

WAR WILL CONTINUE ONE YEAR

BIG STRUGGLE IN EUROPE KEEPS GOING ONWARD

British Front in France, Oct. 18, via London, Eng., Oct. 19.—The war will last another year, according to the consensus of opinion among the British soldiers and their leaders. It is also the opinion of the Germans, if the views of the prisoners count for anything.

Before the grand offensive started a high authority informed the correspondent of the Associated Press that the German line would not be broken this summer, and that slow operations, wearing down the Germans would be inaugurated and would probably last through another summer.

With the approach of winter conditions which make military movements difficult this officer recalled his prediction. Speaking of the situation today he said:

"We know what the German resources were and what ours were and the time required to force a decisive victory for our arms is a matter of calculation."

German prisoners taken during the summer invariably spoke of peace being a certainty in the autumn. They regarded the Somme thrust as a final effort of the allies for a decision, and felt that after it peace would be made. Their tone has been entirely different as they realize that it is a fight to a finish between the man power and resources of two foes and that an ultimate decision will come from the fearful attrition on the western front which now will know no intermission until the end. The Germans are determined to make every village on the western front a fortress which will yield only when reduced by shell fire and every gully and crater a machine gun post to secure their defensive against a critical defeat.

At a period when the weather is adverse to offensive operations elsewhere the Germans are apparently concentrating every possible man and gun against Rumania. The view of the British officers is that the Germans hope to crush Rumania so that when they have to face a common allied offensive in the spring they may not have to defend the immense length of the Rumanian frontier in addition to what they had to defend this summer.

It is a universal remark among the British that never has the morale of the prisoners varied more than now.

"You will notice that we are always taking prisoners and that the Germans get very few of ours," said a staff officer.

"Though small parties of our men are bound to get into hazardous positions in this kind of intricate operations at close quarters they die rather than yield. This shows their morale and the temper of the situation. Some Germans have never fought better and some have never fought so bad as in the last few weeks."

"Today, for example, twenty Germans practically threw up their hands and walked into the British lines. But the soldiers who took them prisoner or their commander had no illusion that these prisoners that these prisoners typified the condition of the German army as a whole. There were other Germans who were ready to fight with that ferocity which expects no quarter."

However, all believe the war has entered a stage where no compromise is to be expected and where victory will go to the side with the ability to stick the longest.

BIG TIME IN ORLANDO

Shriners of the State Will Gather Thereon November 9th

Messrs. Beeman, Townsend, Harris and Hewitt of Orlando were in the city yesterday coming up to tell the people about the great time that will be held in Orlando on November 9th, when the patrols of Jacksonville and Tampa of the Mystic Shrine, will gather in Orlando, and lead a bunch of novices across the burning desert and many from Sanford are candidates for the initiation. As everyone knows when the Shriners meet for an initiation there is always something doing on the side lines and the big time at Orlando promises to be one of the best. The day will not be given over to the Shriners altogether, for the merchants of Orlando will on that day give the visitors to the city the hospitality of Orlando and aside from the parades and other features of the Shriners there will be a big street dance at night, band concerts and other features for those who are not Shriners. A very interesting program has been arranged that will be given to the public later and November 9th will be a gala occasion.

Since Sanford expects to offer many candidates to the capacious maw of the Shriners' goat there will be many from here go down that day to take in the side issues. Cheap rates will also be made by the railroads and Orlando anticipates a real big day.

Saturday of this week, Mrs. Ward's circle of the Presbyterian church will hold a rummage sale on Saeford avenue. Members please take notice. Next Tuesday there will be a meeting at the home of Mrs. H. C. DuBoise at 3 o'clock to make articles for the Parcel Post sale to be held on Nov. 30th.

GROWERS SATISFIED WITH HELP

PLENTY OF LABORERS HERE AND WAGES ARE SATISFACTORY WITH ALL

Sanford growers in the past month have been urged to take up the matter of importing foreign labor to work in the celery fields as there are a number of companies that want to import labor from Holland, Belgium, Italy and other countries where the war is causing many of the able bodied men and boys to feel that if the war lasts much longer there will be no chance for any of them to live, consequently they are casting about for some means to come to the United States.

These people are natural farmers and their wages being very low in Europe the agents are anxious to place the men in Florida but the Sanford growers are at present well supplied with negro labor and they would rather take care of the men who live here and have been faithful to the farmers every season.

There has been no trouble with the resident help but there are many floating negroes who cast about from place to place every season working a few days at each place and then moving on. This class of negroes have come here this season and are silling the ears of the laborers here with fairy tales about the big wages paid in the north, with the result that a spirit of unrest is noticeable in some quarters and the help has upon several occasions demanded more money. The Sanford growers pay and have always paid all they could stand for good laborers. They pay the resident help more money than the common laborers, going on the principle that the man or woman who is experienced and has been working for years here in the celery business deserves more money and many of the growers furnish their steady help with homes on the place and otherwise look after them.

The question of help in the Sanford section has never been a serious one as the wages are good and the help is treated right—that is the good help. The sorry negroes are not wanted at any stage of the game and will not be tolerated. Neither will their tactics of demanding more money for ordinary labor be listened to by the growers who know what they can pay and will not pay any over. The Sanford growers have always treated their help fair and square and are satisfied with the field laborers who are known here, who live here and are well taken care of by the white people of this city and in the country.

While other sections are suffering for lack of help the Sanford farmers have plenty and are not looking for any other kind as long as the local help is giving the same satisfaction.

THE CONFEDERATE VETERANS ELECT AYER OF FLORIDA

OCALA MAN HEADS GRAY HOSTS AT BIG REUNION

Tampa, Fla., Oct. 19.—Confederate Veterans of Florida in executive session today unanimously honored Gen. Alfred C. Ayer of Ocala by electing him by acclamation head of the state organization, as major-general commanding the Florida division. The scene in the casino when the name of General Ayer was placed before the veterans was strongly dramatic, and as the veterans voted on the motion cheers burst from the lips of many of the old soldiers, and spread until something like the old time "Rebel yell" rolled out the casino windows.

After taking his place as head of the veterans, General Ayer appointed Col. F. E. Harris of Ocala as adjutant-general and chief of staff. The names of Miami and Gainesville were placed before the veterans by proxy as meeting places for the next annual state reunion; but on account of the lack of representation from both places the veterans left the decision to the division commander, with the understanding that other towns which wished to invite the state reunion would be considered.

The veterans endorsed Tampa as the place for the national reunion of Confederate veterans in 1919. Tampa is to receive the active support of the heads of the veterans and the camps over the state, and a big delegation of veterans will go to the national reunion in Washington to get the reunion for 1919.

NEW COMPANY FORMED FOR CATTLE RANCH

SANFORD SECTION BECOMING A GREAT CATTLE COUNTRY

The Herald has made the claim several times that this immediate section of Florida was the greatest cattle country in the south and recent facts and figures have borne out this statement. Not only have local men embarked in the cattle business in the last two years and fenced thousands of acres but the Sanford section has attracted some of the largest cattle men in the United States to investigate our wonderful possibilities.

Among the localmen who have established immense cattle ranches are the Wekiwa Ranch of Dr. Blackman, the Lockhatchie ranch of Sanford men, the Toxhatchie ranch of Sanford men and this week the Herald bears the incorporation notice of the J. R. Hayden Co., incorporated for the purpose of raising fine stock.

The local incorporators are J. R. Hayden, J. N. Whitner, R. C. Maxwell and Alfred Foster. The three last are too well known to need an introduction. J. R. Hayden is among our new citizens and is one of the largest owners of cattle ranches and stock in the country, owning ranches in Nebraska, Virginia and several other states. He became interested in Sanford principally through an address made by Hon. J. N. Whitner at a big stock meeting in Tampa last year and came here to verify the statements of Mr. Whitner. He found that only half of the truth had been told and immediately invested in cattle lands and fine stock for the same. Aside from his extensive cattle lands Mr. Hayden has purchased farming land on Beardsall avenue where he will raise forage crops, establish silos and go into general farming on a large scale. It is doubtful if the Sanford section has in the past few years obtained as good a citizen as J. R. Hayden and his faith in our section is shown by his works. He believes in Sanford and the surrounding country and he is a constructive builder and the kind of man this country needs.

