City Eyes Gas Tax Funds For Everything But Roads

By Donna Estes
Herald Staff Writer

While other cities in the county are discussing which road needs will be addressed with their share of the revenues from the county's new 4-cent per gallon gas tax, city fathers in Lake Mary have pushed road needs aside.

The city commission at a budget workshop talked about using the $30,000 it expects to receive from the

$3 million revenues from the new tax in 1983-84 for the following combined or single projects:

- Reduction of the property tax rate.
- To pay off the $23,000 owed for the purchase of the parking lot adjacent to city hall.
- To pay off an outstanding loan of $10,000.
- To purchase a police car.

Mayor Walter Sorenson told the commission the state law authorizing the tax does not restrict use of the revenues. He added, however, that the people in Lake Mary who opposed the tax imposed by the county commission might feel better if they could see road improvements resulting.

But, he said, the thought has been expressed to him that the city, after converting the $30,000 to quarters, might fill a pickup truck with the coins and go around town dispensing them to city's children to buy an ice cream.

While not acting on that suggestion, the commission disshelve a priority list of road needs from Public Works Director Jim Orloles.

Commissioner Ray Fox said, "There is nothing sacred to the hearts of the people in paying increased taxes" and asked why the tax rate could not be dropped by using the funds.

Commissioner Rurt Perinchief said he was not

Police Car Sliced In Two

A Winter Springs police patrol car was torn in two Friday when the vehicle went out of control on a rain-slick highway and struck a concrete utility pole.

The driver, Patrolman Craig Heber, 21, suffered only minor injuries, a bump on the head and was treated at the Florida Hospital in Altamonte Springs and released.

Heber was eastbound on State Road 434 at about 3:16 p.m. when he applied the brakes on the 1982 Dodge. The car jumped the curb and hit a pole at the Sherry Street intersection, according to the Florida Highway Patrol.

Heber was responding as backup to a burglar alarm at 560 Dunmar Circle, according to Winter Springs police records. At the time he had his flashing light and siren on, the FHP said.

The Highway Patrol was investigating the accident Saturday morning. There was no word on the patrol car's speed at the time of the mishap.

Heber was taken to Florida Hospital-Altamonte where he was treated for a bump on the head and released.

His father, Chester Heber, said Saturday morning the officer was "out and about".

Winter Springs firefighters responded to the accident scene and hosed down spilled gasoline. Wrecker drivers from Spanky's Garage in Longwood had to make two trips to tow away the divided automobile. The front portion of the car landed off the roadway in a shallow ditch.

According to the log of the police shift on duty at the time, Heber was responding to what turned out to be a false alarm, possibly triggered by the weather.

The rear of the car is towed.

Local Executives Tapped To Recruit Business To State

By Jane Casselberry
Herald Staff Writer

Executives of two Sanford firms are among a select group of the state's top executives invited to participate in the new "Business Ambassadors" program designed to lure select companies to Florida.

W.T. Nolan, vice president of Cardinal Industries, Inc., the nation's largest modular apartment builder and developer, and J. Rushon Bailey, president of Rush-Hampton, a major manufacturer and marketer in the housewares industry, are being asked to develop top-level contacts with a minimum of four of the Fortune 1000 companies listed by the state for special recruitment efforts. Nolan and Bailey were among the senior business executives from 23 of the state's leading industries who attended a luncheon in Tampa this week to discuss the program. They were invited by Lt. Governor Wayne Mixson, who said the program "is designed to utilize the expertise and the resources of the private sector to attract more business and investment and create jobs in Florida."

Mixson, who also serves as Secretary of Commerce, and officials of the Florida Department of Commerce Division of Economic Development met at the Marriott Hotel at the Tampa International Airport with the participating business leaders.

Nolan called the new program a "unique and practical plan" and a "very sophisticated approach in a very competitive marketplace."

"Only two or three of the business leaders were from the Tampa-St. Petersburg area which meant they had to fly or drive several hours to get there," said Nolan. "They were asked to serve four or five months ago. There was a lot of talent represented there from some pretty hefty companies. To get a day's consulting from them—if they were available—would cost about $1,000 an hour and the state was getting their advice for free." "We had a fairly deep 2½-hour roundtable discussion in the afternoon," he said. "The Florida Department of Commerce is recognized as one of the better in the U.S. from the industrial development standpoint."

Mixson said the Business Ambassadors, from such companies as Martin-Marietta, Bendix Corporation, Honeywell, IBM, and United Technology, represent a cross-section of the industries located in the five regions of the state and are well-qualified to discuss Florida's business assets.

"They will have a free hand to promote the state, working one-on-one with top officials of the targeted companies, and will be assisted in their efforts by the Department of Commerce Division of Economic Development," he said, adding that the Business Ambassadors program will continue for

Aid Pact Wipes Away Political Boundaries

By Micheal Beha
Herald Staff Writer

At a July 26 roof collapse in Altamonte Springs the first unit on the scene was from Altamonte, the second from Seminole County and the third from Altamonte.

Minutes later, a second alarm sounded and another unit from the city and the county were dispatched to the scene.

A third alarm sounded and two additional county units were sent to the disaster.

A fire a few days later at Lake Kathryn Estates near Casselberry elicited a similar response. The first unit on the scene was from Longwood and the second was from Seminole County. On a second alarm, an Altamonte Springs unit arrived on the scene.

Fire department officials in the county, Altamonte Springs and Longwood say the arrangement between them that makes such cooperation possible is a good deal for everyone involved because it delivers fire, rescue and emergency service in the shortest possible time.

"If you're having a heart attack you don't care what the patch on the man's sleeve says," said Seminole County Public Safety Director Gary Kaiser. "You just want the quickest response possible."

Political boundaries have been wiped away between the three entities, said Assistant Altamonte Springs Fire Chief George Gaston. Whenever a fire, emergency or rescue call is received in the three areas, the closest unit is dispatched to the scene.

Altamonte Springs has had a working agreement with Seminole County since 1976. The agreement, according to Gaston, has helped

Sanford Doc Spots Castro Pals Leading El Salvador Guerillas

By Donna Estes
Herald Staff Writer

A Sanford physician says several El Salvador rebel leaders are Cuban communists.

Dr. Luis Perez, a noted authority on Latin America, Cuban communism and Cuban dictator Fidel Castro, said he recognized the rebels from published photographs and has sent dossiers on them to the U.S. House of Representatives.

"They are Cuban communists I knew," said Dr. Perez, whose name was included on a list of men condemned to death in absentia as traitors by Castro when he came to power in 1960.

Perez said he sent similar dossiers to the Organization of American States.

"The guerillas are controlled by Castro people. They were ex-friends of mine from the Cuban armed forces who come from Cuba through Nicaragua into El Salvador," Perez said.

He said he sent the information to the Congress because there seems to be doubt in the minds of some that the rebels are communists.

But even as an authority on the area, Perez was

NATION

IN BRIEF

Continental Will Fly Despite Worker Walkout

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Mechanics and other workers went on strike today against Continental Airlines but the nation's eighth largest airline vowed to continue operating at least 85 percent of its flights.

The walkout of 2,000 union employees came at 12:01 a.m. EDT after a 30-day "cooling off" period expired in negotiations to replace a contract that expired Dec. 31, 1981.

Continental said it would continue to operate 501 of its 590 regular flights, using supervisors, non-union mechanics and 500 outside personnel to do work normally handled by the strikers. The airline serves 108 cities on four continents and carried 11.3 million passengers last year.

The Air Line Pilots Association said its 1,600 members at Continental would continue to work until their leaders could decide whether to honor the picket lines, which went up immediately after the strike deadline.

Chrysler Pays Up Early

NEW YORK (UPI) — Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca made the final installment on the $1.2 billion government-insured loan that saved his company from bankruptcy, saying he was "ecstatic about getting out of hock."

Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca declared his company's financial independence Friday with a check for $813 million, paying off the 1980 loan seven years ahead of schedule.

The check for $813,487,500 — the final two-thirds of the $1.2 billion borrowed from private investors as well as interest and fees to the government — was presented to Edwin Heard, vice chairman of the U.S. Trust Co.

The repayment came seven years ahead of schedule and completes Chrysler's three-year recovery, which was underwritten by the federal Loan Guarantee Act in 1980. Chrysler paid back the first $400 million in June.

WEATHER

NATIONAL REPORT: The remnants of Hurricane Ismael, dying 600 miles off the Southern California coast, whipped up high seas that drowned a woman at Laguna Beach, Calif. and caused a mudslide in Utah. A thunderstorm on the Gulf Coast was blamed for an airplane crash that killed two people. In Oregon, gusting winds hindered and then aided efforts Friday night to prevent a forest fire from engulfing a central Oregon town. Thunderstorms skipped across the Great Plains but failed to lower temperatures that soared past the century mark from Texas to South Dakota. Rain cooled off the Northeast with temperatures in the 50s and 60s. Three tornadoes were reported in Prospect, Colo. Rhonda Santos, 20, Rockford, Ill., drowned Friday morning when she was swept to sea while walking through rocky tide pools at Laguna Beach, Calif. National Weather Service forecasters said the danger of erosion caused by high waves continued to exist on the California coast. Ismael was downgraded to a tropical storm Friday and the National Weather Service forecasters said Ismael would weaken even more during the weekend, but cautioned in a special statement that "the potential for heavy rain will exist." An NWS spokeswoman said the storm was about 600 miles southwest of San Diego and was slowly moving north. Crews east of Salt Lake City worked to open a road that was closed when a flash flood roared through the area and caused a mudslide. The flash flood in Big Cottonwood Canyon was started by two hours of heavy rain that pounded the Wasatch Mountains east of Salt Lake City. NWS forecasters said more heavy rain could hit the area as the residue from Ismael arrived. Davis County residents near streams were put on alert for the possibility of flooding.

Americans are getting older, on the national average. The reasons are the aging of the postwar baby boom generation, postponement of childbearing, and longer average life spans which means more older Americans. The oldest generation is still far outnumbered by the youngest.

Campers Endangered During Pot Harvest

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — It's harvest time in the marijuana fields of the Northwest and officials are warning people to be careful in remote areas and leave immediately if they come across a crop of the illegal weed.

State and federal officials say growers could be heavily armed and sometimes booby-trap their crops, using methods similar to those employed by the North Vietnamese in the Vietnam war.

"If they are going hiking in remote areas or where they run into a situation that appears to be a marijuana situation, they would be very smart to turn around and leave," said State Police Lt. J.A. Forney, who coordinates marijuana enforcement with local and federal agencies.

"In past years there have been a few occasions where people are intimidated by persons with military-type clothing and weapons," he said Friday.

Homemade explosive devices also have been found in marijuana fields, he said.

"They are kind of like booby traps found in Vietnam that the guerrillas used there," he said. Many use nearly invisible fish lines tied across trails to trip the device, which "is guided to explode toward the knee cap or other part of the body," he said.

Sheriff's Sgt. Alan Pendergrass of southern Oregon's Josephine County, one of the main growing areas in the state, said that while booby traps are "few and far between," alarm systems ranging from tin cans on a string to a car horn powered by a 12-volt battery are common.

Oregon's marijuana crop is estimated to be worth $400 million to $500 million, Forney said, based on growers' claims in the news media. Much of it is found in southwestern Oregon and state police estimates half is found on U.S. Bureau of Land Management property.

Median Age Climbing

American Women Still Have Men Outnumbered

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Men are gradually catching up, but women still outnumber them in the United States, especially in the big cities, the Census Bureau says.

In rural areas, men hold a slight edge, the agency said in a report.

The report also shows that the median age of the American population — the age dividing the older half from the younger half — was 30 years in 1980, up from 28.1 years a decade earlier. And the median age is continuing to climb. Last year's median age was 30.6 years. The bureau counted more than 25.5 million senior citizens in the United States in 1980, or 11.3 percent of the total population.

The Census Bureau used its new summary of general population statistics to calculate that the longtime decline in the ratio of males to females continued during the 1970s, but the rate of decline slowed.

In 1980, there were 94.5 males for each 100 females in the country, compared to 94.8 males for each 100 females in 1970, the report said.

But the exact extent of the gap depended on where people lived.

In the central cities of metropolitan areas, the ratio was 90.8 males per 100 females; but in rural areas, there were 100.1 males for every 100 females.

The gap was most pronounced for older Americans.

The 1980 statistics show that for children under age 5, there were 104.7 boys for every 100 girls. But for Americans over age 65, there were 67.6 men for every 100 women, reflecting the lower average lifespan for men.

Other factors also affect the ratio, including international migration, the numbers of Americans living abroad — particularly in the armed forces — and the extent of census coverage.

There were more males than females at the height of the European immigration early in the century, the bureau said.

In 1900, the ratio was 104.8 males to 100 females, and it hit 106.2 to 100 in 1910. By 1950, the national male-female ratio dipped below 100 for the first time, hitting 98.7 men for each 100 women.

The 30-year-old median age marked the return of the nation's population to the aging trend of pre-"baby boom" years. Before the baby boom, the median age rose from 20.9 years in 1880 to 30.1 years in 1950, then dipped down to 28.1 years in 1970.

The report also said in 1970, there were 20,065,502 people aged 65 and older, or 9.9 percent of the total population. By 1980, the figure rose to 25,549,427 senior citizens, or 11.3 percent of the total population.

While the 65-and-over population rose 27.3 percent in the past decade, the 85-plus group increased by 48.3 percent, it said.

Administration Says Reforms Will Save Billions

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The administration says federal regulatory reforms made since it took office will save the nation's private sector and state and local governments more than $150 billion in the next 10 years.

The estimate was made in a report by the Presidential Task Force on Regulatory Relief, headed by Vice President George Bush, on its 2½ years of work.

Bush announced the task force is being disbanded, having "accomplished its basic mission." It was set up in January 1981 to review existing federal regulations and monitor regulatory reform legislation in Congress.

Bush said the review machinery has been set in place, centered in the Office of Management and Budget. The task force's role in settling disputes between OMB and individual agencies now goes to Cabinet Councils.

The 10-year savings estimate is twice that reported by the council a year ago.

The panel said $110 billion of the total savings is expected to come from savings to consumers, businesses, universities, state and local governments and others as a result of less burdensome regulations, through actions to date by the administration or Congress or both.

Another $42 billion, it said, is expected to come from higher interest earned by consumers through relaxation of interest rate ceilings, and particularly from laws allowing a new Money Market Deposit Account paying market interest rates much higher than old, fixed "passbook" rates.

"These savings will continue to make an important contribution to the economic recovery now underway, without jeopardizing the environment, job or consumer safety," Bush said.

Many of the administration's regulatory changes and pending proposals have been controversial. One, rescinding a requirement for air bags or automatic seat belts in passenger cars, has been held up by the Supreme Court for further justification.

Other moves have included relaxing requirements for automobile bumpers, deregulating oil prices, easing securities registration requirements for small business, modifying rules requiring union wages on government projects, reducing paperwork for those who apply for many government programs and using "block grants" to give state and local governments more discretion in running programs.

Gasoline Ignited

Casselberry Store Guttled In $500,000 Plaza Blaze

A fire caused about $500,000 damage to six stores in the Casselberry Plaza shopping center on U.S. Highway 17-92 Friday.

The interior of Frank's Tool Box was gutted in the 5:36 p.m. blaze which authorities say started when gasoline stored in the building ignited.

Three employees of the firm were treated for smoke inhalation at the scene by fire rescue units, according to John Tilghman, Casselberry fire department investigator.

The fire spread from Frank's Tool Box to a nearby spa and a beauty shop. An insurance agency, a dry cleaning firm and a hardware store in the shopping center at 15 S. U.S. 17-92 suffered smoke damage, Tilghman said.

He said Frank's Tool Box rents out gasoline powered machinery and kept a quantity of gasoline stored in the building. Some gasoline located in the front of the store ignited in an unknown manner, Tilghman said.

Some employees of the firm tried to extinguish the blaze with pressurized water fire extinguishers, "and, of course, that only spreads a gasoline fire," said Tilghman.

He estimated damages to Frank's Tool Box at $300,000 and damages to the other five businesses at about $200,000.

Runaway, Drugs And Radar Cloud U.S.-Soviet Relations

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Three isolated incidents — involving a teenage runaway, a possible frame-up in a Soviet prison camp, and a suspicious Soviet military project — have thrown a shadow over U.S.-Soviet relations.

The incidents occur at a time when U.S. and Soviet officials have been exploring the possibility of a high-level meeting, perhaps at the foreign minister level in Madrid, Spain, or perhaps even an East-West summit.

The incident being treated most seriously centers on photographs taken by a U.S. surveillance satellite over central Siberia showing the construction of a huge new radar complex, 500 feet by 300 feet, near the heart of Soviet missile fields directed at the United States.

The radar system appeared to be focused to the north in the direction from which U.S. missiles would come — a position that would violate the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty.

The treaty, in which both sides gave up such costly defense systems, permits such radars only near the national command center or along the periphery of the national territory, where they would be used against aircraft, not missiles.

Defense of missile fields is seen in nuclear strategy as a destabilizing act, since it would render one side immune from a deterrent counter-attack.

The most puzzling of the three incidents involved Andrei Berezhkov, 16, son of Soviet diplomat Valentin Berezhkov, who wrote two letters, one to The New York Times and the other to President Reagan, announcing that he hates the Soviet Union and its rules, loves the United States and wants to stay in this country.

The letters, in effect seeking asylum, turned a father-son domestic problem into an international incident.

The White House confirmed receipt of a letter from the boy and said the president was aware of the youth's message.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Religious Factions Battle Government For 3rd Day

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Sniper fire kept the Beirut airport closed for a third straight day while the government struggled to prevent religious factions from plunging Lebanon into another civil war.

Gunsmen also shot at a patrol of Italian peace-keeping troops in Beirut Friday and Lebanese army troops searched for the attackers, whose identity was not known. No casualties were reported in the ambush.

Hours earlier Friday, Druze Moslem militiamen shelled army positions in the Shouf Mountains east of Beirut and opened fire on military vehicles driving near Beirut International Airport.

After forcing the airport to close and surrounding a Lebanese army unit in the mountains, the Druze sent a list of demands to the Christian-dominated government of President Amin Gemayel.

They demanded the resignation of Prime Minister Chefik Wazzan's Cabinet, the withdrawal of right-wing Christian Phalange forces from Druze-inhabited villages and a national unity conference before the Lebanese army is deployed in the mountains.

Blast Clouds Pope's Trip

LOURDES, France (UPI) — Wet skies, security problems and an expected low turnout raised fears among clergymen that Pope John Paul II's pilgrimage to Lourdes Sunday could flop.

A mysterious bomb blast that shattered a statue in the heart of the small town Friday was the latest in a series of hitches jeopardizing the success of the visit, church officials said.

Father Joseph Bordes, rector of Lourdes, initially expected a crowd of 300,000 for John Paul's 30-hour visit, the first by a reigning pontiff to the town where St. Bernadette is said to have seen the Virgin Mary 18 times starting in 1858.

But 50 of Lourdes 430 hotels still had rooms available two days before the visit and hundreds of worried pilgrims were planning to leave town in the face of threatened new attacks.

Libya Denies Intervention

TRIPOLI, Libya (UPI) — Col. Moammar Khadafy denied Libyan bombers and troops are backing the rebellion against the U.S.-aided government in neighboring Chad, where three more towns reportedly fell to the insurgents.

Speaking in separate satellite interviews Friday with four American news networks, Khadafy challenged the United States and other countries to provide evidence to back up charges of Libyan military intervention in Chad.

"We have no military activity in the air or on the ground in Chad at all," Khadafy insisted to ABC News. He also was interviewed by CBS, NBC and the Cable News Network.

He said he was waiting for a "fact-finding mission" from the Organization of African Unity to establish that his armed forces are not involved in the impoverished desert country south of Libya.

FLORIDA IN BRIEF

Graham Demands More Help In Fighting Hijackers

TALLAHASSEE (UPI) — Gov. Bob Graham is demanding the Federal Aviation Agency act more forcefully to halt the recent rash of skyjackings he said is endangering American citizens and threatening Florida's aviation industry.

