High Ignorance!

It's not a little education that is a dangerous thing but the vast amount of ignorance left manched by the education.

The reason so many college students nowa-days are critical of the free enterprise system is because they don't understand it, says a pro-fessor, Dr. Gerald Warren, a DePauw University remomist. The students' main hang-up says Warren, is this: "They don't understand the remendous amount of interaction and interdence that has to occur in order to feed clothe and house millions of people at the level that now exists in America. They don't know how productive forces are generated." They have little concept, he adds, of the necessary "production, distribution, transportation and all the auxiliary services that have to underwrite the mass production of soap flakes, breakfast foods and automobiles."

The problem, he claims, is due mainly to no exposure or inadequate exposure to economics courses in high school, compounded by insufficient exposure in college. Only 5 per cent of all college graduates nationally ever have a course in economics. It is against this background that DePauw is planning a six-week summer program for high school economics teachers, to be financed by the U. S. Office of Education as part of the recently enacted Education Professions Development Act. In a mesty program, 80 teachers will get a heavy done of economic data on what makes a modern, market-oriented economy run, field trips to husinesses and industry and instruction in how to teach economics. Thirty teachers is a beginning in one state, but it leaves a substantial amount of ign untouched -ignorance that is shared not only by young people but also by their parents, who are often as uncritically defensive about the American system as their children are uninformedly dissatisfied with it.—Savannah (Ga.) Evening Press.

In putting the airport into focus, we would point out that the work of the Sanford Industrial Commission has mustered a demand for airport space and facilities which will blossom into new families and new payrolls as the transfer to civilian control bevomes a reality

In looking at the barge port we would ask that all those who sit in judgment would look well into two aspects: 1. What has been done during seven years of hard, often discouraging work, by the leaders who brought the port to this high point of accomplish-