JACKSONVILLE IS THE CHOICE OF FLORIDA

AS ONE OF THE DISTRICTS FOR THE FEDERAL LOAN BANK

Realizing the importance of the Federal Farm Loan the Sanford Board of Trade will send a delegate to Jacksonville not only to boost for the farmers but also to boost for Jacksonville as one of the twelve land bank districts that will be established in the United States.

A hearing of great importance to the farmers and farm organizations of Florida will be held at Jacksonville October 26 by the federal farm loan board.

This hearing is for the purpose of getting information to guide the board in determining the boundaries of the twelve federal land bank districts into which the country is to be divided for the administration of the new rural credits law, known as the federal farm loan act. The session will be held in the federal building at Jacksonville.

The members of the federal farm loan board who will conduct the hearing are Hon. William G. McAdoo, secretary of the treasury; George W. Norris, farm loan commissioner; Herbert Quick, Captain W. S. A. Smith and Charles E. Lohdell.

The board has issued an invitation to all farmers and farm organizations of Florida to attend this hearing to get information about the operation of the farm loan act, and to furnish the board with information about the farm loan needs of the

EARTHQUAKE AND GALES SWEEP GULF

EQUINOCTIAL STORM SEEMS TO HAVE BROUGHT BIG STIR

Pensacola, Oct. 19.—Several vessels in this harbor here were sunk, numbers of small craft suffered damage, and one life was lost in the terrific tropical hurricane that swept through here yesterday, at one time reaching a velocity of 114 miles an hour. Property damage in Pensacola itself was confined chiefly to roofs being blown off and plate glass windows destroyed.

The hurricane, which swept inland from the Gulf early today, isolated Pensacola and the surrounding territory until early tonight, when partial wire service was restored.

Reports from the United States Navy Aeronautical Station, near here, were to the effect that it escaped with comparatively little damage, the newly completed permanent hangars having withstood the gale.

The gale came in such terrific and sudden gusts that in Pensacola it blew three or four persons through plate glass windows in the downtown district, and carried away the weather observation tower on top of a high building. The barometer registered 29.05 just before all instruments were put out of commission this morning, and the gale had raged up to 114 miles an hour, and then dropped in ten minutes to fourteen before a change of direction, and a rise to ninety-eight miles took the weather tower off.

The one life reported lost was that of Daniel Cobb, cook on the small steamer Flanders, which was reported sunk two miles from here. Its crew was brought here tonight on the cruiser Dixie. No other serious injuries were reported; persons who were hurt here reported their injuries as cuts and bruises.

Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 18.—Two distinct earthquake shocks that in some instances shook frame buildings and knocked chimneys down were felt through western Georgia and eastern Alabama and Tennessee shortly after four o'clock Wednesday afternoon. At all points damage was reported as negligible except around Birmingham and Montgomery, where it appeared to consist to damage to chimneys. Many persons, however, ran from their homes here and in other southern cities.

The tremor was not felt at any point east except a suburb of Augusta, Ga., according to reports tonight, some of which said the first shock was heavier than the second, while others reversed the descriptions.

C. F. VonHerrman, section director of the local United States Weather Bureau, who described the second shock as feeling "like some one had dropped a big safe outside my office," said there generally was believed to be a connection between earthquakes similar to the one today and low barometric pressure such as existed along the Gulf coast during the day's hurricane there. Mr. Von Herrman explained that today's tremors were more severe than that which occurred about the same hour February 21st last, and which he did not feel in his office. The shocks, he said came about 4:04 and 4:06 p. m. There is no seismograph in this vicinity.

Mr. and Mrs. Archie Betts are in Tampa this week, the guests of friends and receiving many social attentions.

SANFORD B. T. MAKES GOOD ALL THE TIME

INTERESTING MEETING TUESDAY NIGHT—GOOD ATTENDANCE

The Sanford Board of Trade held one of the most interesting and best meetings of its history on Tuesday night of this week, when about 100 of its members met in the court room at the court house for their regular monthly meeting.

Allen Maull, Development Agent of the A. C. L., was to have been present and address the meeting was unable to be present on account of a western trip.

A telegram was read from Jacksonville relative to the Farm Loan Bank for Florida and asking for information. This was ordered prepared and it was decided to send a representative to the meeting at Jacksonville on the 26th.

The New Hotel committee made a report that was very encouraging, but on account of certain legal difficulties with which they are contending it was impossible to make a complete report. They stated, however, that the hotel proposition was by no means a dead issue and that they will have something to report at a very early date.

A set of by-laws for the government of the board were read and adopted. Other by-laws will be adopted later.

Mr. C. R. Walker, delegate to the Philadelphia convention of the Atlantic Deepwater Waterways Association made a fine report of the work being done by this association. He also went into the history of the Florida link of this waterway and gave some very interesting facts along this line.

The transportation committee, through Mr. A. P. Connelly, chairman, made a very fine report with the result that steps were taken along the line of freight rates that will be productive of desired results. The Board of Trade are fortunate in securing an experienced transportation man for this very important position. The members present voted almost unanimously to stand behind the transportation committee in its work.

The matter of prices for labor on the farm was taken up with the result that a special committee composed of Messrs. Harry Ward, T. I. Hawkins, J. F. McClelland, Joe Cameron, R. H. Muirhead, A. T. Rossetter, C. J. Merriwether, D. R. Brannon, C. F. Brannon and several others were appointed to take up this matter at once.

The work of the Sanford Board of Trade as a whole is bringing forth favorable comment on every side. This organization is doing a good work, not only for the city but for the farmers as well. The next regular meeting will be held on Tuesday evening, November 14th.

AMONG THE THEATRES

Chit-Chat of the Play Houses in Sanford.

"Casey at the Bat" a Hopper Picture Play

"Casey at the Bat," the Triangle-De Wolf Hopper comedy to be seen at the Lyric Theater Wednesday tells in picture form the story of the famous base ball poem which Hopper has recited from countless stages and at innumerable social gatherings since it first appeared, more than a quarter of a century ago.

It will be recalled that Casey, the invincible slugger of the Mudville baseball team, came to bat one afternoon in the ninth inning of a close game with a rival nine and, when a hit was needed to win, ingloriously struck out, leaving the entire populace of Mudville grasping with amazement and drenched in gloom.

The poem does not reveal what untoward circumstance it was that caused Casey to fall down so grievously at a crucial moment. This mystery the picture promises to clear up.

The story of the play, written by Wm. Everett Wing, reveals Casey as the middle aged errand boy in Mudville's general store. Though past the age when the batting eye is supposed to be the keenest, Casey is still able to lam the ball on the nose and send it scooting over the outfielders' heads. In which respect, it may be mentioned, he has had several counterparts in actual baseball history, notably Anson, Wagner and Lajolie, all of them sluggers far into the serene and yellow of base ball age. Casey is the star hitter of Mudville's team. Besides his job and his ball playing, he has two other interests in life—he has a great affection for his little niece, and he is in love with a rich man's daughter. In the latter affair he has two rivals, one of them his employer, the other the pitcher of the Frogtown team, Mudville's deadly rival. And out of all this grows the story of the plot which embodies the misfortunes that overtake Casey and his ultimate downfall.

In Hopper's support appear such well known Triangle players as Marguerite Marsh, Frank Bennett, Kate Toncray, Carl Stockdale and May Garcia.

Edmund Breese Tonight

Not since he was seen in the role of "John Burckett Ryder" in "The Lion and the Mouse," the characterization which won him international fame, has the eminent dramatic actor, Edmund Breese found a part more fitted to his distinctive talents than he has in "The Weakness of Strength," his latest starring vehicle on the Metro program, which has just been completed at the Popular Palays and Players studios and will be shown here at the Star tonight.