"The public must be protected from the constant threat of hijackings. It is the duty of the federal government to provide such protection," Graham wrote FAA director J.Lynn Helms Friday.

The governor demanded more "sky marshals" be assigned to airliners based in or bound for Florida and he called for tighter security checks at airports on routes that "are likely to be used for hijacking purposes."

He also said President Reagan should assign FBI agents to more closely track potential hijackers.

Khadafy's Plans In Chad: Just How Far Will He Go?

TRIPOLI, Libya (UPI) — Some Western diplomats in Tripoli believe there are three motivations behind Col. Moammar Khadafy's drive into neighboring Chad.

At the very least, control of Faya-Largeau could give him increased leverage in bargaining with Chadian President Hissene Habre over the disputed Aouzou strip inside Chad's northwestern border, which Libya has long claimed as its own.

Secondly, further rebel gains — the Libyan-backed insurgents now control roughly one-third of Chad — could give Khadafy a chance to install in the capital of Ndjamena a leader more sympathetic to his revolutionary brand of government.

And third, it is possible his incursion is part of an overall attempt to merge the two countries in what has been described as Khadafy's dream of establishing a "Greater Libya."

Libya obviously boosted its bargaining power in Chad this week with the fall of the remote oasis of Faya-Largeau to Libyan-backed rebels, Western diplomatic sources said in Tripoli.

The rebels led by former President Goukouni Weddeye are fighting to topple Habre, who ousted Goukouni in a coup in June last year in the desert country in north central Africa.

Faya-Largeau, an embattled settlement that has changed hands several times since the rebel offensive began June 24, commands the main routes leading to eastern Chad and south to Ndjamena, some 500 miles away.

Reports from Chad Friday said Libyan planes had resumed bombing raids on Oum-Chalouba, 250 miles southeast of Faya-Largeau.

But Khadafy and the rebel forces he supports now face difficult choices, the Western diplomatic sources said.

"They either have to press on militarily," one source said, "or exploit the fact that they are in a stronger-than-ever negotiating position."

The fall of Faya-Largeau, the sources said, means a serious setback not only for Habre but also for the United States and France, who have poured military equipment and advisors into Chad, one of the poorest nations on earth.

Libya's next step may reveal Tripoli's ultimate objectives in Chad, the Western sources said.

Analysis

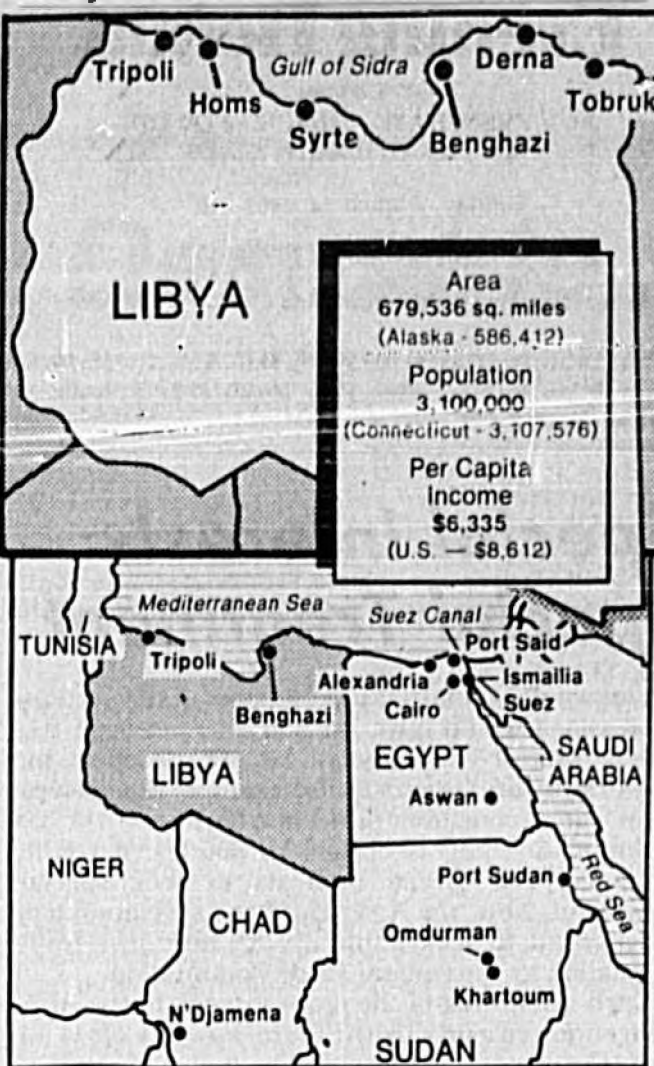

At a minimum, Libya intends to hold on to Aouzou, a strip of land including the strategic Tibesti mountains and running the length of the Libyan-Chadian frontier on Chad's side. Libya is massing both troops and heavy weapons there, according to well-informed sources.

Libya bases its claim to Aouzou on a 1935 agreement between France and Italy that recognizes a Libyan title to the strip. Habre, however, has refused to recognize Libya's claim.

Some Western diplomatic sources in the capital believe Libya's objectives go beyond Aouzou. They maintain Libya wants a puppet government in Ndjamena — and might even aim to merge the two countries.

Chad has refused earlier Libyan attempts to force a merger. Before being ousted by Habre, Weddeye rejected Libyan overtures in November 1981 and asked Khadafy's troops who were stationed in Chad at his invitation to leave the country.

Evening Herald, Sanford, Fl. Sunday, Aug. 14, 1983—3A

By backing the rebels in neighboring Chad's civil war, Libya's Col. Moammar Khadafy may be trying to: 1) seize territory long claimed by Libya, 2) install a puppet government, or 3) merge the two countries.

Two Common Drugs Halt Tumor Growth In Mice

'Once we know (how it works), we would be in a better position to understand whether it can be used (in human cancer treatment).'
—Dr. Judah Folkman

the tumors can continue to grow out of control.

"You turn them (blood vessels) off, and the tumor starts to back down," Folkman said in a telephone interview. "It's one more step in understanding how you can control tumor growth in animals."

The study findings were reported in the Aug. 19 issue of Science magazine.

The drugs used in the mice experiments were heparin, a commonly used blood anti-coagulant, and cortisone, a steroid used to treat skin ailments and a variety of other conditions.

Tumors eventually stopped growing and shrank in mice given large oral doses of the two drugs, the report said. But when either drug was administered alone, tumor growth continued as it did in animals used for comparison purposes.

In the majority of animals treated with the two drugs, the report said, it was possible to achieve a "complete regression" — that is, tumors did not recur after treatment was discontinued.

The two drugs, however, did not work in all types of cancers tested.

Folkman said he and his associates at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Boston University School of Medicine have no idea how heparin and cortisone acting together stop blood vessel growth, called angiogenesis.

"All of our experiments now are trying to figure out how it works, what exactly is happening," he said. "Once we know that, we would be in a better position to understand whether it can be used (in human cancer treatment)."

The researchers originally were using heparin to speed up blood vessel development in chicken embryos. They added cortisone to reduce inflammation. The scientists found that instead of enhancing blood vessel growth, it was inhibited by the two drugs.

Amnesty Plan Sets 800 Free So Far

WARSAW, Poland (UPI) — Nearly 800 people — half of them political prisoners — have been pardoned and released from prison some two-thirds of the way through a scheduled 30-day amnesty period.

Officials said most cases had been decided but there was no word how many more people would be freed, or how many political prisoners would be denied amnesty.

At least 60 prisoners, among them former officials of the outlawed Solidarity union and leaders of the dissident Workers' Defense Committee, or KOR, were expected to be barred from receiving a pardon.

In Gdansk, a large force of riot-equipped police was on duty Friday around the Lenin Shipyard, apparently to discourage any demonstrations marking the anniversary of the 1980 strike there when Solidarity was founded.

Elaborate floral displays at a monument to slain workers and pictures of Lech Walesa and Pope John Paul II were removed overnight from the area around the shipyard's main gate, a gathering place for Solidarity sympathizers.

Activists in the Baltic port city said only peaceful religious observances of the Aug. 14, 1980, strike were expected during the weekend.

Polish government officials, who have been emphasizing the broadest dimensions of the amnesty, said it has "benefited" more than 6,000 people. Only 795 were in custody at the time martial law was lifted on July 22, but most other men and women either had been fined for minor offenses, such as taking part in demonstrations, or were free at home awaiting trial.

More than 80 percent of those given amnesty were people involved in criminal, not political, cases. Those accused or convicted of murder and similar violent crimes were barred from amnesty, along with persons accused of economic offenses such as black-market activities.

Hearings For Libyans May Be Delayed

MIAMI (UPI) — Immigration officials say deportation proceedings for nine Libyan students freed after paying $3,000 cash bonds could be delayed for months.

The nine were apprehended throughout Florida this week under a federal order revoking the immigration status of Libyan students enrolled in prohibited aviation or nuclear-related studies, said Beverly McFarland, a spokeswoman for the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Because the Libyans were freed Friday, the case will be turned over to district INS officials. That could delay their deportation hearings several months, she said.

Attorney Richard Shadyac said three of the arrests were made without any grounds at all.

"Three of those kids weren't even students," he said. "They were visiting their brother. They had their tickets in their hand to go back to Libya, and were voluntarily going" when they were arrested, he said.

INS officials said all nine had been offered a chance to leave the country voluntarily and had refused.

The Libyans were expected to travel to Washington, where they will meet with their attorneys, Shadyac said.

He said he was prepared to go to federal court to challenge the arrests in general as well as the bond requirement the Libyans not attend school until their cases are settled.

Reagan Plans Effort To Help Businessmen In Border States

By Helen Thomas
UPI White House Reporter

EL PASO, Texas (UPI) — President Reagan, seeking to break the Democratic grip on the Hispanic vote, plans to offer a relief program today to aid border-state businessmen hard-hit by the devaluation of the peso, aides say.

Reagan arrived in El Paso Friday, prepared to deliver his regular Saturday radio address here and to speak to the American GI Forum, founded after World War II by Mexican-American veterans.

Spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters Reagan will announce formation of "an inter-agency action group" made up of eight Cabinet officials who will implement the recommendations Reagan has approved to ease the financial pain suffered in the border states because of Mexico's monetary pinch.

Texas Gov. Mark White, who denounced Reagan and his "limosine and caviar crowd" in a speech to the GI forum Thursday, will deliver the Democratic rebuttal to the president's radio remarks.

White warned the forum that Republicans, in their effort to woo Hispanic voters, are conducting a "cynical public relations blitz."

The duel between Reagan and White appeared to symbolize the battle for crucial Hispanic votes that is shaping up in the 1984 presidential race.

Some of Reagan's political advisers are operating on the theory that he has struck out with blacks and women, and he should focus most of his attention on drumming up support among Hispanics in the South and the West.

He appears to be following that formula.

Reagan flew to Texas from Tampa on the first leg of a three-week journey to be highlighted by several speeches pitched to Hispanics and a trip across the California border to meet Mexican president Miguel de la Madrid. He also plans some time

Appearing before the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce in Tampa, Reagan held the audience in the palm of his hand when he attacked Fidel Castro for turning Cuba into "an economic basket case."

He won a standing ovation, coupled with shouts of "four more years" when he said, "When it comes to keeping our country safe, there must be no Republicans or Democrats — just Americans."

On his arrival in El Paso, he met with the leaders of several powerful Hispanic organizations and touched base with local Republican leaders.

Outside his hotel, where he will spend two nights before going to La Paz, Mexico, on Sunday, demonstrators held up a smattering of dissident signs that read, "Four years is enough," "Create Jobs, not War," and "We want jobs, not bombs."

Special Interests: Special Treatment

You would think that practitioners of the various professions would have learned a lesson from the public protest that greeted last year's effort by physicians and dentists to exempt themselves from federal consumer protection laws.

But if anything is certain in politics, it is the propensity of special interests to seek special treatment. Now, the American Bar Association has been asked to seek immunity for attorneys from regulation by the Federal Trade Commission.

Even the timing of the request made to the ABA convention recently by the State Bar of Texas is, to say the least, inappropriate. It comes when Congress appears on the verge of preserving the FTC's authority to regulate the professions as it does other businesses.

The ABA ought to reject the Texas lawyers' request and, instead, follow the advice of their fellow lawyers who belong to the National Association of Attorneys General. The attorneys general favor FTC regulation because they realize that professionals engage in the same practices, legal and illegal, as non-professional businesses.

When doctors and dentists lobbied for regulatory immunity last year, the Senate refused to be intimidated but the House succumbed. Fortunately, the overwhelming public opposition to the House action had an effect. A House committee subsequently approved a compromise that would continue FTC oversight of professions as long as the federal rules don't conflict with state regulations.

The reference to state regulations is important. State professional boards usually are composed of members of the professions they oversee and often have been reluctant to be strict in enforcing their own rules. Although Florida has a pretty good track record of taking care of its own problems. But in those cases where they aren't doing so well, under the compromise, the state regulators would have to do their jobs, or watch federal officials step in.

We hope the attempt to give lawyers immunity from federal regulation will not delay enactment of the compromise that is needed for congressional reauthorization of the FTC's authority. No business, or profession, has a monopoly on deceptive and anti-competitive practices. None should be exempted from federal consumer protection regulations.

NPR Still On Air

National Public Radio has been kept on the air through 11th-hour dramatics that packed more real-life suspense than could have ever been written into a script. No one knew from moment to moment how it would turn out — if there would be any tomorrow for the high-caliber news and public affairs programming that NPR does so well.

A rescue plan was agreed to, in time to meet the July 31 payroll, but that was just the beginning. The need now is for assured funding under sound management that will allow NPR not only to survive but to maintain and improve its impressive standards of professionalism and enlightenment.

The tangled-financial web that held NPR in a near-death grip still hasn't been swept away. What happened recently, in sum and substance, was an agreement in principle between NPR and the Corporation for Public Broadcasting that produced an immediate cash advance of $500,000 and a line of credit for $8.5 million. NPR was relieved of an obligation to repay an earlier cash advance of $600,000. A three-member board of trustees was created to take control of operating equipment in behalf of radio stations affiliated with the NPR network. Status of the trusteeship is to be reviewed in three years, when loans are scheduled to be repaid.

With immediate cash-flow problems resolved, attention will turn to providing long-term financial stability. NPR's excellent range of shows — including "Morning Edition" and "All Things Considered" — should be nourished and promoted. National Public Radio is, as its name suggests, a national public service. It came distressingly close to suspension and perhaps even extinction. That must not be allowed to happen again.

BERRY'S WORLD

By Doris Dietrich

RUSTY BROWN On The Power Of Words

In her youth, she is a chick. Then she marries and begins feeling cooped up in the house. So she goes to hen parties where she cackles with her friends. Then she has her brood and begins to henpeck her husband. Finally, she turns into an old biddy.

That running commentary, summing up the stages of woman as a chicken, is used by Professor Alleen Pace Nilsen to show how sexism nests in the language.

Professor Nilsen of Arizona State University and Jeanne Ford, associate professor of English at University of Texas at Arlington, are among the crusaders trying to alert us to sexist phrases and terms. Despite their efforts in the last few years, progress is slow; old language patterns take a long time to die out.

The sad result, says Professor Ford, is that language put-downs are still affecting woman's image of herself. "It has an atrophying effect," she says.

She cites the subtleties in women's names. Take the popular names ending "ie" for example: Debbie, Annie, Carrie, Maggie, Susie. English teachers tell us that the "ie" ending is called a "diminutive suffix." Diminutive, of course, means small or childlike.

Boys who begin life as Bobby, Dicky, Billy or Robby graduate to Bob, Richard, Bill or Robert. But how many Susies, Patties and Debbiees grow up to be Susans, Patricias or Debras? Could it be society prefers women to remain diminutive and childlike, and women comply because they think of themselves that way?

On the other hand, Professor Nilsen worries about women being described as something to eat. You never hear a man described as a "dish," "cute tomato," "peach," "sweetie pie" or a "sharp cookie." Yet food is for eating and devouring. She believes such descriptive terms, as well as "kitten," "bunny" or "lamb," put women in a passive role where they can be acted upon without putting up any resistance.

She further notes the comparison of women to plants, as in "clinging vine," "shrinking violet" and "wallflower." These are belittling terms. Yet, at the same time, we may call a man "tiger," a "buck," a "handsome hunk" or say he's "lion-hearted."

An older man gives "grandfatherly advice," whereas grandmother's advice may be considered just an old wives' tale.

Language can be sexist for men too. The words "killer," "rapist," "murderer," conjure up a male image, don't they? As Ms. Nilsen writes in the book, "Sexism and Language": "The man who cannot cry and the woman who cannot command are equal victims of their socialization."

Thank heavens, it's been a long time since I've heard a woman referred to as an "an old nag," "the ball and chain," "the little woman" or "the old lady." And now, even hurricanes have men's names as well as women's. So, I guess we're making some headway.

Guccione Set To Sue Over Abscam

WASHINGTON — Penthouse magazine publisher Bob Guccione is preparing to file a multimillion-dollar lawsuit against Abscam "sting man" Mel Weinberg and several FBI agents for what he says was a concerted effort to destroy him financially after he refused their repeated efforts to lure him into criminal activities.

Guccione decided to take his case to court after a Senate select committee on FBI misconduct in Abscam concluded that Guccione was "targeted" by Weinberg and "became the victim of undue interference in his business associations, unjustified manipulations of his business prospects" after he "resisted all inducements and pressures to engage in criminal activity...."

Guccione told my associate Indy Badhwar: "I'm looking for a lawyer like Edward Bennett Williams to file my lawsuit. The government — the FBI — targeted me and deliberately damaged me. I draw no distinctions between Weinberg and the FBI. Weinberg was the FBI's man. He was on the FBI's payroll."

There's a new kid on the block. In fact, there's a new kid in the neighborhood.

Maybe it's no real big deal to some, but in a well-established subdivision among well-established neighbors, a baby IS a big deal.

Many of us have raised our children in this neighborhood, and now our grandchildren are establishing happy and comfortable roots in the homes where their parents had the sweet taste of youth.

The baby in our midst is really by accident. No, no, no. That's not what I mean at all. Please.

Randy and Janet Torbett were expecting their first child while making their home in Sanford. After the baby was born they planned to move to a new home in Geneva, and had their Sanford home on the market for nearly a year.

Wouldn't you know that the week before the baby was due, the house was sold and the new owners wanted immediate possession? The Geneva property was not ready.

The unborn baby was unusually cooperative and showed enduring patience while furnishings were whisked away to storage and his parents got temporarily settled at the home of Randy's parents, Jan and Mac McClung.

While things shaped up beautifully, so did the anxious baby who made his grand and glorious debut on Saturday, Aug. 6, ever-mindful that his grandmother was off work that day and could assist with his delivery through the LaMaze training she and Daddy Randy received at Central Florida Regional Hospital in Sanford.

They will never forget the "fantastic and unique experience" that tiny Ryan Middleton Torbett generated. Except that he is not tiny, at all. The little rascal weighed more than 8 lbs. at birth.

I stopped in to become acquainted with young Ryan when he was four days old. His proud mom cautiously thrust him into my arms. It has been a long time but the natural, tender emotions that only a mother knows came through. I swear Ryan smiled at me. Go ahead, say it was gas.

I carefully examined him while his adoring, approving mom stood loving vigil. I was fascinated with his shafts of black, waxy hair. Would he be a redhead like his attractive mom? I mused. He's a perfect baby boy — pink and plump and plum beautiful.

And the proud father? He could teach peacocks a thing or two about strutting at this point.

Among his other exceptional qualities, Ryan got his first test as a law-abiding citizen when he was two days old. He rode home from the hospital snugly strapped within the confines of a car seat.

Welcome, little neighbor, welcome.

JULIAN BOND Turn Down The Music

"It's psychological warfare," my friend Robinson said. "And we haven't seen the worst of it yet!"

"Whatever do you mean?" I asked. "Who's waging what kind of warfare on whom?"

