

ANSONIA, May 30.—(A.P.)—The audience at the Ansonia picture house was surprised to find a film that will set records right on a few moral grounds is no less than the picture of a young girl, E. Anderson Jardine, who married Wallis Simpson to the Duke of Windsor. Deprived of his throne, the duke fled to the United States, saw room for reform, and turned to the movies the way to effect it. The picture is a sensational one, showing the girl from the very start when she left home, the clergyman married her in his role of talent agent, she to Fern Hall, a famous blonde of Toledo. The picture is a comedy, and the couple are treated with a chapter, to church regularly and other smokes nor drinks. Dr. Anderson Jardine, appearing, all the time, as a young girl, I am trying to do is to show that a girl can be beautiful and virtuous at the same time. "In other words, I am depicting the tough girl," the picture is a film production is to expose the same kind of literature, partly to juveniles. He wanted it simply "undeniable," but says that "undeniable" is a word that will be titled.

He sketched the plot as follows:

The heroine (Miss Spiritual) is engaged to a man named Horace, who is secretly making his living by taking dirty pictures of the high school maids.

Realizing himself from going to church with her, he employs the Sunday in question to rig up a scheme to break the contest, pick a winner and consign her to "a fate worse than death."

The smash scene is at the church when Horace and Miss Spiritual are about to marry. In the midst of the ceremony, accompanied by the great crusader and reformer, Dr. Britton, and the both denounce Horace as her betrayer.

The marriage takes place behind a veil, places it on the girl's head, and she and Horace are wed on the spot "to give their child a name."

The role of crusading Dr. Britton is played by Dr. Jardine himself.

WAR TAX ON FIRECRACKERS
SINGAPORE, May 30.—Every time a Chinese in Singapore fires a cracker, he will help to buy munitions for the Allies. This is the effect of a new war tax on Chinese firecrackers in the colony. The crackers, thousands of which are imported annually for Chinese residents, are fired on all Chinese holidays and during semi-religious ceremonies.

Not a mile from the French city of Sedan, where now the long-winded "great battle of the west" has raged, lies the largest American War Cemetery at Remagen-Montfaucon.

The very crosses which mark the graves of 14,000 Americans buried on this peaceful hillside—only a fraction of the nearly 100,000 who died in the campaign of the Sedan action—may seem odd and shatter under the bombardment of the guns which for those aligning these deathbeds.

Sedan, now captured by the blithering Nazi columns, was the objective of the greatest American action ever fought. Its name is needed in many memories by time and forgotten incidents in the great offensive whose objective it was. To millions of Americans such names as Argonne, Meuse, Argonne, Argonne ("Oregon"), "Lost Battalion," and "Sargent York are bywords. Few remember the fame of these names stems from the peak for Sedan.

From Belgium, the German border from Belgium, the German has long known the meaning and horrors of war. In the center of the small city still stands an ancient in the time of Joan of Arc. In 1870, the Prussians drove the French at Sedan. There the French Emperor, Napoleon III, was captured, the second French empire was overthrown. In the first World War the Germans took the French through it, the Metz-Longwy-Sedan-Munster railway. Over the roads were carried the all-iron communication lines, with all the Reich communications in the Rhine. Could this time, this time be so reversed, the Jews be vain of German resistance?

It was on the shoulders of the American army, from American front lines, the allied high command put the burden of the German war in these fields of 1918.

The doughboys started from a base 10 miles wide, between the Apennine Forest and the Mennar river. Sedan was the apex of the offensive. The Germans had the two divisions of the First Army, I, III, and V Corps (which started the campaign) and their divisions lay ground while German tanks and aircraft did "kiss and tell" fighting.

The great push started with German artillery barrage at 1:10 a.m. in the morning of May 7, 1918. During the day, the 47 days and nights, "there were 1,500 men sent the action every day. During the next 47 days and nights over 500,000 men were committed to the attack. Some were killed outright, others not so lucky.

The movement was the rain of steel. Robert told that the serges from all over the Reich to hurl into the widening breach against the heretofore untried doughboys.

Nov. 6, 1918, on orders from General Pershing himself, the "race for Sedan" began. The American general desired that "the honor of entering Sedan should fall to the First American Army," and the effect was submitted to Congress today a supplemental emergency defense program, involving "over a billion dollars," and asked action without delay.

WASHINGTON, May 31.

(AP)—President Roosevelt

The latest enlargement of the military program is necessitated, Roosevelt said in his message to the legislature, because of the "almost incredible events" in past few weeks in Europe's war—specifically as a result of the use of aviation and mechanized equipment.

"No individual, no group can clearly foretell the future," he asserted. "As long, however, as a possibility exists that not one continent or two continents but all continents may become involved in a world wide war, reasonable precaution demands that American defense be made more certain."

One most obvious lesson taught by the conflict raging overseas, he said, "is the value of the factor of speed."

"There is a definite danger in waiting to order the conscription of our reserves until after a war begins. Therefore I urge speed in the enactment of the program for mobilization and training in the field of our defense needs."

He mentioned no specific figures.

drawal operations had been carried out to date "with great skill and daring."

"The German high command has failed to have sufficient very large losses on naval vessels and transports which they protect," the Admiralty said, "and thus these bear no relation to facts."

The withdrawal was facilitated by the heroic stand at Calais of the small British force sent to France last week to maintain communications.

This force, which arrived just in time to find that the main body of the British expeditionary force was withdrawing toward Dunkerque, proved "of invaluable assistance" in the retreat, the communicate said.

"With scant ammunition it accomplished heroic deeds in the annals of the British army."

The communicate did not say exactly what happened to the German troops. It merely said "its refusal to surrender Calais until it completed heavy and

Nazis Claim Sinking Of Battleship Nelson

Guns Of Fleet Cover Allied Retreat. Loss Of Dreadnaught Would Be Biggest To British Navy Since War Began.

This map shows the principal theater of action in war-torn Europe, where Allied troops pocketed in Flanders were reported escaping to England amid fierce fighting. Big guns of the Allied fleet were brought into play to drop a protective barrage of fire and steel around the French "escape port" of Dunkirk.

The sinking of the 35,000-ton battleship Nelson, flagship of the British home fleet, was reported in Berlin today as the Nazi armies wheeled in an attack on the Somme River. The Allies line guarding Paris.

The announcement, by authorized German sources, said 700 of her crew of 1,200 was lost but how, and where the ship was sunk was not reported immediately. The loss of the dreadnaught completed in 1927, would be the heaviest single blow the British navy has suffered since the war started.
