Strings Of Barges Fill Upper St. Johns

Brady's Big Contract For Ties Makes More Business

Well Known Sanford Contractor Has Five Years Job Supplying Lumber

There is big business going on now in the St. Johns River, especially the upper St. Johns where an army of men are busy getting ready for the big timbering season of the East, under the direction of Contractor E. E. Brady of this city.

Few people in Florida know the extent of this immense deal for cross ties or that it will take this same army of men some five years to get the timber all cut from the thousands of acres of virgin timber land that line the shores of the upper St. Johns, Lake Harney and the Oklawaha.

About one year ago the East Florida Land Company purchased some twenty thousand acres of land in this section and desiring to sell the land for small farms and orange groves was anxious to get the timber cut as soon as possible. It is worth something these days but the man who will reap the rewards of this immense tract is upon the plan of selling the timber for cross ties. A deal was made with the Montgomery Co. to take all the timber for cross ties and the contract was given to E. E. Brady to have the ties cut and delivered to the water's edge. This is some contract when the idea of labor and the scope of the work is investigated. All the timber cut is for ties used for this purpose. The links and small stuff are used for firewood and the hardwood is also used for ties. The lumber is placed upon barges and towed to Jacksonville where it is loaded on schooners northbound and taken for ballast in the hands of the large railroad systems of the East.

Seven barges were taken to Tampa yesterday to be filled. Each barge holds 3000 ties and nine barges will leave the woods for Jacksonville tomorrow. This activity along all lines in river traffic has given an impetus to business and there are many rumors of new steamship lines and other boats for the St. Johns river trade.

Club Wants Suggestion

At a recent meeting of the Women's Club the matter of a new constitution was adopted and the club members were asked to suggest changes. There were many suggestions as to color and flower, yellow and green, with Alameda and yellow, Jasmine, red and green with Hibiscus, Poinsettia or Red Rose, pink and green with Oleander.

In order that the choice may really represent the taste of the majority of the club members, the president asks that suggestions be sent to the corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Henry Wright or she himself, at the next business meeting when the matter will be voted on.

For a month the only one proposed so far is "Not for Self, but for Others," and other suggestions will be welcomed. This will have to be decided within the next few weeks in order that the program committee may proceed with the preparation for the year.

Delightful Day

Miss Jessie Long, her cousins, Misses Lettie and Annie Harold of Gainesville, who are her guests, Miss Muriel Harold and Rev. E. M. Browne, were guests of Rev. J. F. McKinnon from Orlando to Clay Springs on a delightful picnic.

The party went to Orlando on the early train, where they were met by Mr. McKinnon with his auto. The trip through the country to the springs was very much enjoyed. Several parties from the Clay Springs section were also spending the day at the springs, whom Mr. McKinnon's guests joined in a delightful basket dinner, enjoyed in picnic style. Refreshing bathing in the spring added to the pleasure of the day and the charming surroundings of the lovely springs and surroundings. The Sanford party returned Tuesday evening.

Death of John H. Castle

Tomorrow afternoon at his late home in Center street will be held privately the funeral of John H. Castle, who expired at 2 o'clock Sunday morning, after an illness of some months' duration which had forced him to his bed about two weeks ago.

John H. Castle was born at New London, Ohio, about 68 years ago. He married Miss Fidelity Love-rence of Durhamville, who survives him. He also leaves one child, Mrs. Thomas Hultner, of Canastota.

As a young man Mr. Castle engaged in boating, but changed to other pursuits when the boating business declined. For about twenty years he was in business in Jordan, N. Y., and since that time has been a member of Jordan Lodge, F. & A. M. For fifteen years he has made his home in Canastota except as he spent winters in Florida, where he owned a fruit and vegetable plantation near Sanford. When in health he was a genial man of kindly impulses and his acquaintances were numerous in Madison, Onondaga and Oneida counties. He is the last of his family to survive, save one elder brother, Lewis H. Castle, of Alder Erie county, Evening Courant, Canastota, N. Y.

