Kirk directed his attack primarily against Floyd Christian. state education commissioner. and Earl Faircloth, attorney general, and the St. Petersburg Times and Tampa Tribune. He was equally emphatic that he exempted the Orlando Sentinel from his attacks.

"Historically," said the Chief Executive, "the professional politicians have downgraded the people as nothing more than a mass of unknowing humanity to be tolerated on election day."

He continued: "In the last few months, you and I have been witnessing a revolution It is our revolution, and it is a quiet one. It is the revolution of the silent majority, in which you and I are active participants.

"Because the professional politicians for so long ignored the people, and because for so long the newspapers catered to the whims of those who rant and rave and roll around on the grass, the great majority of Americans - and Floridians who normally remain silent until they have had enough, are telling the big city newspapers and the professional politicians: 'We've have had it with you.' Rule by law and not by men is an issue which has rallied friends and foes over the ages ever since Moses came down from the mount and presented the decalogue to guide the Israelites in their search for a home and stable government. Now it is being caught in the passionate flames which follow the trial of the "Chicage Seven", fanned by the most vicious debate on this subject in recent years. For five months the federal courtroom in Chicago where the defendants were being tried for conspiracy to riot during the Democratic National Conventions in 1968, was the scene for a disturbing, re-- crettable and harmful drama.

All involved seemed swayed more by emotion than law, This applied to the Federal Judge, Julius J. Hoffman, who was the target for attacks so bitter by "counsel and, in some instances, by defendants that his reactions were that of an outraged American.

Not Yugoslavia!

Electricity is not a God-given blessing - at least in the form in which it is delivered to our homes, farms and businesses. It is the product of technology, engineering genius and, to put it bluntly, the superior ability of private business

- Because America has been blessed with an abundance of these attributes over a long period of time, our citizens are the world's greatest electric energy consumers and have at their fingertips the greatest power generating and distribution system by far of any nation on earth. Many even think we can afford the luxury of halting certain power plant construction on the grounds that it may impinge upon desirable nesthetic or environmental ends.

Yugoslavia has just furnished a lesson in what can happen when power generating needs are ignored. According to a UPI news dispatch, Yugoslavia - since it depends for its electric energy solely on the output of hydroelectric plants - is about to turn back the calendar t the age of candles.

The country may be totally without electricity as a result of a protracted drought. One ugoslavian office worker is quoted as saying "It's everyone's fault No one thought while there was still time. No one objected when the officials did not make adequate preparation Now, of course, it's going to be too late." This office worker's fifth-floor apartment is lightless, powerless and heatless. At the time of the UPI story, power was off for an average of 6 hours a day.

Yugoslavian citizens would probably give a lot to swap their plight for a few of the nuclear energy plants that misguided environmentalists are trying to prevent from operating in our own country. Yes, electricity is strictly a man-made Helen Fuller Says: blessing, and we should let the power industry get on with the business of making more of it.

Now the case is in a post-sentencing state with the champions of the judge and the court arrayed on one side and those who see the "Seven" as revolutionaries who have struck a spark which will not be smothered as victims, on the other.

We believe that this case has so aroused public sentiment that there should be personal reaction by enough citizens to make this invitation to "write the editor" both timely and useful.

However the "Chicago Seven" case cannot properly be isolated from other judicial developments which have taken and are taking place. Of course the United States Supreme Court and the troubles which have beset Presidents who would strength.

Many may feel that President Nixon is alone in his problems in nominating a justice who will get senatorial approval. Not at all. He is not the first nor, ous, will he be the last who will find this presidential purpose blocked by politics.

Perhaps the most recent instance can be cited as the failure of President Lyndon B. Johnson to elevate his nominee for chief justice to that post in the person of Justice Abe Fortas. In that case the debate was so vigorous and the revelations of the Fortas record so spotlighted that this able judge resigned from the court and retired to private practice of law. It is for this seat which the Nixon nominations of Federal Judges Haynsworth and Carswell have been made to bring the supreme court to its full

However, again the political motivation has become the block. It is generally accepted that the Warren Court and its nature has become the Burger Court and that a strengthening of the conservative trend is to be maintained.

Law and justice, however does not thrive in a public conscience which is beleagured with such events as the circus-like goings on in Chicago and the political maneuverings which still block the noraination of Judge Carswell.

We do not, of course, attempt any judicial role in bringing these to the attention of our readers, but we are sure that there are many convictions and opinions held by our readers which should be printed. How about it? Drop us a line! We'll not only read and be helped by your thoughts but they would also spark lively concern among many who have important contributions of their own to make!
