Did you ever wish for a well-cultivated vegetable garden right cutaide your kitchen door? Feas and corn, tomatoes and beans and everything good that grows?

isn't any such thing as being well, you can have just such a "fresher than fresh." But is! The explanation bes all winter long, and you won't have to grub out weeds, either: most city market vegetables. To most city market vegetables that a large metropolitan newspaper recently printed this liminating "household hint".

To Freshes Vegetables—When you know your "fresh" vegetables and natural flavor is saved for you know your "fresh" vegetables are stale, let them stand in cold water for several hours before built close to the fields within vegetables grow. Hence within built close to the fields where the vegetables grow. Hence within a few hours after gathering the vegetables are in the canner's kitchen, inspected, washed, pre-pared, put in cans and cooked. It is all done so quickly that the vegetables don't have time to wither and grew stale. Every hit of their freshness and flavor is locked up in the can, preserved unchanged until the can is opened, and awaiting your convenience, no matter how, long you keep it.

No Exposure to Air Now if your garden was a thousand miles away, as it must be for most people during the winter The reason you delight in the thought of that kitchen garden is that your vegetables, gathered in the morning and brought right straight to your kitchen table, and immediately cooked, have that wonderful fresh-frem-the garden flavor. they be fresh vegetables. And that is the sort of market vege-tables to which the "household note" quoted above refers.

Lots of people think that canned vegetables are cooked in one large vessel and then put in cans and sealed. On the centrary, preliminary scalding or "blanching," are put in cans, scaled, and then the scaled cans are put in large steam retorts and cooked. Therefore, the contents of your can of peas were individually cooked in the can, scaled to that the contents were not exposed to the air during cooking.

of commercial canning over home cooking. There are different kinds of vitamins in different kinds of vegetables, and each kind has its particular work to d.. These vitamins are easily list when vegetables are cooked in open vessels, exposed to the air. When however, the caking is done in the little tin cans, hermetically sealed, excluding the air com-pletely, almost none of the vita-mins are lost.

For this reason many now recognize that canned ver tables are actually in re health giving than so-called fresh veg retain more of their valuable contents than when cooked on your

"From out its mabbard pure and bright, Fisshed the sword of Lee."
Untarnished by the years, unsullied by an age of skepicism, the sword of Lee remains brighter than ever. When men are wont to question everything, when faith falters in religion, when elders hear the scoffs of younger generations and reverence of sacred institutions shows marked decline, when out of history pages legendary heroes topple while cynics tell us Washington was not the father of his country and did not cut the cherry tree, the figure of Lee stands out in bold relief, his stature undefiled.

Great as his reputation was as a military genius even in the dismal days of Appomattox, the recognition of his mastery of the art of war has spread until impartial critica of Europe's foremost war colleges view him as America's greatest contribution to the field of military science. Even during the World War when modern inventions had made war something quite different from the days of '61 and '65, the tactics and maneuvers of General Lee were studied

Major General Sir Frederick Maurice, of the English Army, regarded General Lee as one of the ranking generals of all history. In his splendid work, "Robert E. Lee the Soldier", General Maurice says, "I place Lee as a general above Wellington. 'Read and re-read', said Napoleon, 'the eighty-eight campaigns of Alexander, Hannibal, Caesar, Gustavus, Turenne, Eugens and Frederick. Take them as your models, for it is the only means of becoming a great leader, and of mastering the secrets of the art of war. To that select band of great commanders the name of Robert E. Lee must be added.

General Grant, blinded perhaps by his own success and General Grant, blinded pernaps by his own deling to appreciate the handicaps under which Les had fought, did not share so high an opinion of Lee's leadership. "He was slow and cautious", Grant had said, "without imagination, or humor, always the same, with grave dignity. I never could see in his achievements what justified his reputation. The illusion that heavy odds beat him will not stand the ultimate light of history".

Samuel Insult has made applica.

And yet in the ultimate light or history, Lee station of the papers to become a nation for papers to become a nation for papers to become a nation of Greece.