"The president of the United States, that's who. He's trying to inflict severe psychological damage on us all."

"That's hogwash," I said. "Whatever you may think of the president's policies, you surely can't imagine that such a gentle man would stoop to tactics like that."

"The facts speak for themselves," Robinson said. "Scientists know that playing a recording of the Mexico City police band's rendition of 'Cascade of Roses' is so disorienting to the navigation system of bats that they flee the sound."

"So what?" I asked. "Black people aren't bats, and Ronald Reagan isn't the Mexico City police band."

"He might as well be," Robinson said. "He has the same effect. I read all this in The New York Times."

"That doesn't make it so," I retorted.

"What did the Times actually say?" "It said that music — or ultrasonic devices — can frighten bats and that the devices can cause 'irritability and mood alteration' in humans."

"I'm sure this is no more than ordinary paranoia on your part," I counseled Robinson. "Why would Ronald Reagan unleash such an attack on you? He seems to be such a nice man."

"I'll explain it in simple terms so even you can understand," said Robinson. "Here's how it works. The president will probably run for re-election in 1984. Even if he doesn't, he's got to have the support of his party as long as he can govern without being considered a lame duck."

"Or a busted bat," I said.

"In order to keep the moderate wing of his party from deserting him over accusations that he is hostile to blacks, he makes speeches like the one he made in Atlanta to the American Bar Association. He tells fibs about his civil rights programs, including some whoppers about how many women he's appointed to high positions, and colossal lies about how his programs actually help black people."

"I still don't get it," I said. "I see what you say the president is trying to do but what does all that have to do with bats?"

"The president's speech was the Mexico City band music and we're the bats. The moderate Republicans must be Mexico City band lovers. But it sure gave me a headache and severely altered my mood."

"Robinson, if you don't like what the president had to say, why not say so? Why invent this fanciful pseudo-psychological sham?"

"Brother, you wouldn't know the difference between the down beat to a cha-cha and the drum beat of marching feet in the unemployment line. But the next time you see the president, ask him to turn down the music."

JEFFREY HART

U.S. And Revolution

Much of the public confusion about revolution in Nicaragua and El Salvador flows from language.

We do have one word: "revolution."

But that word means a variety of things. Congressmen, editorial writers, and columnists have been calling upon us to be "on the side of revolution," and the Rev. William Sloane Coffin, prominent among those who helped to bring us the boat people in Southeast Asia, has been loudly comparing what is taking place in Central America to what happened here in 1776.

There is a straightforward antidote to these confusions. If applied by the Reagan administration, it would go far toward crystallizing public opinion on El Salvador and Nicaragua.

But it is important to know what we are talking about when we use the word revolution. Our 18th-century founders fought a war against England for independence and a republican form of government. That was a revolution but so was the English revolution of 1688, which was bloodless, but greatly increased the power of Parliament at the expense of the Crown. The French Revolution was republican in its goals — There continue to occur anti-republican revolutions as well: Hitler's, Lenin's, Mao's, Castro's. In general, the revolutions in favor of free institutions have 18th-century roots, while the totalitarian revolution derives from the 19th century, from Marx and other theorists.

Who are the "revolutionaries" in El Salvador? They consist of five Marxist-Leninist guerrilla groups operating under the banner of the Mari National Liberation Front, and they field an estimated 5,000 guerrilla troops. The largest of the five, the Popular Liberation Forces (PLF), is Maoist in its doctrine and advocates a prolonged peasant guerrilla war against the government.

The other groups with guerrilla forces in the field include the Communist Party and three groups that broke away from it: the People's Revolutionary Army, the Central American Revolutionary Workers Party, and the Armed Forces of National Resistance. Of these only the Salvadoran Communist Party has shown any interest in working within a parliamentary framework.

It seems to me that the United States ought to be openly "on the side of revolution" — democratic revolution, that is. The other side of that coin would be that we would unequivocally oppose anti-democratic revolutions of the sort that have caused so much trouble in the 20th century.

Of course, the actual policies that flowed from these principles would have to be affected by considerations of time, place, and circumstance. It cannot always be assumed in a given instance that the prospects for a democratic revolution are good. Lech Walesa is a democratic revolutionary, and he had broad sympathy in the West, but our means of aiding his cause were limited.

But despite these qualifications, the principle would remain clear. We are openly on the side of free institutions. In Nicaragua, it is Eden Pastora, known as Commandante Zero, who is now the democratic revolutionary. Pastora deserves our open and full support.

If the Reagan administration proclaimed the principles outlined above as the basis for its policies in Latin America and elsewhere, I judge that it would mobilize support for them. And such a principled stand would smoke out those who are pimping for "revolution" but who really mean communist dictatorship.

hotel.

"Every time we approach banks," Myerson said, "(Abscam-related) questions keep coming out of the blue.... The banks knew nothing about the Senate committee report until we sent them copies."

According to his company's internal documents, Guccione is losing $40,000 a day in interest he could have been earning on the $70 million he has sunk into the hotel, to say nothing of the money he could have expected to make if the project had been completed.

Meanwhile, the $70 million drain has exhausted Guccione's working capital for Penthouse. "We've had to borrow money commercially for the magazine," said Myerson. "We paid $2 million in interest on this borrowed money in 1982. It's a mess. It's a bleeding wound."

Footnote: The Senate report said the Guccione case "provides a glaring example of the risks posed to innocent citizens by the government's reliance on unsavory and dishonest middlemen...."

Laxatives Abused; Proper Diet More Desirable

Q. My mother is constantly complaining of constipation and regularly takes laxatives to regulate herself. This has been going on for years. I had not been too concerned about it until my son, who is in medical school, told me older people should not take laxatives. Is this true? If so, why?

A. You have reason to be concerned. Although the Food and Drug Administration has found laxatives to be safe and effective for over-the-counter purchase, many medical experts, including the National Institute on Aging and the National Digestive Disease Education and Information Clearinghouse, urge older people to "avoid taking laxatives, if at all possible."

Americans spend about $360 million annually for laxatives. According to a recent report by Ralph Nader's Public Citizen Health Research Group, laxatives are "unnecessary when a proper diet is followed and many are habit-forming, often leading to abuse. Laxatives pose hazards to some people even when used infrequently — and to everyone if used repeatedly."

Perfectly healthy people may have from two to three bowel movements per week or three bowel movements a day. Although some degree of regularity may be convenient, variation in bowel habits over time is completely normal and natural.

Growing Older

Unfortunately, many people, such as your mother, enlist the aid of various drugs to make their bodies behave more regularly. This can do more harm than good. Laxative abuse, an unintentional habit, is a serious problem.

To treat simple constipation without drugs, eat a high-fiber diet; drink plenty of non-alcoholic liquids (six to eight cups a day); exercise regularly; avoid or adjust constipating medication you may be taking; and try to develop a regular pattern of bowel movements, whether that pattern is twice a day, twice a week or somewhere in between. If constipation does not respond to this plan within a week, or if you suffer from abdominal pain or swelling or rectal bleeding, you should seek help from a health-care professional — not a laxative.

There may be valid instances when your doctor may suggest that you use a laxative, stool-softener or related product, such as a suppository or enema. These may be: preparation for certain diagnostic or surgical procedures; in connection with treatment for worms or certain kinds of poisoning; while a patient is hospitalized or incapacitated; during retraining to achieve normal elimination after laxative abuse has led to dependence; to avoid undue straining during a bowel movement when this could be painful or dangerous, as in patients suffering from hernias, anorectal disorders, certain heart or vascular conditions, such as some cases of severe hypertension, aneurysm, heart attack and stroke, as well as after certain surgical procedures.

This does not include using a laxative for simple constipation — or the failure to eliminate regularly — which is not a disease.

If you are not experiencing discomfort and are eating a well-balanced diet with plenty of fiber and liquid and are exercising, you should have no need for laxatives. If changes in diet, travel or temporary inactivity due to minor illness cause you to become constipated, your return to a diet rich in fiber and a program of regular physical activity should correct this quickly.

Q. I read recently that the combination of heat and humidity in Chicago has been blamed for at least 12 deaths of elderly people in July in that city. I understand that elderly are usually hardest hit during heat waves. Are there any precautions to take?

A. During heat waves, senior citizens should not overexert themselves. They should wear loose clothing, drink plenty of fluids, avoid hot, heavy meals and alcohol, take cool baths or showers and avoid stressful situations. If these precautions do not help, you may wish to consult a physician.

If you have a question for Claude Pepper, please send it to "Ask Claude Pepper," Room 715, House Office Building Annex 1, Washington, D.C., 20515. Volume of mail prevents personal replies.

REP. CLAUDE PEPPER is the chairman of the health subcommittee of the House Select Committee on Aging.

OUR READERS WRITE

Jack Anderson Subverts Ideal Of Enlightened Public Opinion

The Jack Anderson column of 8/4/83, to my mind (if any) fulfills what Adlai Stevenson said at Albuquerque, N.M., 9/21/52: "Those who corrupt the public mind are just as guilty as those who steal from the public purse."

And it certainly does not follow G. Washington's dictum: "In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion be enlightened."

Anderson's column might be called subversion by indirection as it infers, and would lead the public to believe, that the GAO was the last word as to the facts of life.

Whereas The Facts of Life say that we cannot afford to be without a Super Fleet, for "it is a fact of life, that neither time nor circumstance will alter, those with the greater power will rule over those of lesser power."

For conceding the superiority to the Russians, then we can prepare to count our money in Rubles. If any. And, this is why the indoctrination of our school children in the principles laid out by the NEA for them to become amenable to becoming members of "A New World Order," of the "Global Community" is such a horrendous thing for which we will, if it is not changed, pay in "Blood, Sweat and Tears." The turning point for this is the elimination of the D. O. E. — Department of Education—as Pres. Reagan promised—for only by the elimination of the dry rot of a huge, evil bureaucracy, dedicated to reducing inquisitive minds to non-thinking Pavlovian animals, not to become citizens with free and independent minds. Who will be able to sit where you sit and carry on the traditions of this, "Miracle among the governments of man, that has happened once in six thousand years, and if destroyed may never happen again."

Unless we wake up to these things we will become as the Athenians, who desired free bread, circuses and freedom from responsibility, more than they desired freedom, and in the end they lost it all, bread, circuses and freedom, never to regain them. Your vote is your sword and shield against all forms of tyranny, use it or lose it.

Southeast Asians Look To Japan As Model For Economic Planning

By Arthur Richards

SINGAPORE (UPI) — When Japanese soldiers invaded Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore, Indonesia and the Philippines in 1941, little did they realize that one day those nations voluntarily would adopt a "Learn from Japan" policy.

Today those five countries, now comprising the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN), are looking to Japan for greater economic and technical aid, for Japanese skills and administrative know-how, and for a Japanese military presence in the region to help ward off Communist expansionism.

Spearheading this "Japan crusade" is Singapore Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew, who over the years has vociferously urged Japan to play a bigger role in the region.

"Learn from Japan," is Lee's policy and he has successfully used his tiny island state of 2.4 million people as a launching pad to promote Japanese economics, defense methods and labor systems.

Lee says everyone should emulate the Japanese because the Japanese worker "is always thinking about how he is going to do his job better. He is always making suggestions."

ANALYSIS

Malaysian Prime Minister Dr. Mahathir Mohamed has echoed Lee's sentiments with calls to his 13 million people to "look East" and "learn fast from the Japanese."

Indonesia, Thailand and the Philippines also copy the best Japanese systems to help uplift their economic, social and welfare programs.

But not everyone is pleased with ASEAN's "think Japan" policies.

"Memories of the war die hard," said one elderly Singaporean. "How can Japan help?"

Relations between Japan and ASEAN were established in the 1970s and Japan-ASEAN foreign ministers' meetings over the years reflect the increasing interdependence of Japan and ASEAN in the fields of culture, investment and tourism.

"The bond in relations between the region and Japan was firmly sealed in May this year when Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone visited the region," said a Singapore government official.

Nakasone reciprocated with a "think ASEAN" pledge that Japan would:

— Establish relations with the five countries in the spirit of "thinking and endeavoring together."

— Invite 750 ASEAN youths a year for the next five years to take part in the "Japan-ASEAN friendship program for the 21st century."

— Emphasize four areas of economic co-operation with ASEAN: rural and agricultural development, energy development and the promotion of small and medium enterprises.

— Cooperate with ASEAN for a peaceful settlement of the Cambodia problem.

About 35 percent of Japan's bilateral development assistance goes to ASEAN countries and roughly 50 percent of the assistance received by ASEAN comes from Japan.

Trade between ASEAN and Japan reached $34.3 billion in 1982, about 13 percent of Japan's total trade, and that trade is expected to increase by leaps and bounds by the year 1990.

"Japan and ASEAN are like twin sisters. Soon the ASEAN nations will also become lands of the Rising Sun," said an observer.

With Reagan In White House

Writing Speeches For U.S. Presidents Is Easy...

By Ira R. Allen

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Writing speeches for President Reagan is like writing dramatic dialogue, says his top speechwriter.

Aram Bakshian, 39, is leaving the White House to write a political column for the conservative editorial pages of the Washington Times. And in a recent interview, the resident White House scholar and survivor of three Republican administrations said Reagan is the easiest president he ever wrote for.

The mustachioed, pipe-puffing Bakshian, an opera devotee, essayist and historian, wrote for Presidents Nixon and Ford before joining the Reagan administration two years ago.

Let a visitor think that Reagan, the former actor, is merely reading his writers' scripts, Bakshian says the president is actively involved in determining what he will say and how he will say it.

As former Ford "dialogue coach" Don Penny puts it, "The president delivers more speeches than any man on the face of the earth." When Ford told him, "I'm not an actor," Penny says he responded: "I beg to differ. You are, in the most sublime way."

Bakshian says it is easy to work with Reagan "because he used to do his own speeches exclusively back when he was on the dinner circuit."

And because Reagan communications director David Gergen used to write for Nixon and Ford as well, the process is that much easier, he says.

"When they know what they're

doing it's easier to work with them. The hardest person to write a speech for is someone who doesn't have much to say and doesn't have a strongly identified personality and understanding of the spoken word."

"Of the three presidents I've written for, Reagan is the easiest. Not because he's the easiest to get something passed through, but because if you've done a good job he can recognize it and where he sees a problem it's because there is a problem."

Ford was a problem, Bakshian says, because "writing for Jerry Ford was stylistically more limited."

In addition to Ford's frequent bloopers, "It was a presidency on the defensive It didn't have that many clear initiatives going for it, and the battle lines were very hazy."

Particularly because of his heritage, Bakshian remembers the time Ford spoke out on the need for more research into "sickle cell anemia," instead of anemia.

When he's writing a speech for Reagan, Bakshian puts his own style and those of his former bosses out of mind.

"I'm trying to hear it in his voice. It's like writing authentic dialogue for a character in a drama. You wouldn't write the same style for more than one of those characters."

Most of what a president says is "boilerplate," and little will be remembered by history, Bakshian says. Much involves "saying what needs to be said to get through the day or carry the policy across. That isn't that often going to be a Gettysburg Address."

Bakshian says Reagan's inaugural speech, "a vision speech," may be remembered "in that he did set a tone ... he did have a sense of direction. He came into office wanting to do something in a way that Kennedy's inaugural also set a theme ... and Carter's didn't."

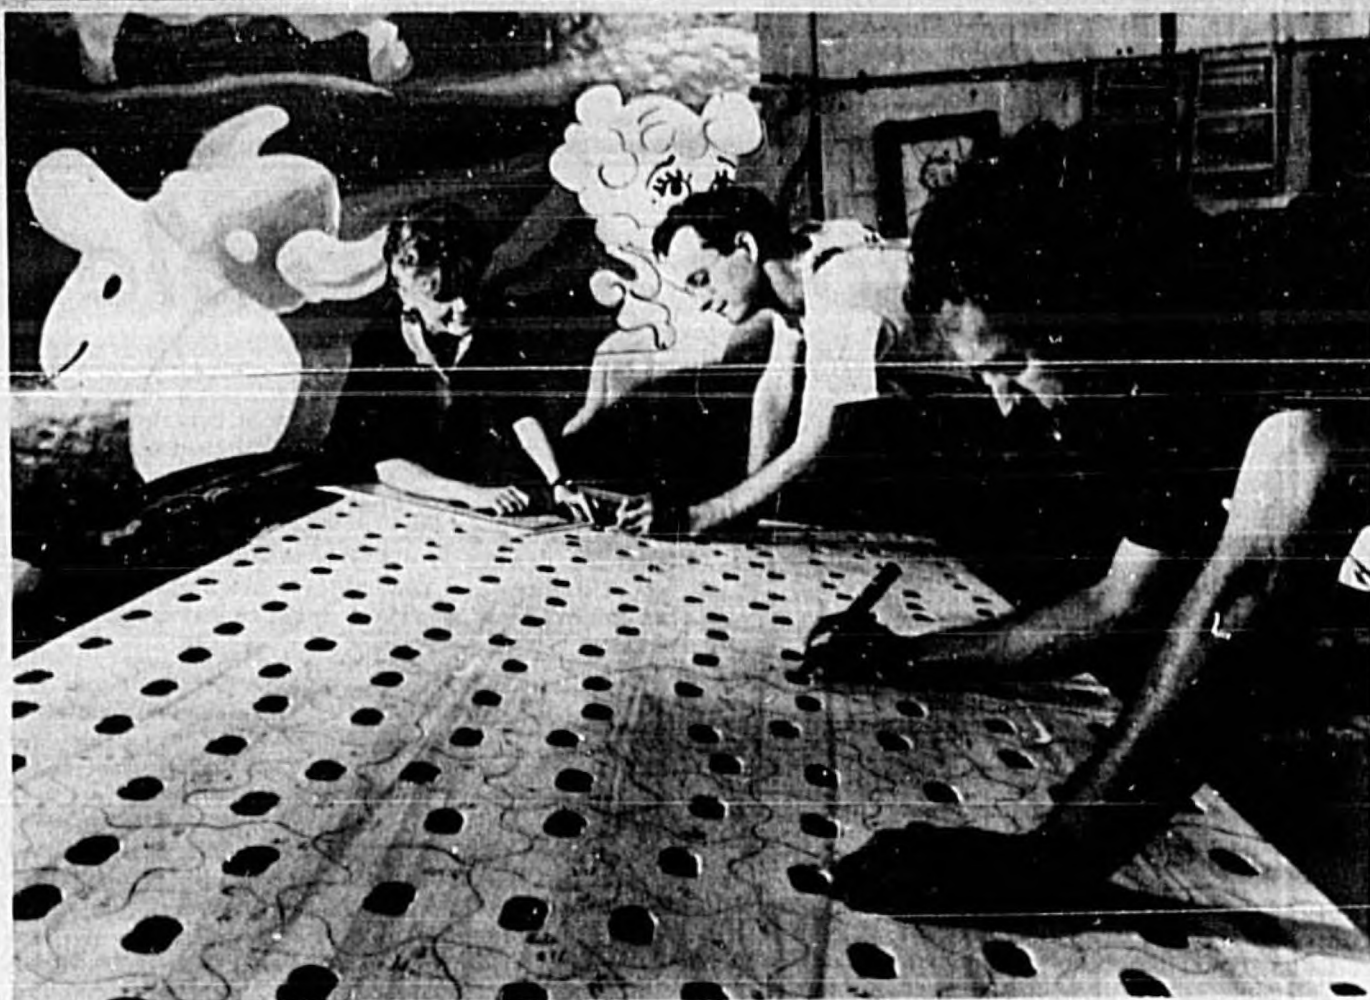

Otherwise, it will be up to history — not critics — to determine whether some of Reagan's speeches on arms control, for example, will be recited in class one day, Bakshian says.

"They will be if the agreements that come out of them are important. My point is, what we think is memorable at the time may not be, and events will make them either be of historical interest or not, depending on the success or failure of the programs that were involved."

Often, the only things that survive from speechwriters are "catch-phrases" or "throw-away lines," he says. Some that might come to mind are, "Prosperity is just around the corner," "I am not a crook," and perhaps, for Reagan, "much ado about nothing," borrowed from Shakespeare to describe his first reaction to the briefing book controversy.