Complimentary to the Misses Harold

Miss Beulah Long entertained a luncheon for her young friends Monday afternoon complimentary to her charming guests, Misses Lettie and Annie Harold of Gainesville. The afternoon was delightfully spent in the enjoyment of vocal and instrumental music, pleasant conversation and good time generally. Delicious cake and punch were served by Miss Long, assisted by Mrs. W. H. Hall. The guests included the Misses Harold, Misses Lettie, Annie and Muriel Harold, Margaret Davis, Essie Purdon, Lottie Connelly, Margaret Wight, Melinda Higgins, Douglas Vernalty, Ruth Roberts, Dorothy Davis, Edna Chatterden, Ruth Hand, Katherine Wilson.

Pleasant Social Afternoon

The Ladies Aid Society of the Presbyterian church gave one of their regular "Sunday" teas at the handsome home of Mrs. J. J. Castle, of Sanford, Tuesday afternoon.

The hostess entertained her guests with a very unique and interesting feast. A small piece of white cloth on which was placed a card with the name of the guest was given each guest, with the request that they indicate the amount of the bill without regard to the amount of the bill.

The bill was paid for the entire party and the guests were given a very artistic and artistic dinner. The bill was paid for the entire party and the guests were given a very artistic and artistic dinner.

Death of Doc Castle

A letter from Mrs. Hultner bears the sad intelligence of the death of J. H. Castle, her father, formerly of Sanford. Mr. Castle was a well known winterer here. He was a genial, whole-souled fellow and well liked by everyone. He was 68 years of age at the time of his death, and was prominent in the Masonic Temple of Canastota, New York his home town. In another part of The Herald is the notice from the Canastota paper regarding the death of Mr. Castle. His friends in this city will be pained to learn of his death and to know that the regular winter season will open this year without the cheery greeting of Doc Castle.

City Officials Arrested

Daytona Beach, Fla., July 17. True to a factional fight among politicians here, a warrant was sworn out yesterday against the town clerk and the members of the city council, charging them with having tampered with the registration books, striking off names unlawfully and refusing to produce a hearing of the charges is set for tomorrow.

The allegations are that the officers altered and falsified the records and refused to register those who oppose a new bond issue unless they produce their last tax receipts and their deeds to property, while those in favor were not required to produce these documents.

The battle seems to be over the proposition to issue another series of bonds for $20,000 when it is charged that the sinking fund to redeem former issues has been spent unlawfully.

Woodruff & Watson are putting on the big July Clearance Sale today and there are some rare bargains offered on summer goods. This is your opportunity to buy them in the very heart of the hot weather. See them while the sale lasts.

Bulk Heading Lake Front Will Make Sanford Great

Other People's Opinion Regarding This Great Work

What Looks Like A Mountain Reared A Male Hill Where

The idea of bulk heading the front seems to seem too large a proposition of some people and yet when the idea is reduced to facts it becomes a very simple and concrete proposition. Many towns and villages in Florida have solved the question of bulkheading and many cities have accomplished this feat and realized a net profit thereby.

The Herald being interested in the idea of bulkheading the front has endeavored to give other people's opinions on the subject. It has done this by the plan of Dr. Gossman, who has traveled extensively in America and has been over the greater part of Florida and who writes under the head of

Bulkheads I Have Met

Up in little old New York, we have looked about the New York City bulkheads and Van Hook's were selling some strings and Dutch canal and beginning to lay the bulkheads. The first bulkhead I saw was in the city of New York, in the island of Manhattan, extending into the East River. The Dutch farmers' wives kept their geese and ducks in the water and the bulkheads were built to keep the water out of the city.

The city was built on the water and the bulkheads were built to keep the water out of the city. The city was built on the water and the bulkheads were built to keep the water out of the city.

You Need a Tonic

There are times in every woman's life when she needs a tonic to help her over the hard places. When that time comes to you, you know what tonic to take—Cardui, the woman's tonic.

GARDUI The Woman's Tonic

Miss Amelia Wilson, R. F. D. No. 4, Alma, Ark., says: "I think Cardui is the greatest medicine on earth, for women. Before I began to take Cardui, I was so weak and nervous, and had such awful dizzy spells and a poor appetite. Now I feel as well and as strong as I ever did, and can eat most anything."

Wonderful Skill of Great Violinist Possessed by His Wandering Daughter.

BY FRANK FILON.

"Ach, you make me tired!" said Bittelman, leaning back in his swivel chair before his desk in the opera house offices and exhaling a cloud of fragrant smoke.