The story, which was written especially for Mr. Breese is from the pen of Aaron Hoffman and was produced for the screen by Harry Revier. It is brimful of thrilling and intensely novel situations and possesses absorbing interest throughout. It deals with a man's regeneration, after sacrificing love, honor and the regard of his fellows in his pursuit after power and wealth. An unusually strong cast, including Clifford Bruce, Ormi Hawley and Evelyn Brent is seen in support of the star.

Manager E. F. Lane of the Lyric Theater is ready to personally guarantee the quality of "Gloria's Romance," for he has seen the early chapters of the story and was amazed to find how much above the ordinary run of films it is. All the pretty little mannerisms of Miss Burke that made her so attractive on the speaking stage are retained by the camera, and many are of the opinion that Billie will score an even greater triumph in films than she did before she decided to sign a contract calling for $1,000 per week as a picture player.

The Almighty Dollar

At the Star Wednesday, Frances Nelson again, stars in a World Film Superdrama. Frances Nelson is purely a western product. When you go to the theatre and see her in a picture, you see her acting as naturally as if she was present before you, acting on the stage. When she tackles a man and fights herself free from the clutches, people sometimes wonder how she does it so realistically. The answer is that when she acts, she does not want to be handed like a doll if the part calls for her to be hustled to right or left. If the script calls for a struggle, she is there with it and can pack a punch in either hand. This also accounts for the reason she was brought forward so rapidly from the ranks of stock player to star.

When you see her on the screen, her robust arms snatching the wrists of an unscrupulous villain from around her waist, that is real stuff. You see, Miss Nelson hails from St. Paul, Minn., where the grand air from the Great Lakes blows its health spreading zephyrs over the city, and she has consumed so much of that air and so much of the greatness of the west, that when she came east to join the theatrical profession, she simply could not help making a big impression and, single handed, forcing her way to the front. That was only a natural inclination, and the efforts of any human being could have prevented it.

Lyric Wednesday

De Wolf Hopper, who stars in the new Triangle release, "Casey at the Bat," is said to have recited the immortal Thayer verses more than 8,000 times. The long comedian, who has made a reputation afresh in his screen work, has now appeared in four Triangle feature photoplays, "Don Quixote," "Sunshine Dad," "Mr. Gonde, the Samaritan" and "Casey at the Bat."

Lenore Ulrich in "The Intrigue" at Star Friday

An eye opening revelation of the tangled lines and cross currents of the international plotting that is going on in New York at the present day is "The Intrigue," the Pallas Paramount photoplay coming to the Star Friday.

An American inventor has a war machine; an X-ray gun and the U. S. government turns it down without a trial—it seems too preposterous. Taking his invention to the heads of the European nations the young American proves that it will actually do just as he claims. It is such a remarkable gun that upon his return to New York to perfect it he becomes entangled in the net of the foreign secret service agents in America.

But a very beautiful foreign Countess who is also in her country's intelligence bureau so tangles his heart strings that he does the most surprising thing of his life and always glad he did the deed.

A Curious Detective Story

Not since the days of the "Raffles" series has there been a detective story so exciting, so full of adventure, as "The Phantom" in which Frank Keenan appears. It's a Triangle Play, full of surprises, church full of quick action and tense moments. If you enjoy this kind of a story this picture will surely "get" you. Few plays have equaled it. Shown at the Lyric Friday.

The Stolen Treaty

By
H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright, 1916, by W. G. Chapman.)

Imbrio passed his hand over his damp forehead and stared at the paper in his hand. He could not believe other his eyes or the good fortune which had placed it there.

A subordinate clerk in the war office at Washington, Imbrio had faced life on a salary of $25 weekly. This was his sole means of support for himself and Dolly, his pretty young wife, as well as Dolly's mother, who lived with them.

He had been shifted into a new department recently—that in touch with the secretary of state's office. Of course Imbrio never saw the great man himself, or anyone but an occasional permanent under-secretary.

For weeks Imbrio had been a prey to increasing despair. There had been Dolly's long illness, after their little son had been born and died a few hours later. Like every man with a government position, Imbrio had found it not at all difficult to negotiate a loan with a money lender at an exorbitant interest. He had paid off the loan by increasing it; then, rendered desperate, he had gone to another money lender, and then another. He had no notion that all three were watching him and dividing the money that came to them every pay day, while the capital actually increased in volume. Imbrio was paying $10 a week, and the hundred which he had borrowed originally had swollen to three hundred.

He had not dared let Dolly know, and though she had looked surprised at the diminishing returns each pay day, Imbrio had invented a heap of excuses. However, the crisis was almost at hand.

Then, a few days before, a little, dark-haired man, who looked like a cross between a Chinaman and a Portuguese, had accosted him as they were leaving the street car together. He seemed to know Imbrio very well and had drawn him aside and made a proposition which made the pulses throb in Imbrio's cheeks.

"It will be nothing dishonorable," he said. "It is only what everybody does. Think, my friend, is it reasonable that your government should trust its secrets to a man whom it pays a beggarly $110 a month?"

"But I don't know anything about it," faltered Imbrio.

"I shall see that you know," Think again. "A man's work—a big man's work on an office boy's pay. Besides, it is not as if you were betraying anything. My government knows all about this Chinese treaty, but it requires its suspicions to be confirmed. You will confirm them, but you will betray nothing."

"I tell you—" Imbrio began. "In proof of what I say I have arranged that the treaty be placed in your hands for copying tomorrow. And your money difficulties will be at an end. Look at this—come under the lamp and look!"

He counted out 50 hundred-dollar bills and placed them in Imbrio's hands. Imbrio's hands, clutching feverishly at them, trembled.

"You see, you are dealing with gentlemen who trust you," the stranger continued. "And if you prove false—which is impossible—we shall know how to punish you. Also, we shall know if it is the genuine treaty you bring us."

Before Imbrio had quite understood the gist of the proposition the little man was gone, leaving him to his soliloquies, his bribe and Dolly's anxious face.

It was in the sleepy part of the day the following afternoon that the high official entered and looked about the room.

"Here, Mr. Imbrio," he said, laying down a closely typewritten paper before him. "Copy this, will you? It's rather confidential and we must have some more copies. Make a couple of carbons and don't let anyone see. Bring them to me when you have finished."

Imbrio stared at the paper. It was the secret treaty with China which the Japanese government would have sold its soul to obtain.

Imbrio made an extra carbon copy and slipped it into his pocket. He took the remainder in to the high official, and, side by side, they compared the copy with the original.

Imbrio went home in a daze. Dolly and he had long talked of what they would do if ever, by some miracle, $5,000 were to come to them. They had envisaged a pretty little farm in Virginia, with roses growing up the walls, a horse and buggy and fields of corn and peach trees. And now all this seemed about to come to pass.

As he stepped off the car the little Japanese came up to him. Silently Imbrio slipped the carbon copy into the man's hand and left him.

A month passed. Imbrio had told Dolly that his uncle had died and left him that $5,000 which they had always talked about and never hoped for. Dolly was delighted. The color came back into her cheeks. She was happy. But in Imbrio's heart was the burning shame of betrayal.

It was three months before he sent in his resignation. He wanted to at last suspicion. He expected to be watched. He had omitted to discharge his debt to the money lenders for fear that he would come under suspicion. It required all his courage to send in notice.

Then, toward the end of his last month, he began to realize what his treachery meant. He knew that, under the official silence, somebody was suspected, somebody was watched, somebody was suffering wrongly for his abominable deed. He could not endure his position. And he told Dolly.

He confessed to her one evening when she had questioned him about his distress. He told her that there could be no future for them upon the money earned by his betrayal of his native land. He bowed his head when he had ended, for he expected that Dolly would herself denounce him.

But when he raised his head after a long silence, it was to see Dolly standing beside him, her face expressive of pitying wonder.

"The bitter thing is that you did it for me, Ronald," she said, and suddenly dropped to her knees. "Ronald, dearest, you know now what you must do."

"But, Dolly—"

"I know. You are going to say that my happiness is worth more than the nation. But it isn't, it isn't."

"I have made purchases. I have resigned my position. We shall be beggars, even after I have served my term of imprisonment."

"At least, Ronald, we can hold up our heads," she answered proudly. "On the following morning Imbrio went down to the office with a resolution to which he had come, as a result of his talk with his wife. He would confess everything; and the $5,000 he would turn into charity.