Occasionally, a listener will hear Reagan adopting themes and words of John F. Kennedy, hero to a generation of liberals.

But Will It Fit In A Box?

What is 72 feet long, has 27 faces and will make its debut on Broadway this weekend? If you guessed the World's Largest Jigsaw Puzzle, you're right! Blondie and Dagwood, Beefe Bailey and Sarge, and Hagar the Horrible are just some of the familiar faces that will appear as New York's children, along with their parents and grandparents, piece the puzzle together. If completed, the puzzle will enter the Guinness Book of World Records. The colorful collage will measure 72 feet by 44 feet — 3,168 square feet — with 13,280 pieces.

Reactions Not Life-Threatening

Users Of Valium May Suffer Withdrawal Symptoms: Study

CHICAGO (UPI) — Chronic anxiety sufferers have something new to worry about — experiencing withdrawal symptoms when they stop taking their tranquilizers.

A study shows that the widely prescribed tranquilizer diazepam — better known by the brand name Valium — is helpful in treating occasional bouts of anxiety.

But researchers at the University of Pennsylvania warn that many patients who use the drug for a long term may become physically dependent and risk withdrawal symptoms — the body's response when deprived of a drug.

In the study, printed in the Journal of the American Medical Association, the researchers said mild withdrawal symptoms were reported by 43 percent of the patients who had taken the drug for more than eight months. Only 5 percent of the patients new to the drug suffered withdrawal.

The reported withdrawal symptoms included extreme distress, dizziness, headaches, stomach upsets, irritability and anxiety. The study affirmed the benefits of the tranquilizer. The researchers said the patients reported decreased anxiety, and the study noted that diazepam works swiftly and has a low toxicity.

The study also showed that half the patients remained less anxious once they were off the drug, and continued to improve without the drug throughout the length of the study.

The researchers studied a group of people who suffered chronic anxiety. Many had been taking diazepam before the study began.

A group of 61 patients took the tranquilizers under the researchers' supervision for only six weeks, then were switched to a placebo. Only two people — both long-term diazepam users — reported withdrawal symptoms after the switch.

A second group of 36 people switched to a placebo after 14 weeks. Of those, eight reported withdrawal symptoms. Four of those patients had taken the drug for a long term, the researchers said.

Of the four patients who were new to the drug, three reported taking two alcoholic drinks a day. The researchers concluded that even their low alcohol intake may have contributed to withdrawal.

The final group, of 32 people, was taken abruptly off diazepam after 22 weeks. Nine long-term users, and one new patient suffered withdrawal pangs.

No withdrawal symptoms were noted when patients tapered off their use of the drug instead of stopping cold-turkey.

The withdrawal symptoms were bad enough to send all but two of the sufferers to their doctors. But the researchers stressed that the reactions were not life-threatening and did not include convulsions or psychotic reactions — symptoms of narcotic withdrawal.

The study noted that surveys show most people only take diazepam for short periods of time.

But researchers concluded that doctors should consider the possibility of withdrawal when prescribing tranquilizers, and should assess carefully whether the patient really needs the drug for long-term use.

Research Shows Bypass Surgery Heals More Than The Heart

CHICAGO (UPI) — Within six months after coronary artery bypass surgery, patients not only feel better but report a significant improvement in their quality of life, a study shows.

A research team at the University of Texas Medical Branch in Galveston led by C. David Jenkins interviewed 318 patients before surgery and again six months later.

"Anxiety, depression, fatigue and sleep problems declined. Vigor and well-being scores rose significantly," researchers said in the latest issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

"When losses were expected, psychoneurological function, marital adjustment, they generally were not found. For none of the more than 60 outcome variables was widespread serious worsening found.

"The findings suggest that the great majority of patients are able to resume normal economic and social functioning within six months after coronary artery bypass graft," the researchers said.

The patients surveyed at four hospitals in Boston and New York ranged in age from 32 to 69, with 79 percent over 50, and 84 percent were men.

"The entire array of findings was generally optimistic," Jenkins and colleagues said.

"By six months after surgery, the great majority of patients appeared to have experienced substantial medical benefits, relief of physical and related psychological symptoms, restored physical and social function, return to work and an enhanced quality of life."

Anginal pain was completely relieved for 69 percent to 85 percent of patients.

However, patients who had experienced pain during physical exertion obtained relief less frequently than those whose pain had occurred after a heavy meal, while resting or during emotional upsets.

Half the patients who complained of shortness of breath before surgery reported complete relief. Many patients reported fewer problems with night waking, getting to sleep and waking up feeling tired.

The proportion of patients who had been unable to carry out usual activities for 25 or more days dropped from 37 percent to 3 percent.

Of 197 patients who had worked before surgery, 75 percent were still employed six months after surgery and 86 percent of these worked 35 or more hours per week. Disability days were reduced more than 80 percent.

Of the 89 patients who had not worked in the year before surgery, 20 percent re-entered the work force during the post-operative period.

More than 40 percent of patients increased their social activities following surgery.

While most incomes did not change significantly, some declines occurred in families that already had lower levels of income.

IUD Users Run Much Higher Risk For Pelvic Inflammatory Disease

CHICAGO (UPI) — Women using IUDs — intrauterine contraceptive devices — are nine times as likely to develop pelvic inflammatory disease, a leading cause of infertility, as women using other forms of contraception, researchers say.

"Pelvic inflammatory disease is one of the most important diseases among young women," Dr. Peter M. Layde of Atlanta's Centers for Disease Control said in a Journal of the American Medical Association editorial.

"In developed countries, PID accounts for an estimated 30 to 40 percent of infertility among women and for about half of all ectopic (tubal) pregnancies."

Pelvic inflammatory disease usually results from sexually transmitted infections.

But Layde added, "Recent work suggests that the most important non-sexually transmitted disease-related risk factor for PID is a woman's method of contraception."

A Boston University Medical School research team led by David W. Kaufman reported in the Journal the effect of different types of intrauterine devices on the risk of PID.

They studied 460 pre-menopausal women — 155 women with PID and 305 controls with other conditions — using some form of contraception.

"This study confirms that IUD use increases the risk of PID," they said.

'For past IUD users, there was no apparent increase in risk. The risk of PID did not seem to be related to duration of use of any of the three IUDs.'

Boston University study

"Overall, we estimated the rate of PID to be about nine times higher among current IUD users than among those who used other contraceptive methods: for past IUD users, there was no apparent increase in risk."

"The risk of PID did not seem to be related to duration of use of any of the three IUDs," the researchers said.

"The estimated risk was highest for users of the Dalkon Shield, lowest for users of copper-containing devices and intermediate for users of other IUDs, principally the Lippes Loop."

The Dalkon Shield was taken off the market in 1974 because users who became pregnant while the device was in place were at increased risk for septic spontaneous abortion.

The multi-stranded tail of the Dalkon Shield may serve as a wick which draws bacteria into the uterus, Layde said.

Layde advised women who still use the Dalkon Shield to have the device removed by their physicians. The mere insertion of an IUD may foster bacterial growth by serving as a conduit for outside organisms, he said.

"Both oral contraceptives and barrier methods of contraception — such as condoms, diaphragms and spermicidal foams or jellies — roughly halve a woman's risk of PID compared with that for women who are not using contraception," Layde said.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

New Shopping Cart Law Becomes Effective Oct. 1

OCALA-Florida has given retail grocers a new weapon in their battle against lost or stolen shopping carts which cost them $10 million a year.

A law that will become effective October 1 strengthens the existing statute regarding shopping cart theft and, "hopefully will reduce the supermarket's losses," said Bill Weaver, president of the Ocala-based Retail Grocers Association of Florida. The shopping cart bill was adopted by the legislature this session and signed into law in late June.

According to a national study conducted by the Food Marketing Institute, a supermarket loses about 22 shopping carts a year, worth about $1,500.

Specifically, the law makes it illegal to remove any shopping cart from the parking area of a supermarket without written authorization and to remove or alter any serial number or sign attached to the cart. The law also provides for state registration of shopping carts, but it is not a requirement. However, anyone caught in possession of a registered shopping cart outside the premises of a retail food store is automatically "presumed to be in possession of stolen property."

"We do hope that the consumers — our customers — will work with us on this very serious problem," Weaver said. "Lost shopping carts cost us money which could show up in higher food prices."

Firms Report No Upturn

TAMPA — For the first time in three years, a majority of small business chief executive officers expect increased profits during the summer months, according to the findings of the latest Heller/Roper Small Business Barometer. Confidence regarding sales is equally high, with a decided majority also anticipating rises. Yet despite this swell of optimism, a full 30 percent of the executives polled said they see no signs of economic recovery within their own businesses.

Telephone interviews were completed during May with small business chief executive officers from firms with 40 to 500 employees. The survey was conducted by the Roper Organization on behalf of Walter E. Heller International Corporation's Small Business Institute. Heller is a financial services company with banking, specialized financing and leasing operations throughout the United States Canada and 23 other countries.

County To Get Directory

Great Southern Directories, Inc. is doing a complete Seminole County Telephone Directory. The directory will feature 3 columns in both yellow and white pages, with larger print, which means the directory will be easier to read. There will also be maps of the major cities and towns of Seminole County, which will be found in the Special Community Section of the Directory.

The President of Great Southern Directories, Inc. is Harley G. Walter, formerly of H.G. Walter Publishing. Harley has been in the directory business for the last five years and has been putting together motel directories for Holiday Inns, Quality Inns, Howard Johnsons, Days Inns, etc. The vice-president, Charles Elliott was a supervisor for another major independent directory company.

Design Managers Named

Stromberg-Carlson Corporation of Lake Mary has named Gordon H. Davis as manager of international design and Dennis L. Edinger as manager of fiber optic design at the company's engineering development center.

Previously an engineer design supervisor for DCO-E hardware, Davis is now responsible for the design development of the international digital central office. He reports to Dr. Garry Henderson, director of systems effectiveness. Davis joined Stromberg-Carlson 27 years ago as a laboratory technician and has made successive progressions to supervisory positions in the engineering department. He was awarded patents for the "Telephone Line Circuit Using Triggable Avalanche Design," "Automatic Number Identifier" and "Automatic Number Identifier, Four-Party Identification."

Edinger is now responsible for design development for Stromberg-Carlson's entry into fiber optic transmission equipment in the United States. He reports to Whit Cotton, director of fiber optics engineering. Edinger has been with Stromberg-Carlson for eight years and has held the positions of senior engineering specialist, DBX hardware design supervisor and technical staff engineer. Also, he was awarded a joint patent for the "Microprocessor Telephony Processor."

30 Percent Drop Forseen

Rising Interest Rates Could Put The Brake On Home Sales

WASHINGTON — Rising mortgage interest rates could slow the pace of new home sales nationally by an estimated 30 percent during the last half of 1983, Harry Pryde, president of the National Association of Home Builders, has predicted.

New single family homes were being sold at an annual rate of 638,000 during June, down almost 3 percent from May, the Commerce Department reported. But Pryde said the sales rate could fall to about 450,000 by year's end unless the current upward trend in interest rates is reversed.

Mortgage interest rates have risen two percentage points during the last two months. Conventional mortgage rates are now 14 percent.

The FHA/VA rate, which stood at 11½ percent in early June, was raised from 12½ to 13½ percent earlier this week.

"The two percentage point increase in the FHA/VA rate has increased the cost of carrying a modest $65,000 loan by more than $100 a month," Pryde said. "Consequently, more than four million American households have been priced out of the market and even many of the sales contracts signed in June could fall through the cracks before they reach settlement."

Pryde attributed the increase in interest rates to the political stalemate over the budget process, soaring federal deficits and the "unjustified" fear that too rapid an economic recovery will re-ignite inflation.

"The recovery has been modest by post-war standards, and inflation remains well below 3 percent," Pryde said. "Nevertheless, there appears to be a concerted effort in Washington to slow down housing, and by doing that they could abort the entire recovery."

"You can't turn the economy on and off like a water spigot," Pryde added. "It takes time to build confidence and momentum. Now we are in danger of losing whatever momentum we had going for us during the first half of the year."

Reports from builders, Pryde said, indicate home sales fell during July by more than 30 percent from May levels.

Cardinal Cornering Tampa Bay Market

TAMPA — Cardinal Industries, Inc., the nation's largest manufacturer of multi-family housing, continues to underscore the growing vitality of the Tampa Bay area with ground breaking on two more rental apartment communities — its 17th and 18th in the burgeoning metropolitan market.

Ground breaking began in June on the third phase of Garden Terrace, a planned $3.46 million, 91-unit expansion, which will bring a total of 215 apartments to the community. Garden Terrace is located on Del Rey Court, south of Busch Boulevard in Tampa.

Across the bay in Pinellas Park ground was broken for Pinellas Pines, a planned $2.62 million, 69-unit development. Located at 86th Ave. and 52nd St., Pinellas Pines is the second Cardinal community in Pinellas County. Nearby Oldsmar Apartments in Oldsmar formally opened in June.

With Garden Terrace III and Pinellas Pines, Cardinal will have more than 1,119 apartments serving the Greater Bay area with plans to build more. To date, Cardinal has built more than 100 apartment communities throughout Florida and South Georgia representing more than 6,000 units.

"The fact that nearly 25 percent of all our apartment building activity has taken place in the Tampa Bay area underscores the commitment we've made to this vibrant metropolitan market," said Steve Casey, director of Land Acquisition for Cardinal's Florida region. "The area will continue to be one of the Southeast's fastest-growing markets and Cardinal welcomes the opportunity to play an on-going role in that growth picture by building apartment communities to meet the expanded housing needs."

Cardinal presently has 27 apartment communities in a three-county area of Hillsborough, Pinellas and Manatee.

One of the key features which distinguishes Cardinal from the rest of the shelter industry is its development approach. Cardinal's apartments — as are all of the company's shelter products — are built on a factory assembly line and arrive at the site as more than 90 percent complete 12-by-24-foot modules.

To date, the company — which also has plants in Atlanta and Columbus, Ohio — has built more than 500 developments through Florida, Georgia and the Midwest.

In 1982, Cardinal registered record dollar volume of nearly Cardinal Industries' huge hydraulic crane sets an apartment unit on its foundation in Melbourne.

$300 million — a 24 percent jump over 1981's figures — despite one of the worst housing recessions in the home building industry.

In Melbourne last month, the firm "set in place" a $3.3 million modular rental apartment community, which was expected to be ready for occupancy in just a few weeks.

Called Huntington Green II, the complex is the fourth community to be built in Melbourne by Cardinal.

In the setting procedure, a massive hydraulic crane lifts the modules by specially designed and patented roof straps and places them on permanent crawl-space foundations.

"Since a major percentage of the work is completed indoors" before the units are set in place, "including installation of appliances and lighting fixtures," said Dick Harkins, director of investment sales, "an average-sized apartment complex such as Huntington Green II can be set in two to three days by a crew of no more than five men."

40th Annual Convention In September

Fruit & Vegetable Association Sets Meeting For Marco Island

Florida farmers will soon have a chance to get together from around the state, discuss their problems, and pick up new ideas to help solve some of those problems.

September 21-24 are the dates set for the 40th Annual Convention of the Florida Fruit & Vegetable Association (FFVA), a non-profit agricultural trade association representing growers, shippers and processors of Florida's vegetables, citrus, tropical fruits and sugar cane.

Frank D. Teets, president of the statewide organization has announced plans for the convention which will be held at Marriott's Marco Beach Resort, Marco Island, Florida. According to Teets, informative sessions will include, in addition to the annual membership meeting, several special workshops in areas of concern to Florida farmers. A Marketing workshop will offer new ideas for packaging and handling fresh fruits and vegetables from the farm to the consumer. A second workshop will provide information on the Federal Crop Insurance program which is already available on a limited basis to some Southwest Florida vegetable growers, and the possibilities for expansion of this protection to other farmers.

The third session will inform convention delegates on the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1983, federal legislation which has been approved by the Senate and is expected to pass in the House by the end of the summer; legislation which could have significant impact on Florida agricultural employers.

Teets commented "you ask any Florida farmer today what his biggest problems are, and he'll include weather disasters, labor, government regulations, and marketing his crops right up at the top of his list. We hope to be able to give him a little help and encouragement with these workshops."

Members of FFVA will hear reports on the activities of the association during the year on their behalf including updates on Federal and State Legislation; environmental regulations, labor regulations, and commodity promotion.

According to Teets, there will be plenty of fun along with the heavy business sessions. Special functions will include such traditional and enjoyable events as the welcoming luncheon, annual citrus breakfast, a theme party and dinner, and the annual banquet which will climax the convention on Friday evening.

While recreational opportunities on Marco Island feature something for everyone, a number of sports activities are scheduled for Friday, September 23, including the annual men's golf tournament; a tennis round-robin; and a non-golfers' putting tournament.

Special events also have been planned for spouses attending the convention.

For further information regarding Florida Fruit & Vegetable Association's Annual Meeting, contact Lew Haveard, Convention Coordinator at 305/894-1351.

Stromberg Pulls Switch On XY Manufacturing

Stromberg-Carlson Corporation of Lake Mary and Falcon Communications, Inc. have announced Falcon's purchase of the assets of Stromberg-Carlson's XY switch product line located in Ardmore, Okla.

The sale includes inventory, machinery and proprietary rights. Falcon Communications will begin operations in Ardmore through its newly formed subsidiary, XY Resources, Inc.

Stromberg-Carlson, a division of Plessey Telecommunications, has manufactured the XY switch since 1947, and the electromechanical product was the mainstay of the independent telephone industry for more than 35 years.

"Our company's future is clearly tied to digital switching," said Ken Hoyt, executive vice president of Stromberg-Carlson.

Falcon Communications has been in the business of rehabilitating and repairing XY equipment for more than 15 years.

"Although the telephone industry is rapidly turning to digital switching, there will be a market for XY equipment and parts for some time to come," said W.F. Provance, president of Falcon Communications.

Altamonte Has It All

The Altamonte Little League Juniors All-Stars may be the finest baseball team ever assembled in Central Florida. Saturday morning at 10, they played West University, Texas, needing a win to advance to the Little League World Series in Taylor, Mich. Like all good teams, the Altamonte 13-year-olds combine good pitching, speed, strong hitting, solid defense and good coaching. At the right, lefthander Jeff Hagen rears back to throw against Lake Charles, La. Hagen is 4-0 thus far in the tournament and was the starter Saturday morning. At the upper left, Matt Messina flashes his speed as he goes past first baseman John Moss. At the lower left, third baseman Ernest Martinez displays the defense which has made this team so solid by snaring a throw from catcher Randy Green and putting the tag on would-be base thief Jerome Sullen of of Lake Charles. Below, coach Terry Hagen embraces reliever Cory Prom after Prom shut out a Lake Charles' rally to preserve Wednesday's victory.

Maybe This Is Year For Mabie, All-Stars

By Sam Cook
Herald Sports Editor

Big League

Oviedo's Howard Mabie is very well acquainted with second place at the Big League World Series. Twice his Orlando Big League All-Stars won the Southern Regional (1979 and 1980) and came up just one or two wins short at the World Series.

Thursday morning, Mabie's collection of stars from Oviedo, Lake Mary, Maitland, Mount Dora, Eustis, Ocoee, Winter Garden and Altamonte Springs did it again — they won the Southern Regional with a 2-1 victory over Niceville at DeLand's Conrad Park.

And maybe, says Mabie, this just might be the year District 14 brings home its first World Series championship. "This is the strongest team we've ever taken to the Series," said Mabie Friday night from Fort Lauderdale, the site for the 11-team tournament which has five representatives from the United States (East, West, North, South and host Broward County), along with six other countries.

Mabie's squad didn't have much time to relish its tournament victory. Less than 24 hours after Todd Auckland drew a bases-loaded walk to force home the winning run, the 16-to 18-year-old group was headed down the turnpike.