"But the girl is a genius," exclaimed his wealthy patron excitedly. "I tell you, Bittelman, you'll miss the sensation of the season unless you let her play."

"Ach, you enthusiast!" exclaimed the director, disgustedly. "Genius! There has been no violinist who was a genius since Lemarsky died. No where outside of Poland can there be a violinist who is a genius."

"Well, Miss Helen is a Pole," interrupted the other rudely. "Let me tell you about her—"

"All right, go on," said Bittelman resignedly. He knew that he could not afford to offend the millionaire, whose enthusiasms were, nevertheless, the bane of his life. Every week Clough was discovering a new genius and every week Bittelman was turning him or her away with mutterings of execration.

"It's like this, Bittelman," began the millionaire. "Last Monday night I was walking home from my club. I saw this street musician—pretty looking girl only about twenty. She was playing Liszt's Rhapsody."

"Himmel! That's what they all play!"

"In the street, and there was a crowd listening. They didn't know that the finest living violinist in America was entertaining them for a few pennies. But I know it. I have heard Joachim and—"

"Have you heard Lemarsky?" inquired Bittelman sourly.

"I have," cried Clough triumphantly. "And it was her playing that remind me of Lemarsky. I had a talk with her. She wouldn't tell me her name at first, then said it was Braun. It seems she's of a fine Polish family and won't degrade the name, as she says, by having it known that she plays on the streets for a living. And she's all alone in the world and—"

"Enough!" shouted the irascible Bittelman, springing to his feet. "Now listen, Mr. Clough. If I'm to remain director of the opera house I don't listen to any more penniless gazelles and tell them they're no good and can't play no better than a cat. It upsets my digestion and makes me cross. Now, if you get this genius on at Crossways hall some Sunday and the critics say she's good—the good critics, mind you—I hear her. Otherwise—no."

Clough had to yield. He knew that Bittelman would carry out his often repeated threat to resign if he insisted. After all, Bittelman had been good to his proteges. The trouble was, Bittelman did not know that this time he had discovered a real genius. There was no doubt of the strange young woman's talent.

"You will excuse me," said Bittelman ponderously, as he shook hands with the others. "Listen, now, and I tell you something. I and Lemarsky were like brothers in Warsaw before I came over here. You know about Lemarsky. Never was there such a God-sent violinist as him. And he got married and his wife had a baby and she died, and then Lemarsky used to get crazy drunk and ended up when the child was about twelve years old, by gutting his throat poor devil. And so ever since then I do not care to hear the violin. When I heard Pluck play the Rhapsody I said to myself: 'So! You are the famous violinist, but I have heard Lemarsky in my mind's ear and I hate the Rhapsody. I don't want to hear no violin geniuses unless I've got to. You get her on at Crossways hall and maybe I give her a hearing if the critics say she is good.'"

When Clough was gone he sat down in his chair and, from a secret drawer he took out a photograph. It showed Lemarsky, his wife and their child, taken fifteen years and more ago. They had saved Bittelman when he was starving in the gutter. He had loved Lemarsky better than his life. And after his death he had spent hundreds of dollars to try to trace the child who had been placed in some institution. But he could not go back to Poland, and so his quest had been vain. And now this gutter girl wanted to play the Rhapsody.

"Bittelman—Paul Bittelman, when you were starving I heard you!" he thought he heard a voice say. It was Lemarsky's voice. He started up, trembling all over. He must have fallen asleep at his desk, for it was growing quite dark. It had been a dream, then. Yet he could have sworn that his dead friend had sent him that message from across the immeasurable space that separated them!

Perhaps it was only a dream, but it left a profound impression upon Bittelman. All that night he thought of it, and the next day, and the upshot was that he decided to go to hear the gutter musician at Crossways hall. But he would go secretly, he determined, for Clough would be there and he must not know that he, Bittelman, was curious, or his power would be ended.

A word from Clough would secure for anyone a place in the orchestra, but apparently the millionaire had used his influence to better purpose. Surely enough, on Sunday week, according to the morning paper, Frau-lein Braun was to play a solo. There were dark hints of a discovery which would amaze the musical world. Bittelman smiled maliciously; but he went buying his ticket like any ordinary mortal.