The world's weight seemed to have been lifted from his shoulders. Washington had never seemed so beautiful, nor life so free. He looked 10 years younger as he went to his desk, and his fellow clerks, too, noticed the change in him.

It was a long and difficult wait till he was able to see the high official who had given him the treaty to copy. As he kicked his heels in the man's office, watching dignitaries come and go, a little sense of resentment began to assail him. What right had Mr. Mowbray had to place temptation in his path—in his, a $25 clerk's? Would not anyone with a sick wife have been tempted too?

And he had worked himself up to such a degree of anger that he had almost decided to turn back when Mr. Mowbray's secretary came out and ushered him in.

The great man was sitting alone at his desk, and his face was quite impassive; but there was a cynical smile upon the lips of the secretary as he sat down beside him.

"Mowbray, idly turning over the pages of a document, did not look up for an unconscionable time. All the while Imbrio was growing more and more uncomfortable. At last he could no longer endure the suspense.

"Mr. Mowbray!" he blurted out. Mowbray looked up. "Yes?" he inquired blandly.

Then Imbrio told him, without extenuation. When he had ended speaking Mowbray turned to the secretary. "Will you read me that letter from File 13?" he asked.

The secretary read it. It was from the head of Imbrio's department.

"With regard to our conversation of yesterday, I can suggest nobody better than Mr. Imbrio of our department. He is a fellow of poor character and in debt, as I have ascertained, to money lenders. I have little doubt that he can be trusted to betray the document to the person in question."

Imbrio stood dumfounded. "It all right, Mr. Imbrio," said Mowbray. "That was a scintillating treaty which we wanted to get into the hands of a certain government."

"Then you have led me on to betray my country as I supposed," blurted out Imbrio.

"We had to," answered Mowbray, his thin lip curving in a scoffing smile. "That's what men of your type are employed for."

"What about the $5,000?"

"Take it to the devil," said Mr. Mowbray.

Dazed, bowled over, and conscious of his intense humiliation, Imbrio went out into the sunlight.

Tongues That Kill.

The tongues of some animals are their weapons of defense, or very dangerous instruments. A lion could speedily kill a man by merely licking him with his tongue. The tongues of all the members of the cat family are covered with curious recurving spines, formed of tough cartilage. In the common domestic cat these spines are very small, but are so efficiently well developed to give the tongue a feeling of roughness. In the fercest animals, such as the lion or tiger, these spines are frequently found projecting up for an eighth of an inch or more, with very sharp points, or edges. While the mouth is relaxed the tongue is soft and smooth, but when the animal is excited the spines become rigid.

Heads Up!

"An expert automobile driver of my acquaintance," says Frederick Upham Adams in American Magazine, "has coined an injunction which might well be adopted by all drivers pending the adoption of the reforms outlined. Most of those who risk their lives crossing streets between intersections do so with their heads down, their half-closed eyes fixed on their feet. After successfully dodging such trespassers, or stopping in time to save them from injury, my friend good-naturedly slings out, 'Heads up, friend!'"

RUSSIAN BLOUSE 6661 SKIRT 6622

Taking advantage of the freedom allowed in such matters this blouse is designed to be worn with or without a belt. It is suitable to development in serge, jersey cloth or flannel.

There is a very intimate relation between the smock and the Russian blouse, the difference being principally a matter of waist finish. The design shown here may be worn with or without a belt and is ideal for athletic wear. Carried out in flannel or serge, the blouse is built upon a sleeveless underbody. The neck is finished with a high turnover collar and has a V-shaped line at the front. A yoke forming a stole effect at the front acts as support for the front and back of the blouse, these sections being daintily gathered at the upper edges.

One yard of 36-inch lining is needed for the foundation, while the blouse calls for 3 1/2 yards 44-inch serge. If the skirt is made also, 5 1/2 yards of serge will be needed.

There are only two parts to the lining, and they are cut from the folded material, the back being laid along the lengthwise fold. The front is laid on the lengthwise thread.

The back of the blouse is laid on a lengthwise fold of the serge, as shown in the center cutting guide, with the back of the yoke to the left. The front yoke (F) is laid on a lengthwise thread, but is cut from the folded serge.

Now, take an open width of material and place the front of the blouse on a lengthwise thread so that the straight edge will rest on the selvage edge. The cuffs, sleeve and collar are laid on a lengthwise thread also. The open material is laid on the cutting table in double width so that the sections of the pattern laid on it will be cut in duplicate.

The smock offers wide opportunities for trimming, but the most effective decoration would be a fold about the lower edge of the peplum and a yoke of the same trimming.

CATCHER OF TODAY IS WALKING FORTRESS

Catchers are protected by all sorts and manners of armor. They have masks, mitts, chest protectors and bands on their shins to shield them from foul tips. In only one place are they liable to injury. This is their neck. Occasionally a foul hits them there, and the injury is not only unusually painful but dangerous.

Jack Lapp, now catcher of the White Sox, was struck there some years ago and for a few days it was feared he had lost the power of speech. Even today his voice is not what it was before he was hurt.

Lapp has tried all sorts of contrivances to protect his neck, but in no instance have they proved practable. A man who comes along with a real idea will be welcomed by the vast army of backstoppers.

Sometimes a mask breaks under the shock of a foul tip, and more than one catcher has narrowly escaped having his eye permanently injured. Some backstoppers, like Billy Sullivan, resolder their masks, but this makes it so heavy it becomes a burden.

Catching is, in short, some job. He not only has to give signals, watch every move on the bases, jolly his pitcher and block runners off the plate, even though it means danger from spikes, but he is so loaded down by equipment that he is a walking fortress.

have to use harsher means.

Mr. Plethora discharged Mr. Day and got along without a secretary while considering applications. Among the applicants was a certain Mr. Alfred Lyons. Mr. Plethora had not the slightest recollection of him.

"Are you able to stop nuisances from writing to me?" he inquired. "Yes, sir," said Alfred respectfully. "I shall have to ask for a two weeks' delay in assuming my responsibilities, though, because I am to be married tomorrow."

"What do you mean by assuming your responsibilities?" roared Mr. Plethora. "You aren't hired yet. And you aren't going to be. However, you can leave your name and address, if that will make you feel any easier."

Alfred Lyons dived into his pocket and handed Mr. Plethora a slip of paper marked Alfred Lyons. "I have no card just now, sir. My plate is being re-engraved with my new address," he explained. "The salary will be $5,000."

Something about the bold, upright writing attracted Mr. Plethora's attention. Then, all at once, he knew. "So it's you, is it, you scoundrel!" he said bitterly. "Why shouldn't I hand you over to the police for annoying me as you have done?"

Alfred Lyons hung up his hat. "I may as well help you out for the day, sir," he said. "My salary need not begin till I come back."

"And I've got it, Lily," he announced to his bride-to-be that evening. "Five thousand. I'll stick five years. In ten years I'll have him downed. In fifteen years the farm for us. That's the life. Where's our marriage license?"

Diving Helmet for Everybody. A new diving helmet which anyone can use is the cover design of the May Popular Science Monthly.

This diving helmet is of metal. Its lower edge fits snugly over the shoulders. Four adjustable weights, two in front and two in back, are fastened in place by metal strips. These weights overcome the buoyancy of the air in the hood and the natural buoyancy of the person wearing it.

Fresh air is supplied to the diver by means of a single tube which leads to a small hand pump in the boat. The pressure of the pumped air not only prevents the water from entering the hood, but keeps a fresh supply passing through at all times.

Perseverance

By GERALD HOME

(Copyright, 1916, by W. G. Chapman.)

Alfred Lyons was a very ordinary young man. He frankly admitted this to his sweetheart, Lily, when expressing wonder that she should ever have agreed to marry him.

"You are wonderful," answered Lily, "and I know you are going to become a successful man."

"You're right there," answered Alfred. "But how did you know?"

"Because you have perseverance," answered Lily, receiving the kiss that hovered upon his lips.