Auckland, a two-year MVP at Mount Dora High, had an outstanding regional tournament. In Monday night's opening game, he combined with Oviedo's hard-throwing senior Darrin Reichle to shut down Charleston, W. Va., 5-2. Reichle, only one of two players still in high school on the squad, hurled five innings to notch the win and Auckland earned the save. In Tuesday's 2-1 nine-inning heartstopper against Niceville, Auckland took over for starter Davey Meunch in the eighth and picked up the win when Brent Hazen drove home the game-winner in the bottom of the ninth. In Thursday's title game, Auckland picked up the victory along with his offensive heroics. The saavy right-hander will attend Palm Beach Junior College this fall.

Two Hazen's dot the Big League roster. Brent is an 18-year-old lefthanded hitting third baseman while younger brother Dean is a righthanded hitting first baseman-outfielder. Both were prep standouts at West Orange High and Brent attends Valencia Community College.

Closer to home, 17-year-old Kevin Wick from Lake Mary is one of Mabie's top hurlers. Wick played his prep baseball (and basketball) at Luther High where he was the school's MVP his senior year. Wick, a right-hander and a scholar-athlete, will attend Valparaiso, Ind. this fall.

Of course, Mabie, who is assisted by Ocoee sage Eddie Lee, didn't have to look any further than his own backyard for a couple of big sticks. Seminole County's leading hitter, Brett Thayer, is settled in at third base while the county's main run producer this past spring, Chris Kessinger, is logging some time at first and the outfield. Both were two-year All-Orange Belt Conference stars for the Lions. Both will attend Seminole Community College this fall on baseball scholarships. Rob Isner, another Oviedo graduate, holds down left field. Isner, who attends Rollins College, contributed a key bunt single to Thursday's victory.

Thayer, Reichle and Kessinger all played on Oviedo's district championship team. For the spring and summer, the trio and Mabie have a combined record of 47-13. They were 25-8 during the prep year, 19-5 during the Big League season and 3-0 during the playoffs.

The rest of the roster includes starting shortstop Jack "Circus Man" Smith from Eustis, outfielder Thomas "Hank" Poole from Eustis, starting center field and Eustis High senior Dwayne McLeod, catcher Brent Castel from West Orange High, pitcher Randy Lee from Ocoee, Orlando Edgewater catcher Ed Connelly and pitcher Rick Sanders from Rolling Hills. Max Westgate from Eustis serves as the scout.

"We need four straight wins down here to be World Champions," said Mabie. "The question will be the overall standout pitching of the tournament. I think we've got some pretty good specialists. We'll start either Reichle or Muench Sunday. Wick will be used as the third starter or long reliever and Auckland, of course, is the stopper."

District 14 opens the tournament with host Broward County Sunday at 2:30 p.m. A win in the double-elimination format sends the Orlando to Monday's 8 p.m. game while a loss puts it in the 2:30 p.m. game.

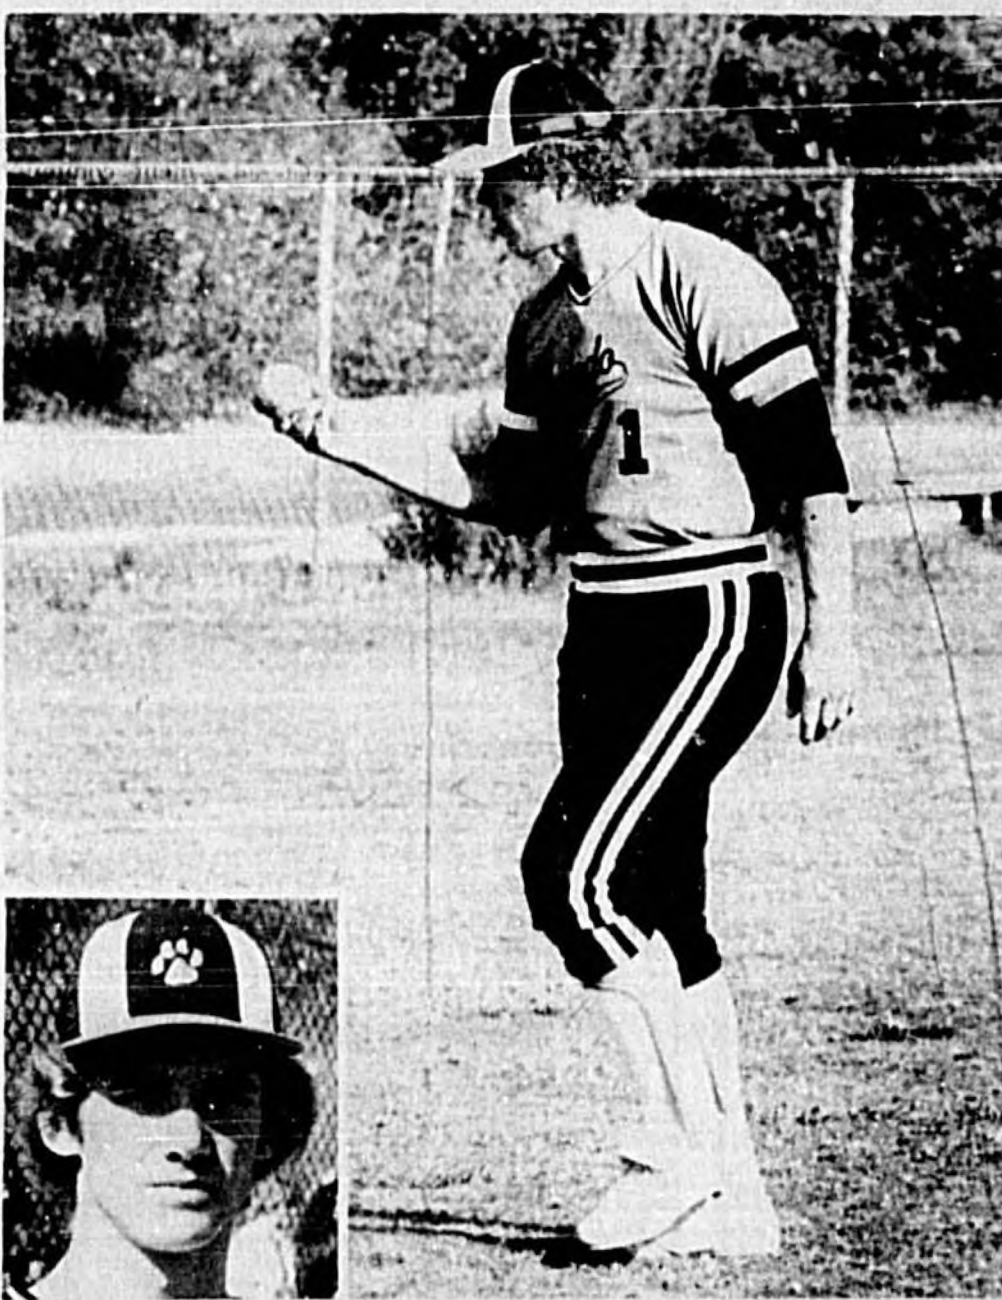

Teams from Spring Valley, N.Y., California, Wisconsin, Montreal, Germany-England-Spain, Mexico, Broward County, Republic of China (Taiwan), Puerto Rico and Venezuela join District 14 in the 11-team field.

Elsewhere in the county, varsity football practice begins Monday morning and the county's sophomores, juniors and seniors will be taking their last fling at the beach before encountering the heat on Monday.

Seminole coach Jerry Posey has the biggest turnaround to engineer of the county's coaches. Posey will bring out his Fighting Seminoles at 8 a.m. and 6 p.m. to try and erase last year's disastrous 0-10.

Lake Mary and first-year coach Harry Nelson, Lyman, Lake Brantley, Lake Howell and Oviedo also begin two-a-days on Monday.

EARLY BIRD PICK — Put your money on coach Mike Bliscaglia's Lake Howell Silver Hawks to take the Five Star Conference and District 4A-9 championships. "The Hawks Fly Free In '83."

Oviedo baseball coach Howard Mabie will be looking for his first Big League World Series championship next week when the District 14 Orlando All-Stars travel to Fort Lauderdale. Mabie has coached two clubs to second-place finishes. Darrin Reichle, inset, will start either Sunday's opening game against Broward or Monday's second game. Reichle is a senior at Oviedo High.

Aoki Takes Buick Lead By 2

Pro Golf

GRAND BLANC, Mich. (UPI) — A trip home sometimes work wonders. It certainly did for Isao Aoki and Wayne Levi.

Aoki went home to Japan to play some golf and "won two tournaments and finished second twice" and came back with new confidence.

He missed the cut in last week's PGA but sizzled in the sun Friday with a 66 to go with his first round 68, giving him a 10-under-par 134 total and a two-shot lead over six other golfers midway through the $350,000 Buick Open.

One of those six was Levi, who went home to Whitesboro, N.Y., and has only played in two tournaments in the last seven weeks.

The rest must have paid off because Levi tied the tournament course record with an 8-under 64 over the 7,001-yard Warwick Hills course.

Joining Levi at 136 were John Cooke (69), Tom Kite (68), Jack Renner (69), and first-round co-leaders D.A. Weibring and Calvin Peete, each of whom shot a 70.

The day's second best round was a 65 turned in by Tom Purtzer, who was in a group of four golfers at 137 that included defending champion Lanny Wadkins.

Levi notched two eagles for the first time in his career in a single round and "made all my legitimate chances for a birdie."

He started on the back nine and "gave away a stroke right off the bat but I was hot after my bogey at 11."

"This is only my second tournament in the last seven weeks," the 30-year-old said. "I was just trying to make the cut. I was trying to ease back into it."

"I haven't played much because I just haven't felt like it," said Levi, who catapulted to fifth on the earnings list last year with $280,681 but has only won $86,385 in 14 tournaments this season.

Bray's Single Drops Eustis

EUSTIS — A four-run fourth inning outburst highlighted by Collin Bray's two-run single past a drawn-in infield propelled West University, Texas to a 13-5 victory over host Eustis Friday night in the Little League Junior All-Stars Southern Regional tournament.

The victory advanced West University to the finals against Altamonte in which the Texas champs would have to beat twice to win the tourney. Altamonte needs only one win to make it to this week's Little League Junior World Series in Detroit.

"We only played half a game tonight," Eustis manager David Young said. "We gave up after they (Texas) got the bases loaded in the fourth."

West University took an early 1-0 lead in the bottom of the first as Chris Finley ripped a one-out single and came around to score on Charlie Gasper's RBI groundout.

Eustis responded with three runs in the top of the second to take a 3-1 lead. Eric Buxman reached on an error to lead off and moved to second on Jimmy Curry's groundout. Taylor Koch then blooped an RBI single down the first base line to tie the score at 1-1. Russell Ettinger then reached on an error to put runners on first and third and, after Ettinger stole second, Eustis tore a page out of Altamonte's book as Doug Bunn dropped down a squeeze bunt that both Buxman and Koch scored on.

West University didn't trail for long, though, as it came back with two runs in the bottom of the second to tie the game at 3-3. With one out, Kevin Jernigan drew a walk and stole second. Lantz Howell then singled to right and Jernigan scored on an error on the right fielder. Howell came around to score when Finley hit into a force play.

After a scoreless third inning, West U. took the lead for good with four runs on four hits in the bottom of the fourth. Jernigan led off by drilling a double to left center and Howell followed with an infield single. A sacrifice by Ronnie Klaus moved the runners to second and third and Klaus also reached on an error on the play to load the bases. Bray then stepped up and smacked his two-run single to center, his third straight hit, to give Texas a 5-3 lead. An RBI single by Gasper and a bases loaded walk enabled West University to increase its lead to 7-3.

West U. came back with three more runs in the fifth to up its lead to 10-3. An RBI single by Waite and a two-run double off the bat of Gasper were the big blows in the inning.

Indians Scalp Cotton Belt, 8-2

PINE BLUFF, Ark. — The Seminole Indians erupted for five runs in the first inning Friday en route to a 8-2 victory over Cotton Belt, Ark., in the opening round of the 12 and Under National Softball tournament. The Indians were scheduled to play a late game Friday night, starting time was slated for 11 p.m., against Riverdale, Ga.

Kristin Bates scattered five hits in picking up the pitching victory for the Indians while Alice Bryant took the loss for Cotton Belt. Bates was backed by a five-run first inning and the Indians put the game on ice with two more runs in the third.

Sanford's Trina Shuler and Longwood's Tonya Colvin led the nine-hit Seminole offensive attack with two hits each in three trips to the plate.

Scottwood Champ Fulfills Prophecy; Rooster's Spur Leads Puppy Stakes

By Happy Ison
Special to the Herald

A little over two weeks ago while sitting in Racing Secretary Garry Duell's office talking about the upcoming $12,000 puppy stakes, a plump young man by the name of Robert Dawson listened very intently for about 10 or 12 minutes.

When there was a lull in the conversation he popped out of his chair and said, "Man, here is something you can write about and you can quote me. Scottwood Champ will flat out break the 3/16th track record in two or three weeks and you can bet on it."

Trainers seem to bend anyone's ear that will listen, so his comments were filed away.

but nothing was ever written about Scottwood Champ.

On Saturday night Aug. 6, the first round of the quarter-finals was being run. Tucked into the middle of the program, race seven to be exact, was a speed merchant's delight, a 3/16ths sprint. For most of the day rain had poured all over the Central Florida area. Super Seminole got more than his share, leaving the track a bit off and letting outside runners move up a grade. The record at Super Seminole for a 3/16th race was 18.18 set by Frontier Lane on Aug. 28, 1982.

Everyone knows that a 3/16th race is a race of break and speed and in this race two greyhounds had the smoke. Scottwood

Dog Racing

Champ and Antonio's Conti in any race they are in are usually first at the 1/8th pole. Howdy Prince surprised everyone by jumping out on top with Scottwood right on his heels and Perfective and Carouser in hot pursuit. Within a snap of the fingers Scottwood was on top racing for the finish line as if he wanted to get out of the monsoon rains. It was an easy four and a half length victory for the Champ. Dave Strickler announced the time of 18.11 and a new track record. Railbirds felt a track record was near impossible on this muddy night, but Scottwood Champ fooled everyone but Robert Dawson.

The only bad part about this story is the fact Robert Dawson didn't get to see his prophecy come true. Seems like the amiable trainer for Midnight Blue left for reasons unknown. Robert, wherever you are, congrats, you sure know your greyhounds.

With just one night of racing left before the field is lowered from 48 to 32 to complete the semi-finals the report is good for some and bad for others. The surprises are RT's Keri Kay with 30 points and Tight Schedule with 31 points. The disappointment is Chief Wally who seems to have lost it all. The Chief has only eight points and needs a win in his Tuesday start to even have a chance of staying in the hunt.

With 36 points, Rooster's Spur is the only three-time winner. My Unicorn is second with 33 points. Others beside the four mentioned above are More Tax Graham with 30 points, Dash A Poco and Rowdy Texan have 29 and Sargent Bilko is in the eighth slot so far with 28 points.

If any of the above falter for any reason, look for First Term or Rare Racer to jump into the thick of it. The round Tuesday night will tell us a lot, as the 32 semi-finalists will have to be in to be in top form to make the Final Eight. The puppy final is scheduled for Saturday night, Aug. 27.

Hoyt Wins 15th For Red-Hot Sox

United Press International

LaMarr Hoyt just became the major's first 15-game winner. He just matched a career-high with nine strikeouts. He pitches for the Chicago White Sox, who lead the AL West by 6 1/2 games. He should be satisfied.

He's not. "I have some more losses (10) than I should right now," said Hoyt, who scattered six hits to lead Chicago to its sixth victory in seven games, a 2-1 decision over the Baltimore Orioles.

"I'm not saying I could have won 20 or anything by now but there are some games I should have won, but didn't."

Now Baltimore Manager Joe Altobelli is a guy who has a reason to gripe. The loss was his club's seventh straight, and the Orioles, who began the series with Chicago in first place in the AL East, have tumbled to fourth.

"You think of a lineup change, but that's not the answer," said Altobelli, who was ejected for arguing balls and strikes in the eighth inning. "It's amazing that we can lose seven straight and be only a game out of first. If you could possibly shut out all the wins and losses and just look at the stats, we're a game out of first."

Hoyt, who has won four straight, gave up a run in the fifth when John Lowenstein walked and scored on Ken Singleton's double. But Chicago rebounded with two unearned runs in the fifth.

Vance Law walked and Scott Fletcher singled to right. Third baseman Todd Cruz was given an error when he dropped catcher Joe Nolan's throw on Julio Cruz's sacrifice attempt to load the bases.

Dave Stegman then lifted a sacrifice fly to right to score Law and Carlton Fisk's sacrifice fly to left scored Fletcher.

Mike Flanagan, 6-2, was the hard-luck loser, suffering his second defeat to Chicago in six days.

Tigers 7, Yankees 6

DETROIT (UPI) — On a night when muscle got the Detroit Tigers as far as extra innings, it was the legs of an unlikely runner that finally made the difference.

Parrish, who has battled a bad knee most of this season, scored the winning run in the Tigers' 7-6, 10-inning victory over New York after putting the Yankees in a hole as he led off the inning.

The Tigers had slugged four homers to forge the 6-6 tie after nine innings.

Parrish, the big Detroit catcher, began the winning rally when he blooped a hit into relatively short right field and didn't stop at first base. That forced a bad throw by Yankees rookie Don Mattingly — a late-inning defensive replacement — and Parrish steamed his way to third.

"These guys have been jamming me, and I never seemed to get anything to hit," Parrish said. "I just hoped to get something in. I managed to get a bat on it and push it to right. Sometimes you get lucky."

"I don't know how good an arm Mattingly had, but Billy (first base coach Console) was yelling 'Go, go.' When he yelled go, I just put it in gear."

He got there easily, setting the stage for Larry Henderson, who followed with a line drive single off the Yankees' third pitcher, Dale Murray, 2-3, to win the game.

Doug Bair, 4-3, got the win in relief after starter Dan Pety and John Martin had trouble putting the clamps on the Yankees.

The Tigers, who dropped an extra inning game to New York Thursday night, came from behind three times before winning to move into a first-place tie with Milwaukee in the American League East.

"We had too many opportunities," Tigers Manager Sparky Anderson noted. "In all honesty, that game was supposed to be ours anyway. We had the chances."

Detroit almost gave it away, however.

The Yankees took their final lead in eighth inning, aided by Tigers shortstop Alan Trammell's two-base throwing error.

Trammell redeemed himself, however, with his homer with two out in the bottom of the ninth. The shot to left barely cleared Yankees outfielder Dave Winfield's glove.

"I thought, 'My god he's going to catch that ball' at first," Trammell said. "I wanted to redeem myself because of the error."

The play in left field was a close one.

"I just don't know this fence well enough I guess," Winfield said. "You have to climb that fence differently than in New York. I just missed it by a foot. I had the angle, the timing, and I gave it my best shot."

Single-handedly, Winfield almost lifted the Yankees to victory. After he won Thursday night's game with a 10th inning home run, he clubbed a pair of two-run homers and a double to drive in four of the Yankees' six runs Friday.

"He's just like George Brett," Parrish marveled. "I wouldn't mind walking him every time up and pitching to everybody else. He has the ability to turn a game around himself."

Blue Jays 5, Brewers 4

At Toronto, Willie Upshaw doubled in Barry Bonnell from second base in the eighth to lead the Blue Jays. The triumph was only Toronto's second in its last 10 games while Milwaukee lost for the third time in its last nine. Lloyd Moseby hit his 15th homer of the year for the Blue Jays.

Rangers 6, Indians 2

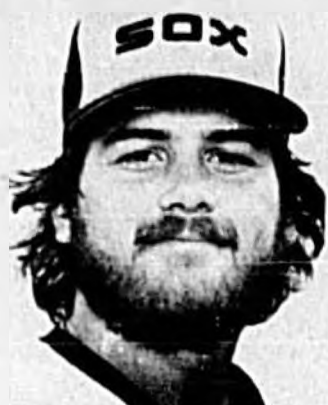

At Arlington, Texas, Pete O'Brien's two-run triple led a 1-1 hit attack and Frank Tanana and Odell Jones combined on a four-hitter to help the Rangers snap Cleveland's four-game winning streak.