And when the girl walked on the stage and bowed to the audience there was something in her appearance which arrested him and drove the devils of malice out of his heart. He had seen them so often, those young women, who hoped to make a reputation; and always they failed, as the men failed. Of a hundred, not one would be found who could play as he had played—as Lemarsky had played.

The first strains of the Rhapsody sobbed on the strings and the wild music thrilled through the auditor-um. Bittelman was sitting up now, gasping. He heard what the audience heard, a wonderful technic coupled with an interpretative skill that showed the soul of the artist; but he heard something that stirred his very soul. This was the passage now. . . she was coming to it. . . None but Lemarsky had ever played it in that way. Would she? Would she?

The Rhapsody was ended and the house rang with applause, but Herr Bittelman was behind the scenes, and as the girl left the stage he rushed forward. . . arms, and clasping her in them, kissed her on either cheek.

"You are my little Stasha!" he cried. "You know me? I am Bittelman—old Bittelman, your father's friend!"

He turned to the amazed millionaire. "No. She will not play at the opera house," he said. "This is Stasha Lemarsky. Don't you understand? Lemarsky's girl, and his soul plays through her fingers. But she will never play in public again. Henceforward she will play only for me!"

Watch Your Children

An appeal to Sanford's Mothers, in behalf of "Helpless Childhood"

The afternoons are long and warm and the mother feels the need of rest. In order to obtain this rest and at the same time give the children an outing in the fresh air, the mother sends the little ones out with a black nurse girl, thinking they will receive the best of care, but in that she may be badly mistaken. And any true mother who witnessed what I did yesterday afternoon would have had since witnessing the scene.

A black nurse girl came down Park avenue with a little tot. The youngest a baby in a cart, the other little one about two years of age was crying bitterly for "Mama." The nurse jerked the child along, scolding and whipping it. The poor little one was sobbing in such a way that denoted extreme nervousness and fear of the nurse.

While crossing the park to join a crowd of other nurse girls who were out with little ones the little fellow again tried to turn back home and to Mama, and again was dragged along by the nurse, who with scowling face and no gentle voice abused the already over excited child. As I turned the corner she had reached the group in the park. The little fellow, seeing the other children, hushed his sobs for a moment. But the over wrought nerves of the little one were not so easily quieted as it again broke out in sobs and cries—low-woe-woe and "Mama." The nurse broke a whip from the bracelet overhead, the child shrieking as she did so, while the other nurse girls looked on with approval.

I turned on I did not care to witness farther, but every waking moment since I've heard the child's screams ringing in my ears and my heart does ache so for the poor little helpless one at the mercy of a black girl's temper. I felt I must take the child in my arms and with soothing words quiet the excited sobbing cry.

I have at other times seen children treated in a cruel manner in a park. And don't the mothers keep a watchful eye over the little ones? If you don't feel sure of your nurse don't trust her out of your sight with your helpless little mites of humanity.

Sanford boasts of a "Human Society" and cruelty to animals does not go unpunished. But what about cruelty to children? Why can't Sanford have one of the police force stationed near the park and other places the nurse girls frequent and prevent so much needless cruelty to the little ones who seem not to know to tell how they have been treated.

Yesterday afternoon I felt had I the authority I would make that nurse girl an example of what others might expect under like circumstances. Mothers! mothers! you would not care for your much needed afternoon rest if you could know what it was costing your child!

Oh, be sure you can trust your nurse before you risk to her care your little ones out of your sight in the appeal of a SANFORD MOTHER.

Eggs Can Be Influenced to a Remarkable Degree by Nature of Their Surroundings.

No other article of food is more susceptible to the influence of its surroundings than eggs.

New-laid eggs do not always have the same flavor. The food and environment of the fowl are reflected in the taste of the eggs.

Eggs even taste of the box board in which they are crated for shipment. Some epicures find the eggs with a tinted shell to be of finer flavor than the eggs with a white shell.

The taste of an egg is also influenced by the seasons. Spring eggs, when the fowls are at their best, have a better character and finer flavor than the eggs of the hot summer weather.

Eggs that are stored at the right temperature in a well-ventilated room will give off a large part of the odors they have absorbed.

Eggs more than a week old are not strictly fresh but if they are produced right and go quickly into the right kind of storage they will retain their original character.