Alfred was amazed at her perspicacity. "That was his one quality. He was as adhesive as a bulldog smothered in court plaster. He had the grip of a letter clip, crossed with a sticktight. And yet it may be said, paradoxically, that he stuck at nothing."

He had already outlined his life. "I am going to become Mr. Plethora's private secretary at $5,000 a year," he said. "After I have learned the Wall Street game from him I shall go into business on my own account and make my millions. Then I shall oust Plethora from Wall Street and rule in his stead. Then we'll retire to that little farm you spoke of and own an automobile."

"And travel in Europe," suggested Lily, looking up at him in awe and wonder.

"Precisely," answered Alfred. "Now I'm off to interview Plethora."

One of Mr. Plethora's peculiarities was that he insisted on seeing everybody who applied to him for a job in person. Therefore Alfred had no difficulty in interviewing the great man. Nobody knew just what Mr. Plethora wanted in applicants, but when Alfred got into his presence, 27th on the regular Saturday list of applications, he was turned down cold.

"There's nothing here for you," said Mr. Plethora. "No, there never will be anything, but you can leave your name and address if it will make you feel better."

"Think it over again," said Alfred. "I want a job as your secretary. And I mean to get it."

"Next, please," said Mr. Plethora's secretary, grinning. And Alfred was ushered out.

very ordinary young man. There was nothing distinguished about him. He was the sort of young man whom one sees the minute one looks out of the window. Take a glance at the next young man who passes your door. That's Alfred. Go to a baseball game and look at the first young man you see upon the bleachers. That's Alfred. Go on an excursion and look at the young man at your side, eating a ham sandwich. That's Alfred, too.

Consequently, when Mr. Plethora received a brief note the next morning asking for a job, and signed A. L., he simply tossed it into his waste basket without comment. The secretary did not even see it.

The second morning the receipt of a similar note aroused a faint reminiscence in Mr. Plethora's mind. He tossed it into the waste basket.

The third morning a frown crossed Mr. Plethora's brow as he opened the missive. He handed it to his secretary.

"Some fool wants a job and forgot to put his name and address," he said, forgetting that Alfred had left his at his own invitation.

On the fourth morning Mr. Plethora began to get worried. "Didn't I get a letter, like this yesterday, Mr. Day?" he asked.

"Yes, I remember it quite well," said the secretary.

"Well, I wish he'd stop writing to me," said Mr. Plethora. "It's getting on my nerves."

On the fifth morning Mr. Plethora jumped when he saw the now familiar writing. He fung the letter over to his secretary with a curse.

"Have the police trace this young man and stop him," he said angrily.

On the sixth morning the communication changed its nature. Mr. A. L. now had the honor to request the felicity of a position as Mr. Plethora's private secretary. On the seventh he was quite menacing. Unless the position were forthcoming A. L. would be obliged to remind Mr. Plethora of his application.

During the next two weeks Mr. Plethora flung away the letters unopened. Yet he knew that his mind was subconsciously searching out the strong, upright characters upon the envelope. He was annoyed that the writer could not be traced. He went to Europe shortly after and forgot about him.

On the top of Mont Cenis a bundle of personal mail was handed to him by a perspiring postman. Nine-tenths of the letters were from A. L. A. L. cajoled for a job, he threatened for a job, he pleaded for a job, he was facetious about a job. Mr. Plethora cabled his secretary.

"Run down and arrest anonymous writer before I return, or I discharge you," he said.

When he got home a bundle of letters from A. L. was waiting on his library table. A. L. was becoming mildly reproachful. When was he going to get that job? He reproachfully told Mr. Plethora that time was pressing, and in a year or two he would

LEFFLER SPEAKS OUT

C. D. Leffler, a former Sanford boy, son of C. H. Leffler of this city is not only a prominent business man of Miami but is prominent in the Democratic party in Florida and at present is chairman of the Dade County Democratic Executive Committee. He was a supporter of Catt in the primary but since Knott has been declared the Democratic nominee by the state canvassing board Mr. Leffler like all true Democrats bows to the inevitable and is willing to support the nominee. The Miami Metropolis takes him to task about it and Mr. Leffler makes the following reply in the Miami Herald:

"I have not gotten to a point where I consider the Florida Supreme Court a lot of crooks.

"Mr. Knott is the regular nominee of the Democratic party for Governor.

"Had Mr. Catts been declared the nominee I would have supported him as loyally as I intend to support Mr. Knott.

"If I am not willing to work for the election of Mr. Knott, the nominee, I ought to get out of the party organization and make room for some one else. A traitor inside the camp is so much worse than one on the outside.

The above and a few other things, constitute what Chairman C. D. Leffler, of the Dade County Democratic Executive committee said last night when asked by a Herald representative for a reply to an editorial published in the afternoon paper Saturday.

The afternoon paper said: "It is honorable for Democrats to support the party nominees, but it is dishonorable for Democrats to become parties to fraud in order that the crooked ring crowd may perpetuate themselves in office. No one knows better than Chairman Leffler of the Dade County Committee that Knott secured the court nomination through fraud, BECAUSE HE HAS SO PUBLICLY STATED, but he seems to go on the principle that the courts can absolve the wrong doers of all evil."

Mr. Leffler said, continuing his reply to the above paragraph:

"I don't know any more about the details of the primary than I have read in the papers, and have not concerned myself much about the matter. If there existed any doubt about who is rightfully nominated, the decision by the Supreme Court is good enough precedent for me. Party regularity is essential if we would escape political anarchy.

"If I refused to support Knott I would become a bolter from the Democratic party. So would any newspaper refusing to support him."

FLORIDA REGIMENT ALL RIGHT

Second in Camp at Laredo is Complimented

The Second Florida Infantry is one of the best regiments on the border, according to the Laredo Times of Laredo, Tex. The Second Infantry is made up of the flower of south Florida's manhood, and two companies are from the city of Tampa, the Tampa Rifles and the Tampa Guards. In both patriotism and efficiency the Times compliments the Florida boys.

Despite the fact that they are occupying the campsite recently vacated by the Missourians, the Florida boys are showing the other boys on the border some things, whereas it is a well known fact that the former occupants had to be "shown." Following is the story carried about the Floridians in the Times:

"With one of the strongest contingents of all the national guard complements of men, so far as one regiment goes, with attached units, the Second Florida Infantry, Colonel Blanding commanding, which now occupies the campsite formerly used by the Third Missouri Infantry, has with it a total of approximately 1,500 officers and men.

The Florida regiment, which comes well equipped with all the necessities for an army in field service, has been in mobilization camp near Jacksonville for nearly five months and is up to full war strength. In the way of being uniformed, well supplied with comfortable sleeping facilities and having every facility for the men, the Florida boys generally appear a very contented lot, and despite the fact that they have just come off a long journey that kept them on the road five days, they were merry and happy when they struck Laredo yesterday and last night they invaded the moving picture shows and other places of amusement about the city.

"With the regiment is a fine band, hospital company, ambulance company, signal corps and in fact every thing to make the regiment one of the most complete national guard contingents in the Federal service today."

Mike Smith Elected

Tallahassee, Oct. 14.—At the annual meeting of the State Road Department of Florida held in this city Wednesday, Oct. 11th, Hon. Ed. Scott of Arcadia, representing the First Congressional District, was re-elected chairman and Hon. Jefferson D. Smith of Marianna, representing the Third Congressional District, was re-elected secretary of the Department. The full membership of the Department was in attendance, the other members being Captain W. J. Hillman of Live Oak, Second Congressional District; Hon. M. M. Smith of Orlando, Fourth Congressional District, and Hon. F. O. Miller of Jacksonville, State at Large.

The Department was organized just one year ago, but it could not get down to real work until the middle of the month of May, when a state road commissioner was appointed. This delay was caused by a number of the counties questioning the constitutionality of the act creating the Department necessitating a suit in the supreme court to compel the payment of the 15 per cent of the county tax on automobiles, the only appropriation made for the maintenance of the department. The suit was decided by the supreme court in favor of the state road department, the act being declared valid in every particular.