Mariners 7, Angels 6

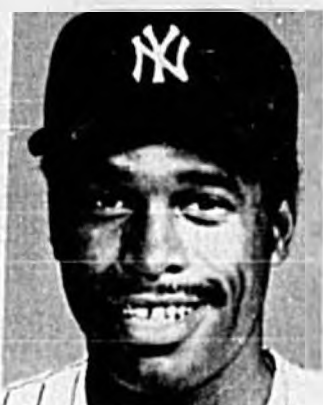

At Anaheim, Calif., Pat Putnam tied the score with a home run and Steve Henderson doubled in the go-ahead run in the ninth, rallying the Mariners. Mike Stanton, 1-3, was the winner while Bill Caudill pitched the ninth for his 22nd save. Luis Sanchez, 8-6, took the loss.

Twins 5, A's 3

At Oakland, Tom Brunansky capped a three-run sixth with a two-out single and Gary Ward later padded the lead with his 19th homer of the season for the Twins. Ken Schrom raised his record to 10-4. Ron Davis earned his 20th save, pitching the final 1 2-3 innings. Tom Underwood, 8-6, was the loser.

Bass Tournament Fishing Does Not Harm Resources

The Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission reports that the results of a recently completed study by its personnel indicates that bass tournament fishing in Florida does not have an adverse impact on the state's fishery resources.

Data for the report was collected from information received through the Commission's tournament permitting system, which requires detailed statistical information to be recorded on all fish caught during each tournament.

"This system was originally developed in 1975 to identify intensively fished areas and to determine if there was a need to restrict or regulate bass tournaments," said Fisheries Biologist Phil Chapman. Chapman and Fish Management Specialist Wes Fish prepared the report.

"Major areas of concern included the possibility of overharvest or negative impact on fishery resources and potential conflicts with non-tournament fishermen," Chapman said.

Most important conclusion of the study was that tournament fishing does not have a negative impact on fishery resources. In fact, tournament statistics revealed that catch rates actually increased in the past five year period as compared with statistics compiled prior to 1978.

The study did not indicate whether the fish were getting dumber or the fishermen were getting smarter, but I suspect that improved tackle, bait, and technique was the major contributor to more fish being caught now than in the past.

Another conclusion of the report was that professional competitive fishermen as a group are "little, if any, more successful than the average anglers."

This statement is bound to raise the hackles on the neck of every tournament fisherman in the state. It shouldn't get any one of them angry, because the statement is simply an opinion of one man. It is a very easy task to obtain complete statistics on the fishing success of every angler in a tournament.

Cliff Nelson

because the recording of this data is required. On the other hand, it is impossible to obtain accurate data on even a fraction of the non-tournament anglers. Therefore there can never be a proper basis for tournament versus non-tournament statistical comparisons.

There were some interesting observations, however, within the body of the study. It was determined that Florida tournament catch rates were within the 0.1 to 0.3 bass per hour national average, for example. The statistical basis for the reports came from the 586 permitted bass tournaments held in Florida between 1975 and 1982, and included only those tournaments where either 50 or more fishermen were charged an entry fee of $25 or more, 25 or more boats were used, or prizes exceeded $1,000.

Some very interesting statistics came from the study. For example, the statewide tournament average catch rate was 0.27 fish per hour, or approximately one bass caught for every four man hours of fishing. The highest catch rate was at Lake Okechobee, where 0.4 bass were caught per hour of fishing.

The Clermont chain in Lake County had the highest average weights of bass at 2.6 pounds per fish. Orange and Lochloosa lakes, the Apalachicola River, and Lake Seminole followed with an average of 2.2 pounds.

The average "big bass" in each tournament at Orange and Lochloosa lakes was 9.4 pounds, the best in the state. The Winter Haven chain ranked second with big bass averaging 8.4 pounds.

Most of Florida's bass tournament are held in March, April, and May, and relatively few were held in July and August. Water temperatures during summer months is so high that the survival potential of released fish is significantly reduced, the report concluded.

This news release showing catch rates for various areas of the state brought up the question of how fishing in our local tournaments in the St. Johns River compares with these state averages. A little calculator work reveals that in the Osteen Bridge Bass tournament held last week, the catch rate was 0.21 bass per man hour of fishing, slightly less than the 0.27 state average, and the average weight of all fish was 1.8 pounds, which compares favorably with some of the best areas of the state. Not bad at all when you consider that August fishing is not the best of the year in this area.

If the water in the St. Johns River can stay up for a year or two, it is very likely that local tournament fishing will be as fine as any in the state. This is good news for local businesses, because of the influx of non-resident fishermen, and dollars, that better fishing will attract.

Fishing in the local area continues fair to good, but should improve with the predicted slow rise in water levels through the remainder of August.

Bass are taking top water lures very early and very late in the day, but plastic worms continue to be the favorite of most fishermen. Schooling activity is desultory, and occurs very early or very late when you can find them. Usually only a few bass are feeding, and the action is very slow.

The speckled perch are ganged up in the deeper holes in the river and in the lakes, and reports of good catches continue to come in — particularly from the deep holes under the Osteen Bridge.

Good fishing to you! And remember this safety tip: Keep the horsepower on your boat just a little less than your I.Q.

Sheehan Holds Lead In LPGA Tourney

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (UPI) — Patty Sheehan is first on the leader board and second in her own mind. After two rounds in a $180,000 LPGA tournament, Sheehan holds a two-stroke lead but that won't keep her from pretending she has to play catch-up going into today's third round.

Sheehan, winner of two tournaments this year, said Friday she keeps from taking her sub-par rounds for granted by playing a mental game in which she trails an imaginary golfer.

When she started Friday's second round at 7-under-par on the 6,191-yard Willow Creek Golf Club course, she told herself "the leader is 11-under and I have to catch her. I'm going to up it to 13."

Sheehan entered today's third round 9-under in the third annual 71-hole tournament.

Her first round was flawless, but she was guilty of two bogeys on her second outing.

"I started out really well," said Sheehan, who began her second round on the back nine. "But when I got to 18, things kind of fell apart. I mis-clubbed (No. 18) and I made a bad shot on No. 2."

Sheehan bogeyed both holes, missing a 15-foot putt on No. 18 and two putts on No. 2 after landing in a bunker.

Women's Roundup

A double-bogey by Kathy Whitworth on No. 12 kept the tour's all-time winner from catching Sheehan, even though she sank a hole-in-one during her round.

Just as Whitworth's ace — her third in competition and sixth overall — on the par-3, 173-yard hole sparked her round.

MANHATTAN BEACH, Calif. (UPI) — Top-seeded Martina Navratilova and No. 2 seed Chris Evert Lloyd appear headed for another showdown after capturing straight-set victories in quarterfinal matches of a $150,000 tournament.

Navratilova, 26, the world's No. 1 ranked women's player, played up to that rating for the third consecutive match, routing unseeded Wendy White of Atlanta, 6-0, 6-1, in just 45 minutes Friday.

Evert, 28, struggled to a 7-5, 6-2 victory over No. 8 seed Jo Durr of Britain. She had difficulty in the opening set, being broken by the 23-year-old Durr in the first and fifth games. But she also broke Durr's service twice in the set.

Morace Bowls 9 Strikes, Finishes With 268 Game

Where did the summer go? That's the question being asked by all the league bowlers who have just about completed their summer leagues. Time flies when you're having fun!

Several Jim scores have been bowled this summer. Jim "Ace" Morace bowled two excellent games in the men's "Unprofessional" league — 268 and 264. Naturally, he flirted with the ever elusive 300 game. A ten pin tap with his first ball in the 10th frame broke up a string of nine strikes in his 268 game.

Carol Slaughter, of the Wednesday Morning Ladies Match Point league, bowled a nice 613 series including a 221 game. The following week she had a 228 game.

No-Tap bowlers need to join the Sunday afternoon fun. The 300 pot is $100. Yes, we still have one left even though James Martin won the pot in late July for a No-Tap 300 game. James also rolled a 278 game and a 711 series in the Wednesday Night Men's Scratch Doubles. That 200 is not too far away, James.

In the summer youth league, David Lambert, 11, had a 221 game with seven strikes in a row. Watch out adults — some tough competition is on the way!

As the summer leagues are winding down, you can feel the excitement in the air as most of the fall league bowlers are coming in to practice. Many of the leagues are already full, and the rest are filling rapidly, so if you want to get on the league of your choice, please call Bowl America (322-7542) as soon as possible so we can place you.

On Sunday, Aug. 14 at 1:00 p.m., all league presidents and secretaries and their spouses will attend the League Officer's Jamboree at Bowl America, Sanford. It's a real fun party with lunch, punch and a bowling tournament. Bowl America hosts this party annually to show our appreciation for the league officers and to kick off the fall season. — ROGER QUICK

Strikers Get Last Paychecks For Awhile

UPI and local reports

Telephone employees in Sanford received their last pay checks on the picket line Friday as efforts to end the nationwide telephone strike remained at an impasse.

The pay checks, handed out by Bell's Sanford manager Larry Strickler, were for work performed before the walkout.

Although the strikers' union, Communication Workers of America, has a $23 million strike fund, the workers will receive no weekly strike pay. Benefits are paid as needed, according to a union spokesman.

Nationally, about 675,000 telephone workers stayed off the job for the seventh day Saturday. Talks with the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. on a master contract were not expected to resume until next week.

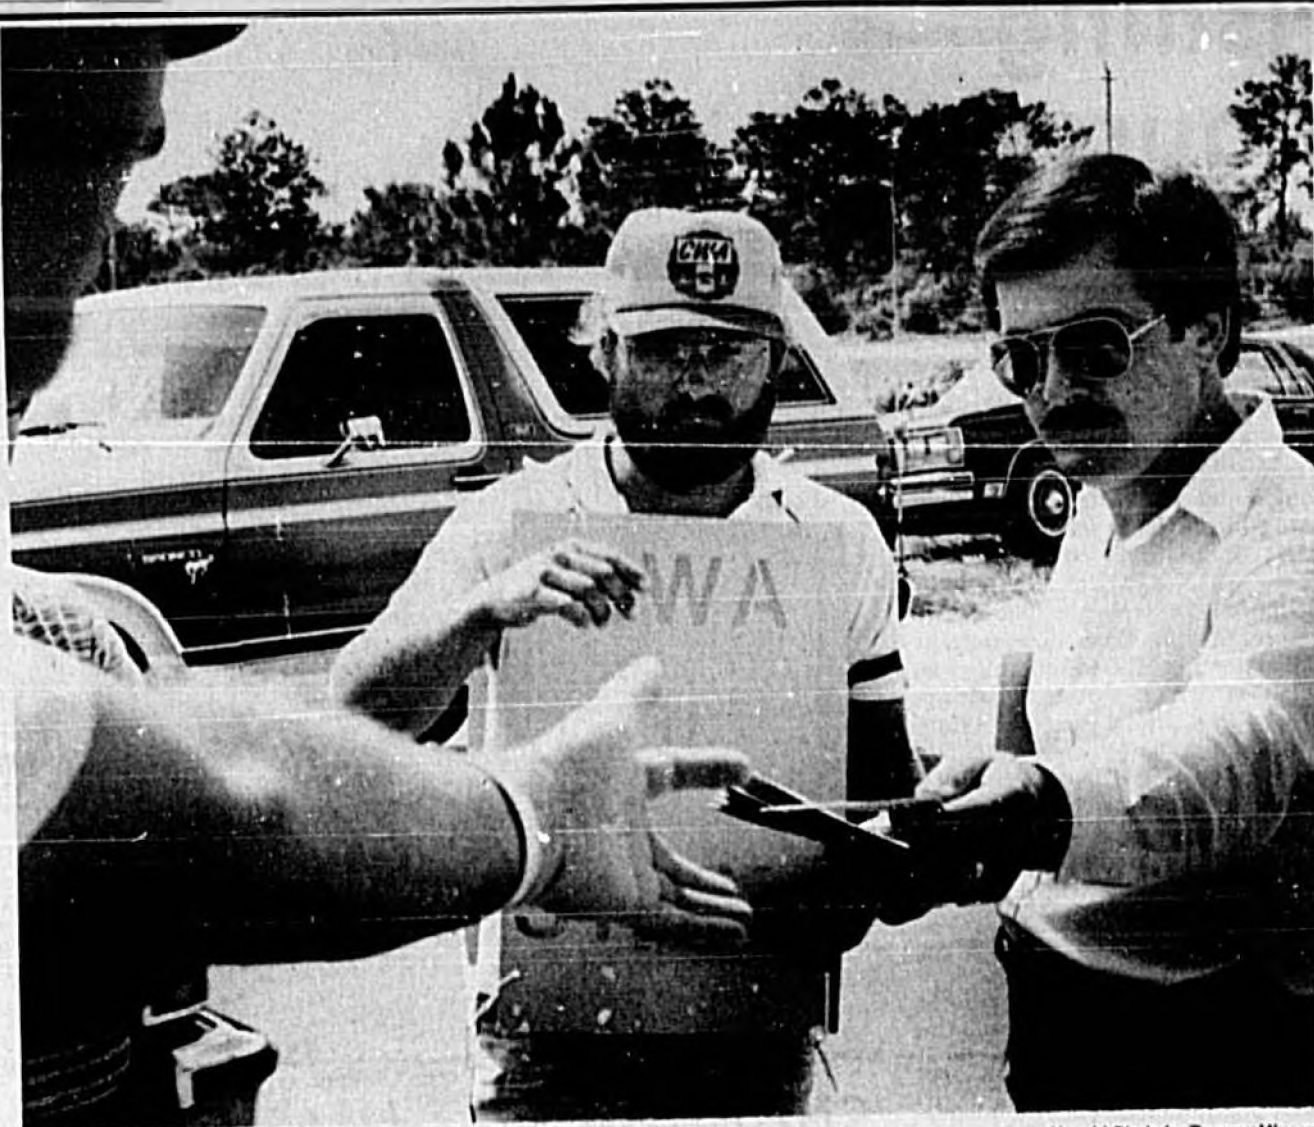

"Nothing is happening," said Francine Zucker, a spokeswoman for the union which represents 525,000 of the strikers.

"Not even informal talks," she said. "The issues are employment security and salaries. The strike is strong."

"No progress," said AT&T spokesman Charles Dynes. "A long way to go."

There were scattered incidents of vandalism and picket line violence Friday, as company managers and supervisors continued to fill in for the strikers. Consumers encountered delays on calls requiring operator assistance.

In Portland, Maine, a striking New England Telephone Co. employee was charged with malicious mischief for allegedly jumping on the hood of a car driven by a company employee trying to maneuver through a picket line to go to work.

An underground telephone cable was cut in Philadelphia, causing a temporary loss of service to about 400 customers in Center City, including the 30th Street train station.

In northern California's Butte County, phone service to 250 customers was interrupted when vandals severed three telephone cables, Pacific Telephone Co. officials said.

And 150 Mountain Bell customers in Phoenix were without phone service for part of the day Friday when wires in three terminal boxes were damaged, a company spokesman said.

A federal mediator called in to assist in separate talks between AT&T and the 50,000-member Telecommunications International Union made further contacts Friday with representatives of both sides, but there was no report of any breakthrough.

The unions have turned down wage increases of up to 3.5 percent offered by AT&T. Union spokesmen said wage and cost-of-living adjustments should be closer to the 7 percent productivity increase at the giant firm.

...Aid Pact

Altamonte keep its costs for new equipment and personnel down. He said city residents also pay lower insurance premiums because of the automatic aid agreement," he said.

Gaston said the agreement is the only efficient way to serve residents in that portion of the county where the city's annexation has proceeded unevenly, leaving pockets of the county virtually surrounded by the city and appendages of the city which jut out into the county.

"Seminole County has a station in Forest City but just down the street from the station is Altamonte Springs," he said. "Without the agreement, we'd have had to build a station there too."

The agreement opened the door to more cooperation between the city and county, Gaston said. The county recently agreed to turn the Forest City station over to the city, freeing the county to build new stations in Fern Park, Chuluota and Wekiwa without losing any of its protection.

The move also saved the city and county $500,000 each because they didn't have to duplicate services. "We're placing stations strategically, not politically," Gaston said.

Longwood joined the automatic aid pact four years ago and has also benefited from the arrangement, according to Fire Chief Charles Chatman.

"It has saved the city considerable amounts of money," he said. "It's allowed us to keep our personnel down and yet have people when we need them."

Longwood has not yet grown to the point where its main station can't get to calls within a reasonable amount of time, Chatman said. And when a new substation is built next year, response time should be less than three minutes to all calls in the city.

But the automatic aid agreement benefits Longwood when a major fire erupts in the city or when firefighters are on several calls at once.

The other departments will also respond to the calls or they will staff a fire station while the city crews are on the scene.

The three departments share a radio frequency and requests for assistance are handled by the county's dispatchers. When one unit is dispatched other units are automatically dispatched to fill in for them.

While units were at the scene of the Altamonte roof collapse five county units were moved closer to Altamonte to maintain protection in the city.

Units were moved from Five Points and Goldenrod to Casselberry, from Oviedo to Chuluota, from Paola to Lake Mary Boulevard and from Forest City to Brantley Square near Longwood.

Chatman, Gaston and Kaiser agreed that each of the three parties in the agreement have improved their services at a reduced cost.

But not everyone is as enthusiastic about the program. Sanford City Manager Pete Knowles said automatic aid benefits the county but not the cities.

"If there's a fire a block outside the city, automatic aid means the city has to go out," he said.

Knowles prefers a mutual aid agreement like the one Sanford has with the county, Lake Mary and Longwood. "Mutual aid means you get help when you need it. Automatic aid is just a response system."

He added that cities do not receive the same quality protection that they offer the county. "They (the county) aren't equipped to fight urban fires. They're equipped to fight rural fires."

Perez said Mejia was prime minister in Rios Montt's government. "Basically it was one general who took another. Mejia told Rios Montt, 'I'm the new president.'"

While the excuse for the ouster may have been Rios Montt's fundamentalist religion which was unpopular in the predominantly Roman Catholic country, Perez said the new president is really afraid of Nicaragua and communist infiltration in the southern part of the country.

"Guatemala has oil. It was recently discovered and Guatemala is the wealthiest of the Central American nations," Perez said. "Nicaragua is making inroads to getting at that oil."

Currently Nicaragua is getting oil by way of Cuba, Perez said.

The physician said he last visited Guatemala right after the devastating earthquakes there about four years ago.

"It is a beautiful country. It has a lot of mountains and lakes between the big valleys. They have many small volcanoes that are still burping a little. The people don't play any attention to the rumblings," he said.

Perez said the nation's president has his office in a beautiful, old Spanish colonial palace built by the Spaniards in the 17th or 18th century.

He noted that the Indians in Guatemala have good pieces of land that they cultivate in the old fashioned way using oxen and ploughs so their yield is not as good as that on American land. But the nation does produce a tremendous amount of limes, lemons and oranges and corn.

Of American involvement in El Salvador, Perez said the United States has no choice since the weapons being used by Nicaragua and the rebels include Russian rifles and Chinese grenades.

"Either we get involved there or we lose South America. If the Communists get control of South America the way they are trying to control Africa with Cuba in the south and (Col. Moammar) Khadafi, (president of Libya) in the north, there will be no place to get the raw materials we need. Then we will have the choice of fighting or surrendering," Perez said.

"We cannot subsist by ourselves. We buy from them and manufacture here and sell it back to them," he noted.

Perez came to the United States for the first time in 1956 to further his education, after attending the University of Havana. His plan was to go back to Cuba in 1960 to practice medicine.

During his years at the University of Havana he met and became friends with Fidel Castro. After Castro took power, Perez was sent a letter ordering him to return to Cuba in two weeks to serve the government or he would be condemned to death as a traitor.

"Castro believes you are either with him or against him. There is no in between. And friendship means nothing," Perez said.

Perez said he has only one sister left in Cuba. "But she is married to a good communist and so she is having no problems."

