavement and several feet long are subjected to poundings like those from heavy traffic until they break. This reveals the practical strength of various mixtures and thicknesses.

Highway concrete is slightly elastic. It bends and stretches a bit under the weight of each passing vehicle. These traffic flexions in the concrete are reproduced in the Cornell laboratory.

If each stress is not more than half of the force necessary to break the bar, the concrete will stand six to seven million stresses before it breaks.

But if the individual stresses reach two-thirds or three-quarters of the concrete's breaking strength, the material will stand only 200,000 to 300,000 of them.

The ability of the concrete to "rest" is shown by interrupting the stress machine from time to time. Some initial stresses, if continued long enough, will cause a drop of about 40 percent in the concrete's tensile strength. That is, a weight 40 percent less than required at first would break the concrete.

But if the stress is stopped for awhile and the concrete given a complete rest from pressure, it recovers its original tensile strength.

No such recovery occurs, however, if the concrete has been overstrained. That is, overloading it too much beyond the 40 percent limit leaves the concrete permanently weakened. In this respect pavement is like the human constitution.

In practice this means that highways on which traffic virtually stops at night, may not need to be quite as good in tensile strength as similar roads with 24-hour traffic.

Talks To Parents By Brooke Peters Church

LET HIM CRY

"I simply can't bear to listen to the baby cry. It gets on my nerves so that I could scream myself."

The result of Mrs. Brown's oversensitiveness and lack of self-control was that she had to put up with a crying child most of the time. For, once a child learns that he can get his own way if he cries loud and long enough, he cries for everything, and is apt to carry the habit over into later life, only changing the noisy expression of babyhood into moody sulks or raging tempers.

A certain amount of crying is good for a child. It stretches his lungs, stirs up his circulation, and since it is generally accompanied by waving arms and legs, ends by exercising the whole body. It is good for a baby to put half an hour a day into lusty yelling, and the mother who is too tender-hearted to listen to the noise had better put cotton in her ears and train her mind to hear of something else.

The baby who cries for attention should certainly not be picked up and played with. He is already showing signs of being spoiled, and the sooner his bad habits are broken, the better for all concerned.

If he is well fed and comfortable, he should be able to lie in his crib quite happily for the short time he is awake. If he chooses to cry, let him cry himself to sleep.

All that is needed from the mother is self-control. She is not showing real love or kindness when she takes the baby up every time he whimpers. She is merely being self-indulgent and actually harming the child.

Some day he must learn that he cannot have whatever he cries for, and, tiny though he seems, he can learn much of the lesson before he walks and talks.

Most of Hannibal's troops were terrified at the sight of snow when they crossed the Alps. They had never seen snow before.

"Dodge Scores a Bull's-Eye With Me"

Says MAJOR M. E. TRULL, Noted Marksman

My experience as a marksman has made me intolerant of anything mechanical that is not efficient...

I haven't found another car that has all the safety features combined in one car that my Dodge has...

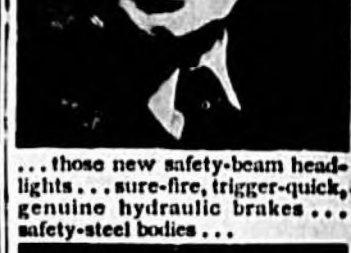

... those new safety-beam headlights... sure-fire, trigger-quick, genuine hydraulic brakes... safety-steel bodies...

And here's the "clincher"... I'm getting many more miles to the gallon of gasoline than I ever got before, and this big, new Dodge "Beauty Winner" is saving me at least 20% on oil... that's my experience with the big, new Mousie-Saving Dodge!

Major Trull is only one of the thousands of Dodge owners everywhere who tell us about the amazing economy of their cars... who say Dodge gives them from 18 to 24 miles per gallon of gasoline. And many of them say Dodge is actually costing them less to own than small, competitive makes!

See this new Dodge today! Drive it! Take the free economy test—see how Dodge saves on gasoline! Then you will understand why more people buy Dodge cars than any other make with the exception of the three lowest-priced cars!

Among those invited are Congressman R. E. "Lex" Green of Starke, Joe E. Hendricks of DeLand, Democratic nominee for congressman from the new Fifth District, Judge C. O. Nations Say Spain Must Keep Civil War Well In Hand

England, Germany Order Men-Of-War To Retaliate If They Are Fired On

U. S. Determined To Stay Neutral

II Duce Will Accept No Pact Without Moral Neutrality

(By The Associated Press) Stern orders to keep Spain's civil war in bounds were flashed today to the warship bridges of two great powers—Great Britain and Germany.

England, adopting a similar policy to that of the Reich, served notice on Madrid that British warships will fire warning shots, "abstain" if they are fired upon by Spanish vessels.

Yesterday Germany, enraged by the reported search of a German merchant ship by a loyalist Spanish warship, ordered its men-of-war to answer "force with force."

That drew all the tighter the gathering international lines between Fascism and Socialist-Communist blocs.

Britain, however, made it clear her action, announced today, was independent of the Reich.

Hours of anxiety spurred by reports of revolt in Portugal gave way to relief when rumors fell short of confirmation.

The United States, determined as ever to remain "scrupulously aloof from the chaos on the Iberian peninsula," urged a peace-making in the dispute.

Other large countries in the Americas previously had indicated they desired to take no such action at this time.

Premier Mussolini, his troops in a state of readiness, was reported reliably to have directed his envoys to sound out foreign reaction to an abandonment of the neutrality negotiations in the conflict. II Duce was determined to accept no agreement that did not provide moral as well as practical neutrality.

He was equally determined, informed observers believed, to permit no strong Socialist state to arise from an aftermath of the civil war.