Must Raise the Rate

Many newspaper men from all parts of the state assembled in Jacksonville last Thursday and Friday to discuss the situation brought about by the shortage of news print paper and the greatly increased cost of same. The building of a paper mill was little discussed, the impracticability of such a move being too apparent.

It was the consensus of opinion among the newspaper men that advertising and subscription rates must be raised or many newspapers would have to go out of business. Paper that cost $35 a ton delivered in Daytona now costs $122 and will probably cost $200 by January first. But paper cannot be bought in quantity at any price. The mills are unable to supply the demand.

At the Jacksonville meeting it was pointed out that when the wholesale price of sugar went up the grocer raised the retail price, printers being the only business men who did not increase prices as their material advanced. The Florida State Press Association recommended a raise in advertising rates and also recommended that the subscription price of weeklies be raised to $2 a year.

With the cost of skilled labor used in the printing business constantly advancing, with the price of ink, paper, type and all other material going up to unheard of prices, the journal will be compelled to make a raise in advertising rates shortly. For the present at least the subscription price will remain the same—$1.50 a year payable strictly in advance.—Daytona Journal.

Resolutions

Of respect and love for the memory of our well beloved brother, W. S. Waitney who departed this life in Pasadena, California on Sept. 9, 1916. Passed by Sanford Lodge No. 27 of the I. O. O. F. of which he was a charter member and in which he held his membership until the Great Reaper Death called him from us. He has lived in California many years.

Whereas all things temporal must bow low to the unswerving hand of Time, that common leveler who visits alike the mansion of the highest and also the home of the most humble, and

Whereas we feel that in the death of Brother Whitney, Sanford Lodge No. 27 has lost a most estimable member and a brother whose heart and hand was ever open to the calls of Love and Truth; Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of Sanford Lodge No. 27 are greatly grieved by our loss.

Resolved, That our heartfelt sympathy be extended to the beloved wife of our departed brother and that we commend her to our Father who has promised to be refuge to those who love him in the time of trial, and further be it

Resolved, That as a mark of respect and love for our brother that our charter shall be draped in mourning for thirty days; That these resolutions shall be spread on the records of our Lodge, a copy shall be forwarded to the wife of our departed brother and that they shall be published in the Sanford Herald.

Our school children are busy as little bees these days. No more movies only on Saturday. That's right, boys and girls, work before pleasure.

It sounds good to hear the old familiar whistle at the Bothamly crate mill, blowing early in the morning. It seems like there is something doing.

Mr. Bothamly lost a very fine mule last week. We are sorry to hear of his loss.

Brannon, men's Bible class; Misses Edith Howard and Marie Marshall intermediate class; Rev. C. E. Gutteridge delegate at large from the Sunday school. The delegates will deliver their official reports to the classes interested at a get together meeting Friday night at 7 o'clock at the Methodist church. The officers, teachers and members of the Methodist church at Geneva have been invited to attend this conference.

Messrs. B. F. Wheeler and Seth L. Woodruff are attending the Citrus Seminar at the University of Florida this week. Mr. Woodruff will remain for the Florida-Alabama football game.

Mrs. J. B. Jones and Mrs. C. E. Gutteridge visited the public school Wednesday as representatives of the Woman's Club.

Death of Maggie Brown
Maggie Brown, a colored "Mammy" of the old South who has resided here for the past sixty years, died at her home in Georgetown Sunday night and was buried this morning.

Aunt Maggie, as she was called by her numerous white friends all over Sanford was a faithful servant. She lived with the family of C. H. Leffler some forty years ago and at other times was with other families here, always giving the same faithful service that can be expected of the old time darkies. For the past few years Aunt Mag was with Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Woodruff where she presided over the culinary department with perfect satisfaction to her employer.

The passing of Aunt Mag will be regretted by white and colored people alike for she was one who attended to her own business, worked hard and saved her wages and owned her home where she was wont to retire for a few hours each day to rest. For some time Aunt Mag has been afflicted with rheumatism and her demise while sudden was not entirely unexpected. She was one of the ancient "mammys" who are fast passing away with the new south and was numbered among the earliest traditions and history of Sanford.

Her example and faithfulness and thrift could well be emulated by the rising generation of negroes.

Her funeral this morning was largely attended by her many white friends who came to lay flowers on the bier of their faithful friend, many of them being grown men and women who were nursed by Aunt Mag in their infancy.

An Orlando woman's contribution to the Democratic campaign fund was a city lot which she values at $1,000. There are certain fixed expenses in a campaign which must be met by voluntary contributions from those interested in the success of the party, and every loyal party man should contribute. When female suffrage becomes a law in Florida we are going to move to Orlando and vote to send that generous woman to congress where she will make a shining light among the thick heads who hold down good jobs at $7,500 per.—Apalachicola Times.

A farmer near Ft. Lauderdale was so successful in raising broom corn, a sample of which was sent to the Florida Broom Factory at Jacksonville and pronounced of high quality that considerable interest has been aroused in the possibilities this crop offers, and there is some talk of establishing a broom factory at Ft. Lauderdale.

Farmers in the Quincy section are finding a good market in that city for broom corn. A broom factory at that point is contracting for all the crop the farmers can raise, in spite of the fact that they were forced to double the capacity of their plant this year to handle the large crop.

According to the figures of L. G. Biggers, managing secretary of the West Palm Beach Board of Trade, between $9,000,000 and $10,000,000 has been invested in and authorized for roads, canals, drainage operations and harbor work in the County of Palm Beach since its formation in 1909. Not a bad record at all.

FOOD STRINGENCY GRIPPING VIENNA

Prices So High That Only Wealthy People Can Get Enough to Eat.

IEWS HEARD BY SWISS

Soup Kitchens Opened in Austrian Capital—Military Situation is Judged With Great Pessimism—Further Defeats Feared.

Lausanne, Switzerland.—The following facts will give an idea of the present economic and military situation of Austria-Hungary:

The Volkstimme of St. Gall, Switzerland, speaks of the great misery in Austria-Hungary, where the people, the paper says, have not even the strength to revolt. In Vienna, it is believed, the inhabitants are in the greatest distress. One is impressed by the number of persons driven to suicide by misery. Daily many children die, says Rene Arcos in the Chicago News.

Food has reached such high prices that only the wealthy can get enough to eat. The poor have scarcely anything but potatoes at their disposal.

The first popular kitchens in Vienna were opened in various districts on July 17. The prices are as follows: Three-tenths of a liter of soup cost 10 heller (2 cents); a plate of vegetables, 20 to 25 heller (4 to 5 cents); 200 to 300 grams (about one-half pound) of fatigenuous foods (potatoes, etc.), 30 to 35 heller (6 to 7 cents).

So far, the Viennese have not shown any great inclination to avail themselves of these kitchens.

The lack of horses is beginning to be felt in the army services. The Munich Neueste Nachrichten announces that the Austro-Hungarian authorities have requisitioned all dogs in Austria-Hungary that can be used as draft dogs.

The Russian advance compelled the immediate destruction of a considerable quantity of provisions which it was impossible to remove without, however, preventing the Russians from seizing enormous stocks of supplies, and at present prisoners, soldiers, women and children are working day and night to carry off all supplies in territories likely to be invaded shortly by the troops of the czar.

Pessimism in Austria.

It is said that in spite of the official declarations intended to reassure the alarmed population the military situation is judged even in Austria with great pessimism.

According to a telegram published in the Neues Wiener Tagblatt of Vienna, the object of the Russian offensive is to find a line of combat which will render possible the concentration of large numbers of troops against Hungary. In general the operations are entrusted to the troops of the Caucasus, who are specially organized and selected from the Caucasian front. The columns, commanded by subalterns, advance along narrow footpaths, taking advantage of every cover, and hurl themselves suddenly on the Austro-Hungarian positions.

The Vienna press is silent over the defeat suffered by the Austro-German troops in Volhynia, but in military centers a further retreat of the army commanded by General von Linsingen is expected.