Life was definitely better in Cuba under Fulgencia Batista before Castro took over, he said. "There were people of all classes, the rich, the middle class and the poor. Today everyone is equally poor, except for the few who are more equal than the others. They are members of the communist party and they live very well."

Perez and his wife, Dr. Maria Perez, met at the University of Havana where they were both studying. "It seems like yesterday," he said. "We were both in an anatomy class and since Maria's surname was Pique, she and I were assigned by alphabetical order to using the same cadaver."

"So, I met my wife over a cadaver," he said. While awaiting his U.S. citizenship and his state license to practice medicine, Perez worked as a physician at Chattahoochee. And he and Maria began the search for a small town where their children could grow up with no problems.

They chose Sanford, which was close enough to several large cities and yet where they could know and be friends with the leaders of the community and —where everyone knows everyone else.

...Executives Tapped To Recruit

at least a year.

Presentations outlining the functions and specific programs of the Division of Economic Development were made by the Commerce staff members during the luncheon. Mixson, who presented special plaques to the participants, said he was very pleased with the interest shown at the very productive luncheon.

Mixson said he is extremely interested in becoming "partners with the people of Florida." He said that these business executives have a lot greater influence on their colleagues in other states than his paid staffers in selling the advantages of relocating in Florida.

Nolan agreed that the business executives are in a better position to answer questions by interested businessmen about the business climate here than the state staff.

"The Department of Commerce distributed a list of target companies," he said, "primarily high tech industries. They asked if we knew of anyone we could contact on a one-to-one basis or could provide a lead to be checked out."

"It was conducted in a low key manner and wasn't meant for every person to there to jump on an airplane and go off," he added. "Most of these men travel extensively and are in a position to spread the news internationally. A computer executive from this state will know computer executives in other parts of the country and can say 'You ought to come to Florida. It's a good place to be.'"

"The committee has been asked to serve for a loosely defined one-year period and will meet on an as-needed basis," said Nolan. "It requires not so much structured meetings as a lot of telephone contacts."

thought of keeping money set aside in the 1983-84 fiscal year budget for a new fire truck and a new police car. Perinchieff exploded that the city has "nickel and dimed roads in the city to death." He said City Clerk Connie Major could attest that the majority of telephone calls into city hall concern roads and road maintenance.

"We have slid backwards. It's a minor miracle that Orloves has been able to keep the roads going with hand-aids," Perinchieff said.

At the same time, Perinchieff said he would not be bound to any tax rate until the people speak out on the budget at public hearings on Sept. 15 and 29. Early in the discussion, Fox gathered his papers together and walked out in disgust after Megonegal announced that he wanted to see both a new fire truck for the volunteer fire department and a new police car kept in the budget.

Singing Nurse

'Enlightening' Leukemia Victim Has A Song In Her Heart

By Doris Dietrich
PEOPLE Editor

Nobuko Tamashiro would have been an opera singer today if her mother had anything to say about it.

But the bashful Japanese girl could never quite bring herself to sing before an audience. "The words won't come before a crowd," she shyly admits.

Nobuko opted to be a nurse. Instead, and for 20 years her beautiful soprano voice has had soothing and healing effects on patients in the Sanford-Seminole area.

At Seminole Memorial Hospital where she worked as a registered nurse for 12 years, Nobuko was known as "The Singing Nurse." She is also called Missy but she is better known as Mary Clarke.

Always keep in touch,' Mary Clarke has taught her close-knit family. They are all letter-writers. Calling Mary 'heaven-sent,' and the 'total wife, woman and mother,' Bruce Clarke says she corresponds with 300 persons from a well-organized file of more than 500 names. She never forgets anniversaries and birthdays.

The gracious lady of many names explained that in Japanese, Nobuko is translated as "the enlightened one" and Tamashiro means "golden palace."

Mary Clarke is an enlightened one from the word

"go." And she is highly enlightening with sterling 14 karat gold qualities. Married to Bruce Clark, a retired U.S. Navy chief petty officer, Mary is filled with faith, hope, love and charity. And life.

Today, Mary and Bruce live in a comfortable home in Sanford. "Luxury," she calls it, "with well-stocked cupboards." They moved to Sanford and bought their home when Bruce was stationed at Sanford Naval Air Station in 1964. After SNAS was decommissioned in 1967, he was transferred to NAS Albany, Ga. until his retirement in 1970.

The family remained in Sanford where the children were raised and Bruce commuted on weekends.

Mary recalls the lean years when she married Bruce, an American sailor, in Hawaii. That was Dec. 17, 1949.

She chuckles about their sharing a strawberry soda (he was entitled to free chow aboard ship but wouldn't indulge in such extravagances as food after spending all their money on a wedding).

The newlyweds lovingly sipped the soda - a swallow for Mary, a swallow for Bruce. Except that Bruce never swallowed his share and Mary drank the entire contents.

Petite and doll-like (she's 5' 10" and weighs 95 pounds), Mary expresses her happiness. Her five children are the love of her life, along with Bruce. There are the 28-year-old twins, Norman, stationed in the navy in Spain, and Bruce, in the navy in Memphis. Daughter Gloria Ewell is in Saudi Arabia where her husband is in the computer business. Ralford is general manager of Red Lobster, International Drive, Orlando, and Rachel is a school teacher in Jacksonville.

Explaining her bashfulness and how she would never speak her peace about any issue except the children, "then," Mary says, I AM the boss.

Mary drifts back to her early years in America. She has known more love and hunger during her 59 years. The aftermath of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor Dec. 7, 1941, left the marks of fear and loneliness on the 17-year-old girl who came to San Francisco from her homeland of Hawaii to further her education while living with her uncle, a medical doctor and professor at Stanford University Medical School.

After President Roosevelt declared war following the bizarre air attack, the Japanese residents on the California coast were evacuated inland to relocation camps. Mary never saw her uncle again.

She says he was sent back to Japan.

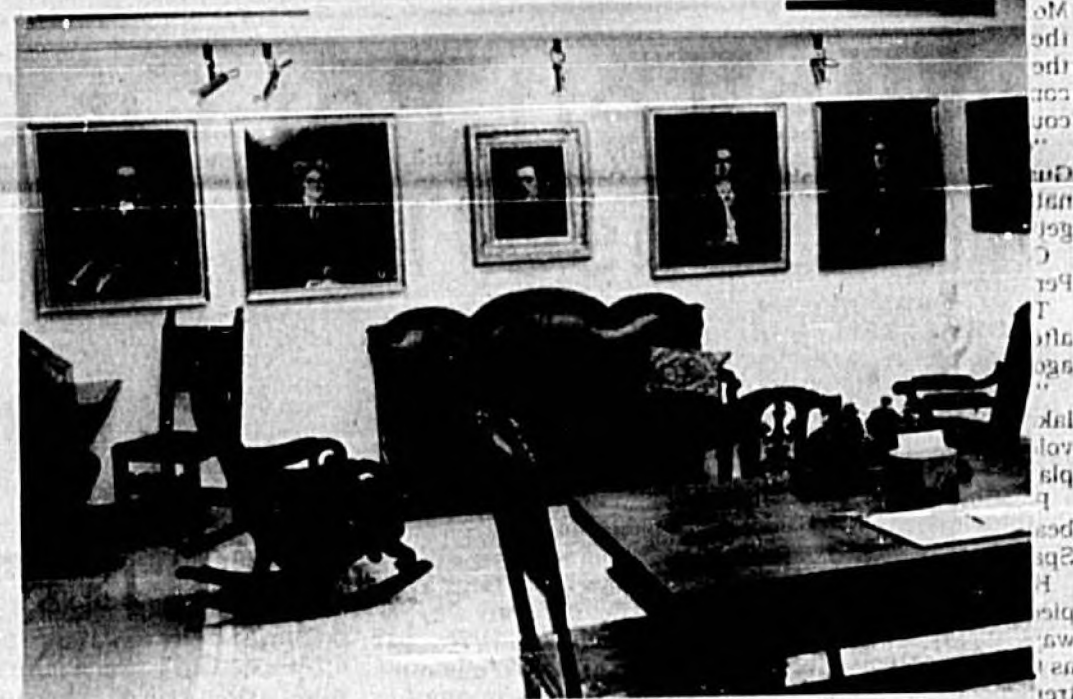

Speaking softly, Mary talks about the train trip from San Francisco to Gila Rivers, Ariz. with her aunt and her four small children, including a baby in arms. She mentioned the blinds were drawn on Furniture and paintings belonging to the founder of the City of Sanford are housed in the the Henry S. Sanford Museum-Library, a classic building, standing like an elegant little dowager at the East First Street entrance to the city.

Preservation Society Forming

A new element of an old society has sprung up in Sanford.

And it's well-preserved. Mildred M. Caskey, curator of the Henry S. Sanford Museum-Library, 520 E. First St., has nothing but the deepest admiration and love for the quaint facility. Ask her the meaning of "preserve," and the knowledgeable curator is likely to proclaim the following: "It's a verb meaning to keep in perfect or unaltered condition and to maintain in an unchanged state."

Mildred explains that for almost 30 years the Henry S. Sanford Museum-Library has been doing just that. She describes the edifice as a classic building standing like an elegant dowager at the East First Street entrance to the city of Sanford and historic Fort Mellon Park. The museum was built as a memorial to the founder of Sanford and houses the extensive library of General Sanford as well as a collection of rare art, furniture and family artifacts.

According to Miss Caskey, the Rev. Fred Ensminger, one of the museum-library's first curators, wisely established a strict policy of historical preservation which has been faithfully observed by each succeeding guardian of the facility and its ties with the past.

Mildred says, "In recent years, the library-museum with its wealth of historical information, has been a veritable magnet, drawing visitors from all over the country as well as Paris, Belgium, South Africa, Germany, England and Canada. These visitors make use of the library-museum and the extensive microfilm collection which includes literally thousands of letters from the most celebrated personalities and dignitaries of the period from 1861, when Henry S. Sanford, an international attorney, served America as minister to Belgium, France, Spain and Russia until his death in 1891.

"Diplomatic documents and records, press releases and personal memos recorded on microfilm are invaluable research sources for authors, historians, and graduate students and is a constant inspiration to Sanfordites seeking information about their own background."

It's been a long time coming, but the Executive Committee and Board of Directors of the museum-library have formed the Henry S. Sanford Historical Preservation Society in responding to the needs of both historical preservation and the expansion of present facilities as well as the hope of involving interested residents of Sanford and Central Florida. A membership drive has been launched with gratifying results. Mildred says.

In forming the preservation society, "the committee" has addressed itself to the importance of developing ways and means of making use of and preserving community ties with our historical past," Mildred adds.

The early settlers and pioneers of Sanford will play a vital role in the newly formed preservation society. Mrs. Ruth Lee, who heads the society's Oral History Division, has been working for the past year compiling data and information.

Mrs. Lee has visited with the families and friends of Sanford's early settlers gathering stories, recollections and historical facts for posterity. This information has been recorded and when completed, will be developed into a full-length book, based on Sanford's historical past, its growth and development as envisioned by its founder and carried forth by each following generation.

Model Julie Smith 'ready to work'

Sanford Model On Way To Professional Goal

Sanford's first graduate of Lisa Maile Professional Image & Modeling School in Winter Park is Julie Smith, who recently received Certificate of Award in the Image Development and Professional modeling programs.

The daughter of Mrs. Doris H. Smith of Sanford appeared in a fashion show for J.C. Penney at the school's graduation on July 9 and was booked to model in a show for Ivey's of Colonial Plaza in conjunction with the store's opening.

Julie attended All Souls Parochial School in Sanford, along with Bishop Moore, and graduated from high school in 1980. She studied art at Seminole Community College and is presently working in retail management at The Limited in Altamonte Mall.

Her long-range goal has always been to combine modeling with being a successful businesswoman, and in the weeks following her graduation, Julie interviewed with prominent modeling/agent serving on the Board of Advisors of Lisa Maile Image & Modeling School. Because of those interviews, she is currently listed with two modeling agencies and in her own words, "ready to work."

"I have gained so much confidence while going to the school - I would recommend it to anyone! The Image Development program helps you to reach your best possible look, with training in skincare, make-up, hair care and styling, diet, exercise and wardrobe.

"I think you get the most self-confidence from the interviewing and public speaking classes in that program - you work in the television studio and learn to see yourself the way others see you - and anyone can use that! The modeling course is so different from any other in this area because Lisa and Art (the school's owners) have worked with the best professionals in town, and they all are the teachers. Their instruction is geared to the Central Florida area. Instead of, say, many schools teaching runway styles from Paris or New York. What I've learned is functional right here, where I'll be working. All of the courses are Lifetime Enrollments, too, so anytime I want to repeat a class, it's free."

According to Julie, "After my classes in runway, brochurework, print, informal and acting, I know I'm prepared for anything. The sessions are so thorough and the instructors are so honest, I really feel I can call myself a professional model."

Julie's favorite classes in her modeling course featured Luke Halpin, former star of the "Flipper" TV series, who instructs sessions in TV commercials and acting. Because of the demand for local talent in advertising, the school has recently added two new programs in this area: TV, Film & Commercial Acting for adults and Television & Commercial Acting for children.

Wife Left Pot Of Gold To Chase The Rainbow

DEAR ABBY: For over 15 years I was married to a wonderful man. He was an excellent provider (I would not have had to work, but I chose to), a good father to our children and a good Christian. I always had free rein with our funds, no questions asked. His only fault was that he was a dud in the bedroom.

I met a very attractive man about my age. We became intimately involved, and I found him to be excellent in bed. I became convinced that I couldn't live without him, so I divorced my husband and married him.

After five years I realized that the bedroom was the only place where the bum was any good. He was inconsiderate, selfish, downgraded my children and me and had a roving eye. Now I have to work in order to feed and clothe my children properly. I have bought nothing for myself in the last five years, but this man has plenty of money for whatever he wants.

I finally got my head straight, and now I'm waiting for my second divorce to become final.

My advice to a woman whose only gripe about her husband is his performance in bed is: Please see a marriage counselor or even a sex therapist, but don't get involved with another man!

I dropped the pot of gold to chase the rainbow.

FOOLISH BEYOND WORDS

DEAR FOOLISH: There's nothing so clear as 20-20 hindsight. Well, ladies, there's a million dollars worth of advice for the price of a newspaper.

DEAR ABBY: This has been bugging me for years. It's the way people always greet you with, "How are you?" Then they zoom right by without even waiting for an answer. If they aren't interested in how a person is, why do they ask? Why not just say, "Hello?"

There have been times when I would like to tell

Dear

somebody how I really am, but I never get the chance because nobody waits for an answer.

I work in an office, and this morning when I came to work, a man yelled from across the room, "Hi, Lea, how are you?" Did he actually expect me to yell across the room, "Well, not too good; my hemorrhoids are killing me!"

I hope you don't think I'm a fool for bringing this up, but I feel better getting it off my chest. Am I alone in this annoyance, or are there others out there who feel as I do?

LEA (MY REAL NAME)

DEAR LEA: Face it, when most people ask, "How are you?" they don't want an organ recital. A "Fine, thanks," will suffice. And sit on the "facts" until you see your physician.

DEAR ABBY: I need help with a problem that has come between me and the man I am planning to marry.

I am 26 and "L" is 36. I've had one bad marriage and no children. "L" has had two bad marriages and two children with each wife. He supports his four children, who live with their mothers most of the time.

I want children of my own, but "L" has had a vasectomy, so I suggested artificial insemination. He is absolutely against it, saying he couldn't handle the thought of my carrying another man's child. I don't look at it that way. I won't even know who the man is. "L" is also against adoption, because "the children could have 'bad genes' and you never know what you're getting."

I love children and desperately want to bear my own. (I used to teach kindergarten.) I also love "L" and don't know what to do.

LOVES CHILDREN

DEAR LOVES: "L" should return to the doctor who performed his vasectomy and find out if his can be reversed. (Some can.) If his can, congratulations. If not, before you marry "L," insist that he get some counseling to determine if his objections to artificial insemination and adoption are valid, or merely an excuse to justify his reluctance to being a father to any more children.

The society welcomes hearing from family members, friends and relatives of early settlers including descendants of the first Swedish families brought to Sanford by General Sanford and who formed their own colony of Upsala after a city and university in the native Sweden.

Also, the prestigious society welcomes charter members, Miss Caskey says. A number of membership categories are available, including student, single, family and supporting memberships. All are tax deductible with emphasis placed on becoming a charter member, a distinction which will extend throughout the three-month period of the membership drive during July, August and September.

For further information, those interested may contact either of the following committee members: Mrs. Ruth Lee, Mrs. Ruth Swinney, Jack Horner, Mr. and Mrs. Tommy Peterson, Mrs. Jan Johnson, Mrs. Martha Yancey, membership chairman, and Miss Caskey.

The museum-library's current exhibit, "The Timucuan Trace," features a 1,400 year-old canoe and artifacts of this ancient Indian tribe. The exhibit is free and open to the public on Sunday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, from 2 to 5 p.m. — Doris Dietrich

Nurse Has A Song To Sing

the train so that "strategic points" would not be visible to the Japanese - Americans. She made reference to her home for the next one and one-half years as "concentration camp."

While completing her high school education within the camp where she was given the name "Mary," she worked as a waitress during the lunch hour in the camp community mess hall. After school and on weekends, she worked in the kitchen and in the employment office there. She received $5 monthly for her services which she spent for stamps and seersucker fabric to make her skirts. There was no money for candy nor snacks. The loneliness was unbearable. And there were tears - lots of tears.

During the time that Mary was interned in the Arizona relocation camp, her two brothers in Hawaii were serving in the U.S. Army. Mary remembers the loving brothers telling their mother she was a "spoiled daughter who would never amount to anything." She laughs. Her mother's goal for her was "a perfect lady with a refined cultural background."

Now, some 42 years later, Mary can truthfully say she has no hostilities about being interned at the Arizona camp. "None, whatsoever," she says in sincerity.

Following high school graduation, Mary ventured to Detroit, Mich., where she entered St. Mary's Hospital School of Nursing and completed the 3-year program required for a registered nurse. She also continued voice lessons - for pleasure - not performance in Detroit as well as at Seminole Community College, later, under Dr. Bert Perinich, whom she describes as "wonderful."

The newly-pinned nurse worked for a short time after graduation before returning to Hawaii. Her marriage to the man of her dreams got off to a bad start when a chaplain told the couple, "These mixed marriages never work out."

Mary said her parents strongly objected to her marrying a "white man," and did not accept the marriage until after her second child was born. They came to the states at this time, "and that did it," Mary laughs.

She beams when she speaks of their five children and six grandchildren. "It's alright to spoil a child," she says, "but you have to teach them what to do."

Continuing, Mary says, "I am so very pleased, I am so happy. They (five children) are all so successful in their careers. They can all mend clothes and cook."

"Always keep in touch," she has taught her close-knit family. They are all letter-writers and now Mary is teaching a 3-year old grandchild to speak Japanese, which she sheepishly admits she never taught her own.

Calling Mary "heaven-sent," and the "total wife, woman and mother," Bruce says she corresponds with 300 persons from a well-organized file of more than 500 names. She never forgets anniversaries and birthdays, he says.

Mary's nursing experience led her to employment at the Central Florida Migrant and Community Health Clinic, Sanford, during the past few months. According to Ouida Stacey, family nurse practitioner certified, Missy (Mary) sang to the patients there with her lovely soprano voice melodiously drifting throughout the waiting area. Missy, a diabetic, always made beautiful birthday cakes for the clinic staff, Ouida says.

Rebecca Albershardt, a clerk at the clinic, describes Missy as a "lovely person and such a gracious lady. Her family worships her. Everybody is crazy about her."

On July 4 Mary slowed down long enough to realize she was not feeling well. She thought she had the flu. Mary scanned her features in a mirror. Then she got the second opinion of another mirror. "Something is wrong," she thought. Her shoulders and then her legs became painfully uncomfortable. "Old age," she diagnosed. "Yes, that's it. Old age."

But medical experts disagreed with Mary's self-diagnosis. She has leukemia.