The following comments of the Neue Freie Presse of Vienna give an idea of the general pessimism:

"The sanguinary events occurring on our northwest frontier, on the Isonzo and in Trent, the great battle being fought on the western front, are causing a deep impression. Never, perhaps, has any phase of the war been so important as the present phase, now when men are literally fighting for life or death. Even those nations which have no direct participation in the conflict follow it with deep anxiety, for they know that the entire future of Europe is at stake, and with it their own future. As usual, the important events of the war have a political effect in all directions."

And just when Count Andrássy declares that "peace is inseparable from Austro-Hungarian victory, Hungary is filled with hope and will hear peace spoken of only after her enemy's defeat." It is interesting to hear what Germany thinks of her ally. From Berlin we read:

Relate Reverse of Austrians. "In the problematic expectation of assistance from the Turks, the Austro-Hungarian troops continue to lose territory in Galicia. Their last retreat in the region of Jablonica has enabled the Russians to capture the entire railway line Delatyn-Worochta, for the possession of which a battle has been raging for a week. The Russian attacks which led to this success were directed against Mont Magura, 3,831 feet high, dominating the passage in question and the portion of the railway line Tartarow-Worochta. Worochta is the last station before the Hungarian frontier."

The German papers dwell on German resistance in Volhynia, principally in the environs of Kovel, where the Russians, they say, dispose of formidable means, and they compare this resistance to the weakness which appears to have overpowered the Austrian troops.

Marion County Boy Makes High Corn Yield

Lawton Martin is just a little boy, but he made a big corn yield. He applied for membership in the Marion county corn club last spring. The county agent looked him up and down, then walked around behind and looked again. Lawton was eleven years old and that let him into the club with a margin, but he looked pretty small. The agent talked with him awhile, but did not make any audible prediction. That boy had grit.

Lawton Lives on Muckland Farms

Lawton lives on Muckland Farms, near Electra in East Marion county. He selected an acre of heavy muck land, broke it, prepared and planted it. He did all the cultivating and kept all the records himself. G. L. Herrington, boys' club agent for the University of Florida Extension Division, and R. L. Blacklock, county agent, went out and measured Lawton's acre and his corn the other day. He had the acre all right—not a whit more or less. He also had something else—115 bushels of corn which he had produced at a cost of 13c a bushel. He did not use any fertilizer. His expense record follows: Rent, $5; preparation of seed-bed, $2.80; cost of seed, $0.25; cultivation, $3.55; gathering, $3.75. This gives him the biggest net profit and next to the highest yield that has been reported up to date this year in the state.

Sweet Potato Vines Make Good Dairy Hay

Sweet potato vines make excellent hay if they are cut and cured during dry weather. Many tons of vines are lost annually because farmers do not appreciate their value, according to C. K. McQuarrie, state agent for the University of Florida Extension Division. The right time to cut the vines is the most important consideration. If they are cut too soon the stubbles may sprout and impair the quality of the potatoes. If they are left too long they become woody and the quality of hay is not good.

The best time to cut the vines is just when the foliage begins to yellow and before the main stem becomes woody. The yellowing leaves denote the maximum point of production. The potatoes are mature at that time. If the vines are left in the field after this stage many of the leaves will be lost in the harvest, and the foliage is the valuable part of the plant for hay.

The best tool with which to harvest the vines is a scythe or sickle. A stubble several inches long should be left. The potatoes should be dug as soon as possible after the vines are removed. The hay is hard to handle and should be cured without rain if possible. It will be found an excellent hay for dairy cows.

On thin soils it may be advisable to turn the vines under to add organic matter. Whether this is done will depend on the need for hay and the needs of the soil. The farmer must rely on his own judgment.

Sodium Cyanide Solution Rids Seed Beds of Ants

Small seeds such as lettuce frequently fail to give good germination where there is apparently no reason for it. If the seeds are alive and if there is plenty of moisture and warmth they should give a good stand. When these conditions are fulfilled and germination is poor it is probable that ants are causing the trouble. They are fond of small seeds and will carry practically the whole planting to their nests if they are left unmolested.

J. R. Watson, entomologist to the University of Florida Experiment Stations suggests that the nests be treated with a solution of sodium cyanide. One ounce of the poison to a quart of water will make a solution strong enough. Punch a hole in the main entrance of the nest from six inches to a foot deep. Pour about an ounce of the solution into the hole and close it immediately by tramping the soil. The solution will evaporate and the fumes liberated will kill the ants. If all the ants are not killed the survivors will probably start another nest nearby. This can be given the same treatment.

The cyanide solution is extremely poisonous and should be guarded strictly. If any is left after the ant nests have been treated it should be covered tightly and placed where no person will get it through mistake. Carbon bisulfide is sometimes used for killing the ants but it is not so effective as the sodium cyanide.

High School Notes

At a meeting of the Athletic Association of the Sanford High School, on Monday afternoon, Oct. 9th following officers were elected to serve during the school year just begun: President, Thomas Meredith; vice president, Robert Greene; secretary and treasurer, Robert Robinson; manager of foot ball team, B. F. Ezell; captain football team Robert Greene.

Regular practice for this year's football team began a few days before school opened. Mr. J. C. Hutchinson is the coach and he is being assisted by several men of our town who are interested in this form of sport. Mr. Lewis, a former coach of the Citadel and Mr. Allen, former quarter back of the University of Florida are rendering very valuable assistance.

The following boys who were members of last year's team are out for practice: Robert Greene, Robert Robinson, Morris Spencer, Thomas Meredith, G. W. Spencer, and in following new men: Max Stewart, Percy Packard, Robert Cobb, Raymond Allen, Wallace Liptord, Virgil Smith, Oliver Murrell, Israel Kaner and Reginald Holly.

The boys were disappointed because our proposed game with Bartow for Monday, Oct. 16th had to be called off, because Bartow was scheduled to play a hard game with Bradentown on October 13. However, this will give the S. H. S. boys more time to prepare for our first inter High School game, which will be on Oct. 26th with St. Augustine, in Sanford.

It is probable though that we will play Rollins Prep. some time before then.

The boys in the lower grades are practicing and we may expect to see some inter-class games along with the High School games between the different schools of the neighboring counties.

A list of games for the Sanford High School will be published as soon as it is completed. We have definite arrangements to play two games each with Kissimmee and St. Augustine, and tentative arrangements to play several other games.

We are striving to put out a winning team this season. Robert A. Greene.

In a few more weeks the Catts-Knott stuff will find a place in the trash can instead of in the local newspapers and we can all settle down to rest, business and forget about this election business. At present it certainly has the voters in the wind but I for one intend to vote for the Democratic nominees regardless of all the talk about the supreme court and the re-canvass and all the other rot. Here is hoping that the next legislature will kick the Bryan primary law and all the other new fangled laws governing elections into a cocked hat and let us get back to the old method of voting with the first and second primary. If there are more than six men in this city that understand how to count the votes in a second primary I would like to see them. Meantime let all the Democrats for the Democratic nominees and those who do not vote for the Democratic nominees should not expect to take part in the next Democratic primary.

Any preacher who uses tobacco in any form cuts his influence half in two, according to the theological calculations of Sterling Williams, a famous Sunday school worker of Kansas City, who is conducting a series of rallies in Atlanta.

"I had as soon see a boy take a drink of whiskey as to see him smoke a cigarette," he declared in the course of an address to Atlanta Sunday school workers. "And the man who uses a pipe or cigars while inveighing against the cigarette is making no headway. Let him eschew the weed in all its forms before he talks."

There is a general feeling here that Seminole county should have a fair this year and begin a permanent organization that will continue for many years. Other counties in Florida are forming county fair organizations and Seminole, one of the richest in the state in agriculture fruits and stock should not fall behind in this great movement. That bulkhead idea is a good one and if this land can be obtained it would make a good fair ground for several years to come. There could be no horse racing but then horse racing seems to be a thing of the past anyhow and few people pay any attention to the races at the different fairs. The land on the lake front could be made into one of the finest small fair grounds in the state and, the central location would appeal to the patrons.

I hear and see many funny things in my peregrinations over the city, for instance:

While in Phillips' studio the other day a lady refused to take some photographs because as she said her husband looked like a baboon. Harry replied very politely, "Madam, I can't help it. You chose him, I didn't."