Her tiny hands gently touch the covers of her hospital bed. A gold band on the third finger, left hand is her only jewelry. Her bright pink nails dazzle like jewels to match her sparkling smile.

Mary Clarke's life expectancy is limited. But she doesn't believe it. She has so much to do. She must clean her spotless home, take up quilting, finish some crocheted work, write letters, take more singing lessons from Dr. Perinich. And there's lots of baking to be done.

"I'm at peace," she says. There are no more tears. The Lord has notified me."

The singing nurse is optimistic - about life - and death. She radiates sublime and eternal faith - with a song in her heart.

SHS Class Of 1953 Meets For Reunion

The year was 1953 when 116 members of the graduating class of Seminole High School proudly lined up to receive their diplomas. And now, 30 years later the enthusiastic class members met at Mayfair Country Club, Sanford, for the 30th class reunion. Man, did they have fun, according to Mary Ann Bruce.

News of the class during the past 30 years was published in a newspaper, "Celery Fed," named for the high school paper. The newspaper, compiled by Mary Ann Bukur Bruce and printed through the courtesy of Delbert Abney, scooped the classmates and their accomplishments.

David VanNess was the master of ceremonies and the invocation was given by the Rev. Robert Baker who attended from Shepherdsville, Ky. Beverly Douthitt made the following awards: most children (7), Beverly Thoreson Reindeau, Pahokee; most grandchildren (6), Mr. and Mrs. Herman Morris (he was the principal), Satsuma; traveled the greatest distance and first reunion, Dot Johnson Howland, Batavia, Ill.; and first reunion, Merlie Crissey Scholl, Metairie, La.

According to Mrs. Bruce, "there were no takers for someone to sing correctly both verses of the school song, so everyone sang it together."

Joan Wright Ludwig was in charge of the decorations which include baskets of celery centering each table. The centerpieces were awarded to classmates seated in marked chairs.

Class sponsors attending were Nellie Coleman and husband, Boyd, Roger Harris and Rebecca Stevens. Other teachers attending with the principal were Barbara Ruprecht and Ernie Cowley and wife Jan.

Parents attending were Mr. and Mrs. Peter J. Bukur who chaperoned many band trips. Bukur was the first president of the SHS Band Parents Association organized in 1951.

Following a steak dinner, 85 classmates and guests danced to the music of a trio.

The organizing committee included Delbert Abney, Beverly Benton Douthitt, Mary Ann Bukur Bruce, Barbara Flynt Ray, Louise Green Hosford, Henry McLaulin, Janette Ratliff Cara, Janice Reel Springfield, Tommy Speer, David VanNess and Joan Wright Ludwig.

Classmate Ed Tison and his wife, Nancy, Newport News, Va., entertained at two pre-reunion parties at New Smyrna Beach.

Mrs. Bruce says the reunions plans got underway in February. "We met at various homes and had a ball planning the whole thing. We are looking forward to the next one," she says. — Doris Dietrich

The Rev. William Ennis, pastor of All Souls Catholic Church, Sanford, for the past 13 years, has been reassigned to St. Peter's Catholic Church, DeLand. Prior to his departure on Wednesday to assume his new duties, Father Ennis was honored at a reception from 1-3 p.m. on August 7 in the church social hall.

Highlight of the event was the unveiling of the plaque dedicating the newest building of All Souls School to Father Ennis. Completed two years ago, the building contains the library, religious education office and multi-purpose room.

A framed painting by parishioner Helen Hickey, a local artist, of Father Ennis' dog, "Creggan" was presented as a farewell gift by the parish. The dog is named for his owner's hometown in Ireland.

Replacing him at All Souls is the Rev. William Authenrieth, who was previously at St. Mary's Church, Titusville. He is a former assistant pastor at All Souls.

Rises From Ashes

School To Open In New Building

By Jane Casselberry
Herald Religion Writer

Like the legendary Phoenix Central Florida Christian School has risen from the ashes. It is making a new beginning in what they think is the largest log structure in the state when school opens on Sept. 6.

The old concrete block school building and its contents, located north of Maitland, just inside the Orange County line, were destroyed in the disastrous Feb. 7, 1981 fire set by juveniles. The $1 million fire destroyed furnishings, books, school and student records, musical instruments and equipment.

The new 1,600-sq. yd. classroom-office building was built on to the only structure left standing after the fire. That building will serve as the auditorium.

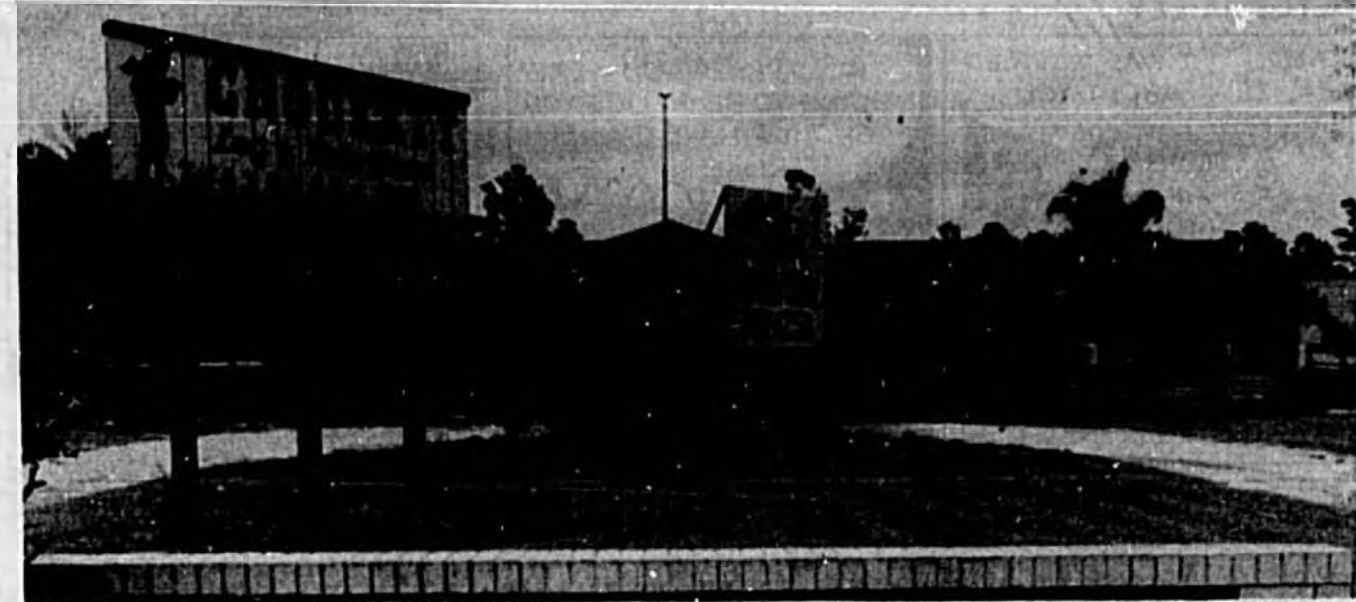

The log facility will have classrooms and restrooms for grades kindergarten through 12th for an anticipated 120 students and 10 fulltime teachers, according to the principal, Mrs. Esteleen Froehlich. The wife of the president and founder of the school, the Rev. Arthur Froehlich, she holds a doctor's degree in Christian Education. The building also has offices for the principal and secretary as well as storage space.

After the fire only one family withdrew from the school. "The families of our students were faithful, loyal and considerate and stood by us," said the principal. After the fire classes were held the first year in the Maitland Bible Presbyterian Church, where Rev. Froehlich is pastor, and the Lake Howell Baptist Church several miles away. Last year they crowded all of the classes into the Maitland Bible Presbyterian Church. "It was crowded, but the parents and the students didn't seem to mind," said Mrs. Froehlich.

When news of the disaster got out, people from all over the country called and some sent money immediately for the building fund, she said.

"One good thing came as a result of the fire," said Mrs. Froehlich. "At that time our campus (sandwiched between Maitland and Seminole County) was not in any fire district. Since then changes have been made to assure everybody is in some fire district."

"There was a lot of sympathy and interest generated and we have had volunteers come out on Saturday and during the week to work on reconstructing the facility," she said.

Because of financial problems there are still things that are needed for the reopening such as vacuum cleaners, refrigerators, typewriters and books. "You accumulate a lot of things in 12-18 years and when you lose them all in one fell swoop it takes awhile to get back where you were. We were only partially covered by insurance. We used to have two or three sets of encyclopedias in each classroom and first edition books in the library that were burned up in the fire," Mrs. Froehlich said. "We have faith in the Lord that it will all come about in time."

A non-denominational private school not affiliated with any church, the institution first opened in 1965 for grades 1-7 gradually expanding to K-12.

Finishing touches are now being put on the new facility will cost approximately $600,000. It was constructed from 12-foot long, 8-inch square logs which came by truck from New Hampshire. They were so heavy they had to be unloaded with a large crane. "At one point during the construction," Mrs. Froehlich said, "one of the workmen remarked, 'We have now laid 12 miles of logs.'"

"We teach strictly the basics," said Mrs. Froehlich. "By the time they finish kindergarten they will have read 10-15 pre-primers. We teach phonics, and the emphasis is on the basics all the way through."

We teach Bible, but not from any denominational doctrinal standpoint, with plenty of memorization and studies of the Holy Land and Paul's Journeys. In high school grades we offer survey of the Old and New Testaments," she added.

An open house will be scheduled when the building is completed inside.

Summertime Musings On Feeling Others' Pain

Thoughts while swinging in a hammock....

One of the reasons the late Frank Reynolds of ABC-TV was my favorite newscaster was that, as his colleague Ted Koppel said, he was "the kind of man who cared so much that he actually felt other people's pain."

This quality came through on TV and made Reynolds different from the average TV and radio newscaster whose idea of how to report a disaster is to make it sound more thrilling than tragic. Reynolds seemed to be experiencing the pain he was reporting.

The 19th-century English novelist Mark Rutherford once said, "The greatest help we can get in time of trouble comes from one who can say to us, quite simply, 'I have experienced all that.'"

In some ways, though, that person is of even greater help who can say to us when we are going through a bad time, "I too am experiencing all that" — right now.

Once, when I was out of work following the closing of the paper I had worked for, several of us who had suffered the same fate would gather for lunch once or twice a month. We wouldn't talk the whole time about our unemployment woes, but that furnished the backdrop for our times together and drew us closer.

One day, one of our group announced with great elation that he had found a job. We were glad for him, of course, and in a way he offered us the hope that we too would find a job. But the fact that he now had a job and we didn't broke the bond between us.

To be sure, he had experienced what the rest of us were still going through, but he was no longer experiencing it. It made him an outsider — and a subtle reproach to those of us who hadn't found work. He was now a sympathizer rather than one sharing our common misfortune.

Saints And Sinners

It is possible, of course, to empathize with people in trouble — to experience, in spirit and even in body, what they are going through — to "actually feel other people's pain" as if we are experiencing it ourselves. But this is a rare quality.

Frank Reynolds had that rare quality. Sorrowful news seemed to depress him as much as it depressed those to whom it was happening. This was the warm and human side of the stern professional which Frank Reynolds was....

Still swinging....

We are familiar with St. Paul's famous passage in 1 Corinthians 13: "And now abideth faith, hope and charity... but the greatest of these is charity." Many Bible translations use the word "love" instead of "charity," and most of us, I suppose, prefer the word "love."

Liza Howard, one of the characters in the novel, "Bodies and Souls" by Nancy Thayer, ponders this and concludes that charity is really the better word:

"What is extended to another person when a marriage is made is not love but charity. Love is too fickle. It changes shapes. It is that agreement to be charitable all of one's life to one other person which provides the real bond we call marriage. Love is exhausting. Charity is as cleansing and renewing as a hot bath."

Liza is right.

One thought leads to another....

Peter is another character in "Bodies and Souls." He is a minister — but not for him the stern doctrines of hell and damnation:

"He would prefer to bring God into his parishioners' lives through the doors of hope and wonder rather than through the doors of fear. But what if, by his tolerance, he was making it possible for his congregation to slip into sin? The idea of sin was passe now, he knew, yet all the same it existed, as alluring as a cool blue lake on a hot summer's day. He felt as though he were leading his flock near that lake when he should perhaps be angrily shooting them away...."

A Lutheran minister in Cleveland, Rev. Paul Giesler, said once while receiving a "best preaching" award, "The trouble with too many modern ministers is that they are too positive. They are afraid to be negative — to tell people they are sinners. If people want to hear just good things about themselves, they can stay home and tell those things to themselves."

Maybe Peter was on to something that would make him change the course of his ministry. Would he be doing the right thing?

Political Issues Divide Council Churches

By DAVID E. ANDERSON
UPI Religion Writer

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (UPI) — The World Council of Churches, finding unprecedented theological unity among the historically divided Christian faiths, is finding itself increasingly divided on secular political issues.

It used to be true in ecumenical circles that "doctrine divides but service unites." But as the 835 delegates of the 300-member church council enter the last day of the 18-day Sixth Assembly with a host of statements and resolutions on political matters before them, the opposite seems true.

"Turning point" has been used as a phrase throughout the meeting to underscore the highlights of the churches' major convergences on matters of doctrine that have split them into scores of families, communions, denominations and movements.

But on Tuesday, as the largest ecumenical body in the world turned its attention to the issue of encouraging peace in Afghanistan, "turning point" became an only slightly veiled threat of withdrawal by Russian churchmen.

Today, in its final sessions, the council has resolutions and statements on South Africa, Central America, the Mideast as well as the more general subject of peace and justice on its long agenda.

Tuesday's debate, conducted almost exclusively between Western and Soviet bloc church representatives turned almost bitter as Europeans and Americans tried to toughen language in the Afghan resolution by inserting the word "immediate" in a call for Soviet military withdrawal from Afghanistan. They also wanted to delete a statement opposing continued arms shipment to the Afghan guerrillas resisting the Soviet occupation.

Soviet church leaders said any harsh anti-Soviet stance might lead the government to end its permission for Soviet churches to participate in the council.

U.S. church leaders supporting Lislud's resolution included American Lutheran Church

Bishop David Preus and United Methodist Church Bishop James Armstrong.

In contrast to the soft language on Afghanistan, the proposed statement on Central America, to be voted on today, describes U.S. policy as "an affront to life," and says it "vigorously opposes any type of military intervention by the United States, covert or overt."

Roman Catholic membership in the World Council of Churches is not a current possibility and will not be on the ecumenical agenda for the foreseeable future, according to a report from the Joint Working Group between the Roman Catholic Church and the WCC.

Dr. J.T. Cosmato

Farewell Planned For Cosmatos

Seminole Heights Baptist Church will be saying good-bye this Sunday to Dr. and Mrs. Jay T. Cosmato, who have served the church as pastor and wife since its inception as a mission on Sept. 14, 1980. Dr. Cosmato has been called to become pastor of the Plymouth Haven Baptist Church in Alexandria, Va., and will assume his duties there on Sunday, August 21.

As this will be his last Sunday with the local congregation, a baptismal service is planned to follow the evening worship. The ordinance will be administered in the pool at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Deppen, 2411 Oak Ave., Sanford. Following the baptism, there will be a time of fellowship with the Cosmatos.

Baptist Historian Optimistic About Church Future

A prominent Southern Baptist Convention historian and moderate says he believes the fundamentalists will fail in their effort to take control of the nation's largest Protestant denomination.

But at the same time, E. Glenn Hinson, a professor of church history at Wake Forest University, says he fears that the "Baptist idea" of freedom and voluntarism has waned.

The problem, Hinson said in a talk at Ravensworth Baptist Church in Annandale, Va., is that the Southern Baptist Convention has become "established" as the "Catholic Church of the South."

"It seems we no longer think like the minority," Hinson said. "We no longer think like our Baptist forebears did. We think like people who are the establishment."

He said the current struggle in the denomination between moderates and fundamentalists may "help us to worry enough about the Baptist tradition that it may survive longer."

But he expressed what he called "cautious optimism" that the fundamentalists will not win that struggle and disputed claims by Paige Patterson, a leader of the conservative forces, that that faction is running two years ahead of schedule in its effort to take control of the 13.8 million-member church.

"Actually, Paige Paterson is all wet," Hinson said. "They (the conservatives) have nominated a lot they think are their people who aren't ideological at all. As many nominees as they have had, they have not been able to find hardline fundamentalists who think like they do."

In addition, Hinson said the moderates are becoming sufficiently organized now "that we are not going to be run over by the fundamentalists anymore."

He pointed to the denomination's June convention in Pittsburgh as a sign the church "steered a little bit left toward the center of the road."

"We had been running along the curb or sometimes way over in the ditch on the right," he said, referring to the convention's 1982 adoption of a resolution endorsing state-sponsored school prayer and a pro-Israel resolution recommended by a conservative-dominated resolutions committee.

Yet, he noted that two studies among Southern Baptists show "the single most influential person shaping the thought of Southern Baptist ministers is Jerry Falwell." Falwell, television preacher, leader of the Moral Majority and pastor of Thomas Road Baptist church in Lynchburg, Va., is not a Southern Baptist.

Growing The Great Pumpkin

By Tom Campbell

COLLINS, N.Y. (UPI) — If Linus of "Peanuts" comic strip fame could see some of the pumpkins being grown for the 1983 World Cup pumpkin competition, he'd know he'd found the most sincere pumpkin patch in which to sow the Great Pumpkin.

Hundreds of thousands of pumpkin growers are hoping their giant crop can cop a prize and the bragging rights to having nurtured the world's largest pumpkin.

Howard Dill of Windsor, Nova Scotia, is the current world record holder with a mammoth 493 1/2-pound pumpkin.

On Oct. 10, the world's largest pumpkin will be determined via telephone line connections at the same moment from four sites: the Western New York town of Collins; Half Moon Bay, Calif.; Windsor, Nova Scotia; and East Sussex, England.

Ray Waterman, 33, organized the World Pumpkin Confederation, whose headquarters is in Collins. He says there are more than 200,000 sport-hobby growers in the U.S. and Canada, and 150,000 to 200,000 in the United Kingdom. Dill has sent 350 pounds of pumpkin seeds to England to accommodate growers there.

USAir is supplying the "World Cup," a three-foot trophy on which the winner's name will be inscribed. The airlines will transport the trophy to the winner in his home country, said Waterman.

Last year, the local Collins Pumpkin Festival drew about 20,000 people in two days. The winning entry was a 325-pound pumpkin.

Waterman took the vegetable to Nova Scotia and competed against Canadians and entrants from Half Moon Bay. The pumpkin took first and third places in the American competition, and finished third and sixth against the Canadians.

Aware that Dill was the world record-holder, Waterman contacted him and the two established a list of rules, thus forming the worldwide pumpkin confederation.

"It mushroomed from there," said Waterman, who expects "thousands of entrants" in the competition. Waterman credits Dill for developing a seed that spawns the gigantic pumpkins.

For the past 20 years, Dill has been working on a process to cross-pollinate plants. He has eliminated several variables, combined the right amounts of nutrients, drainage, sunlight and wind protection, insect protection, moisture retention and proper fertilization qualities.

"These things can take away from poundage," says Waterman. "You have to have a type of scheme."

Waterman himself has been growing pumpkins for the past five years. His largest effort was a 243 1/2-pound, grown from a California variety, Big Moon. But he'll be using the Atlantic Giant brand this time around, one developed by Dill.

"It's the best," he says. "Eight major seed companies are selling it. It's the variety — like the best mitt used in baseball."

Waterman, whose restaurant and produce center offers $1,500 to anyone in the world who can produce a pumpkin of 500 pounds or more, hopes to expand the sites, to Australia, Germany and Japan.

Waterman is working with the New York State Department of Commerce and plans to contact ABC-TV's Wide World of Sports to notify them of the sport.

He stresses that the pumpkin hobby-sport is "family-oriented" and something anyone can compete in.

"We've got inmates at the Collins Correctional Facility growing them and there's a group of handicapped children from Buffalo that are also growing pumpkins," says Waterman.