A young man in love asked Felix Frank if he thought he should propose to a girl on his knees. Felix replied, "If you don't the girl should get off."

In the moving picture show the other night a man sitting behind a lady with a large hat said, "Madam, I wish you would remove your hat. I can't see the picture and I want to laugh with the rest of the audience. She replied, "Well, you just watch my shoulders and when I laugh, you laugh."

There is much that can be said pro and con regarding the proper kind of pictures to be shown on the screens. For my part I thoroughly enjoy a good picture and see none of the immoral aspects of them but on the other hand there are pictures that I question the right of allowing young girls and boys viewing. There are question in life that should be kept from the children while they are of tender age and we are certainly living too fast these days. It would be a good thing for the moving picture shows to advertise children's pictures and have children's day on Friday and Saturday afternoons and let the pictures be the kind that would interest children and give them a good moral. It is difficult for the managers of picture shows to pick their pictures for they are probably under contract with the big companies to show all their series of pictures but those same companies should be brought to the realization that the children are the largest patrons of the show and they should create pictures accordingly and act in conjunction with the managers of the local theatres in creating children's pictures for special days. The Woman's Club of this city can well afford to take up this matter and act in conjunction with the managers of the local theatres and in this way work up a regular program every week for the children. Another thing is interesting the school children, parents and teachers and that is the habit of allowing the children to attend the shows during the week. There is no doubt but what the children should have special nights after they are through school for the week and this applies not only to the picture shows but to every other form of amusement. The children should be made to observe the rule of work first and play afterward and nothing should take their minds from their studies.

By a strange coincidence Dr. Brownlee several weeks ago studied on a sermon on the gratitude of children for a series of lectures on Sunday evening and made all arrangements to talk last Sunday night to the children who marry without consulting their parents. The Herald had something on this last Tuesday in this column of stuff and nonsense and Dr. Brownlee prefaced his remarks last Sunday night by remarking on the fact that he and The Herald seemed to have taken the same subject. Now who can dispute the adage about great minds running in the same channel.

My attention has been called to the last driving that is being done by the autos on Magnolia avenue and having watched for them I am convinced that there are several that ought to be arrested but in this connection will also say that Mayor Davison and the police force are doing all in their power to stop it. The police arrest some offenders every week but they cannot spend all their time on one avenue and it is a difficult matter to catch all of them. It would be a mighty good thing for the auto drivers to pull down their machines all over the city for the majority of them drive entirely too fast.

Calling the Children.
Don't shout at the children when they are out of doors and you wish them to come to the house. Call them with a small bell or whistle. The sound will go farther than the voice carries, and there will be no strain on the vocal cords.

BRITISH PILE UP SHELLS AT BASRA

End German Dream of Proposed Terminus of Berlin-Bagdad Railway Line.

CAPTURED SHIPS IN TIGRIS

Simple Possession of the River Tigris is Sufficient to Control the Population for Many Miles Inland.

General Headquarters Mesopotamian Expeditionary Force, Basra.—The culmination of Germany's immediate eastern aspirations was the creation of Basra as the Persian gulf terminus of the Berlin-Bagdad railway system, writes Louis Edgar Browne in the Chicago News. The Germans in their wildest dreams could hardly have imagined Basra as it is today. It is the headquarters and main base for British operations in Mesopotamia. The term "base" has come to mean a place where thousands of troops are encamped in glistening white tents, carefully arranged in rows and blocks with military precision; mountains of food stores for the men and fodder for the animals; hospitals and headquarters and dispatch riders dashing about as though the angel of death were after them.

Basra is all that and more. Never was there a more unique campaign than this one, where there is every contrast between east and west.

The Tigris is all important in the campaign. It is feckless personified. It floods, subsides and spreads cholera with absolute impartiality. Hardly two engagements out of all the furious encounters that have marked the steady progress of British troops up the river have carried more than eight miles from its banks. The British objective has been to take possession of the river. The Turks have tried only to hold it. Simple possession of the river is sufficient to control the population for many miles inland.

British Ships Everywhere.

One stands on the army commander's pier and realizes that Britain does control the seas. As far as one can see, either up or down the river, there are ocean-going ships tugging at anchor chains drawn taut as bow strings by the swift current. The ships are anchored one behind the other in a long column. They hull from many corners of the earth and among their cargoes one may find everything from a big howitzer shell to a skein of embroidery for some Arab lady. The ships are nearly all British. They fly one of the varied designs of the British flag. It may be the white ensign of the royal navy or the red ensign of the mercantile fleet or the blue ensign with India's rising sun or the Australian flag with its four stars depicting the southern cross.

Every day a few ships draw into midstream and with half exposed propellers thrash their way toward the sea. They have before them a terrible tossing about by the Arabian sea monsoon, but even at that they must be thankful to the depths of their souls. Basra is all that is vile. The very air one breathes is rank poison. The temperature runs up to 118 degrees on the river. It will go higher. The shore is a smelling swamp where dangerous mosquitoes breed by billions. Heat prostration hangs over every man's head like a sword suspended by a thread. Cholera comes in the night.

Tried to Block Channel

A tunnel top, a jumble of topmasts and a few shreds of loose cordage snapping in the breeze bear mute evidence of the way the Turks attempted to block the river. British monitors were pressing close upon the retreating Turkish army, hurling high explosive shells into its rear guard. The Turkish admiral hurriedly threw three ships across the river and scuttled them. The middle ship was a fine German liner containing cargo. The British contemplate salvaging her. The others were smaller ships—one a light ship and the other a small steamer. The plan was admirable, but it was engineered with characteristic Turkish inefficiency, and the small steamer on the right swung clear of the channel and fouled the liner before she sank. The Turks are a bit superstitious about the Tigris and they declare the river foiled their plans because it did not wish to bore through the river bank to form a new channel, which it would, have done had the admiral been successful.

Anchored in the stream is a great black ship, with a golden star and the letters "P. S. S." painted on her funnel. The letters translate "prize steamship." I have seen so many prize steamships in the East that it seems as though British captures of Germany's mercantile marine must compensate largely for her losses through Germany's submarine campaign. The prizes still retain their German names, probably for the purpose of identification, although they fly the red ensign and are operated by government crews.

Slaughter Songsters.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—When residents claimed that the clamor of startlings and blackbirds murdered their sleep, Mayor Wilbur hired 12 expert marksmen, whose guns are eliminating the "sleep-killers."

SHERROD SMITH PLAYS GOLF

Disgusted Caddie Refers to Him as "Some Woodpecker" When He Drives Ball into Woods.

"Jack Coombs, Sherrod Smith, a newspaper man and I were playing a foursome on one of the Pittsburgh golf links the other day, and the caddie who had Smith in tow was greatly awed by his illustrious employer," said Nap Rucker, star southpaw of the Brooklyn Dodgers, the other day.

"There's a thick wood to the right of the first tee, and Smith, who swings left-handed, just as he pitches, hooked his first ball into the woods. He tried again. Once more he smashed the ball into the woods. In rapid succession he drove eight balls into the tall and uncut.

"The caddie was disgusted. He was no longer proud he was Sherrod Smith's caddie. Finally he could keep still no longer.

"Gee! Mr. Smith," he shouted; "you're some woodpecker!"

In the Gay Career of Ribbon

The most enticing fancies of fashion are surely to be found in the pretty things made of ribbon that spring up like perennial flowers at the ribbon counter. This particular locality is like a flower garden in the department store, and gay and lovely ribbons lure women as the honeysuckle lures the bee.

The little breakfast jacket is made of wide pink satin ribbon with the edges overcast together with pink silk floss. A seam extends along the shoulders and down the top of the sleeves. A ruche made of narrow satin ribbon laid in small box plaits finishes all the edges, and a frill of wider ribbon stands up about the neck.

In the cap at the right strips of ribbon are joined in shirred seams to make a circlet for the crown. This circlet is gathered along one edge, forming the center of the crown. A frill of lace is pulled to the other edge. Loops and ends of baby ribbon are set over the lace at the end of each shirred seam, and a rosette with many falling loops made of it is set at the center of the crown. None of these is difficult to make.
