Telephone scam reported

SANFORD — Investigators from the Seminole County Sheriff's Office Fraud and Forgery section are investigating a telephone scam apparently being conducted by suspects in Las Vegas, Nevada. According to sheriff's spokesman Ed McDonough, "Yesterday, an elderly woman in Chuluota reported she had received a phone call from Jill Marie Johnson, who claimed to be a representative of the Publishers Clearing House."

He continued, "Johnson told her she was a winner in the final drawing but would first need to pay $1,750 in taxes to receive the prize. The woman was instructed to send her check by UPS overnight, to an address in Las Vegas." McDonough said Johnson gave the woman an 800 number, but it is not the number used by Publishers Clearing House. The woman reportedly did not send her check to Las Vegas.

No passenger deaths in 1993

WASHINGTON — There was only one death in 1993 from accidents involving major U.S. airlines. The airlines were involved in 23 accidents last year, but the only death involved a member of a ground crew who was struck by a propeller. The National Transportation Safety Board said Monday that was the best record since 1980, when no deaths were reported. Preliminary figures also show that charter airlines reported no deaths for the fourth straight year and the number of deaths on air taxis was 42, down from 70 the previous year. The only increase in deaths was on commuter airlines, where 24 people were killed in 1993, compared to 21 in 1992. Overall, the board reported that 800 people died in 2,158 accidents involving non-military and non-government planes last year. In 1992, 998 people were killed in 2,221 accidents.

Riverboat gambling?

Betting on legalization, company eyeing Sanford

By J. MARK BARFIELD and NICK PFEIFAU Herald Staff Writers

SANFORD — Gambling on gambling becoming legal in Florida, an Orlando-based company is considering leasing property at Port of Sanford for a St. Johns River gambling cruise. Florida Riverboat Corp. wants to operate a 2,000-passenger riverboat and employ up to 1,000 people to operate the enterprise. Board chairman Gerald Braley, a local homebuilder, commits to contributing 10 percent of income above taxes to the local community. They have signed a letter of agreement to lease 19 acres at the port for their facility.

"We want to be a significant contributor to the community, both in business generation and direct contributions and involvement with charitable enterprises," stated Braley in a press release. Several state lawmakers are proposing gambliing in Florida this year. Sen. Alberto Gutman, R-Miami, is drafting a bill to allow counties to permit riverboat gambling in Florida ports. The proposal calls for a $5 per person tax to raise an estimated $120 million in local revenue and a 20-percent winnings tax to raise $300 million to $400 million in state revenue — all earmarked for crime fighting.

Florida Riverboat officials say the proposal could generate 65,000 jobs. See Gamble, Page 2A

Firefighters cleared in stripper assault

By J. MARK BARFIELD Senior Staff Writer

SANFORD — A dozen Seminole County firefighters were cleared yesterday by a Sheriff's Office investigation into an allegation they assaulted a stripper during her performance last year.

The seven-week investigation concluded at least six firefighters were on stage during the woman's performance, but investigators could not corroborate her complaint they touched her body and deliberately poured beer on her. Forty people were interviewed by the two Professional Standards Division investigators who produced more than 1,100 pages of testimony.

Public Safety Director Gary Kaiser said he's glad the county employees were cleared by the investigation. See Cleared, Page 5A

Nit-picking in schools?

Head lice make their move among students

By VICKI DeSORMIER Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — It's a lousy state of affairs in some of the Seminole County schools right now.

Conditions are just right at the moment for head lice to breed and move from one youngster to another with ease.

"It seems there are an awful lot of cases everywhere this year," Gail McQuail, coordinator of school nurses, said. "It's pretty heavy at all the schools."

Head lice are transmitted when people share clothing that is pulled over the head, hats or hair grooming aides. See Lice, Page 5A

Clergy: Spare rolling from electric chair

GAINESVILLE — Clergy are pleading with prosecutors to spare accused serial killer Danny Harold Rolling from the electric chair if he pleads guilty to the grisly slayings of five college students.

"I want to see the murderer of these students punished, and punished severely," said the Rev. Lawrence Reimer of the United Church of Gainesville. "Life in prison would do that."

Rolling is accused of five female students in August 1990. He already is serving a minimum 105 years in prison for a variety of other crimes.

About a dozen clergy members signed a letter to a local newspaper urging prosecutors to offer Rolling a bargain: guilty pleas for life in prison. Rehashing the lurid details of the slayings would only serve to harm the community, they said.

"A lot of that trauma is going to be revisited again through a lengthy trial," Reimer said. "And the only reason for all of this is to have the death penalty for him."

Death penalty dropped for drug kingpin

TAMPA — Federal prosecutors have unexpectedly dropped plans to seek the death penalty against an accused drug kingpin who they say ordered the murder of a man who sold him phony drugs.

The trial of Ronald Eugene "Romeo" Mathis was to have been the first in Florida using the new federal death penalty for murders committed as part of a continuing criminal enterprise.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Jeffrey Downing offered no explanation at a pretrial hearing Monday for his one-sentence notice the death penalty was not being pursued.

Mathis is accused of masterminding a $300,000-a-week crack ring from St. Petersburg. Charges against him include racketeering, operating a continuing criminal enterprise, conspiracy to distribute cocaine and carrying a firearm during the course of a drug crime.

sporting helmets.

"Try to avoid sharing anything that has been on or come in contact with someone else's head," Gail McQuail, coordinator of school nurses for the district, said.

If an infestation occurs, she suggests:

- Wash the hair thoroughly with a shampoo that is specially designed to kill the head lice. Such shampoos are available both over the counter and with a prescription. Follow the directions that come with the particular shampoo you purchase.
- Follow the washing with a rinse of 50 percent vinegar and 50 percent water. The solution will loosen the nits (eggs) and make them easier to remove.

- The nits can be removed more easily with a fine tooth comb, but often they must be picked out manually.
- "It is a very, very time consuming and, sometimes expensive, ordeal," McQuail said.

She said she also recommends vacuuming the furniture; washing bed linens and pillows and even any stuffed animals a child might have slept or snuggled with. If a favorite animal can not be laundered or placed in the dryer, it can be placed in an enclosed bag and kept there about a week until the lice have died.

Seminole County commission chairman Dick Van Der Weide said he is opposed to gambling because he doesn't think it would be the crime panacea supporters say it is.

"Personally, I don't think the answer is in riverboat gambling, anymore than the Lottery was the answer for education," said Van Der Weide. "The Lottery was supposed to be the answer for education and we see it wasn't."

But some disagree with Van Der Weide.

"I think this would be marvelous," said Dennis Dolgner, port administrator. "It would have a very positive impact on the local economy. We have dog tracks and jal-alai. This wouldn't be that much different. People wouldn't come out to the port and sit and gamble all day, they would go on a cruise for a couple of hours and probably spend as much money as they would going to the dog track."

Dolgner said Florida Riverboat has signed a letter of agreement giving them to option to lease about 19 acres of the port. Dolgner said about six of the acres are actually buildable. Dolgner said the agreement allows them to lease the property for one year, with two-year renewal options. No commitment has been finalized, he said.

Nancy Yurionis, president of the Rivership Romance, which presently operates cruises on the St. Johns River from the downtown Sanford area, had no comment about the prospect of riverboat gambling. "We are in a dinner cruise operation," she said, "and that is what we would continue to do, regardless of what is decided."

The Grand Romance has been sold to another company who plans to operate it as a gambling boat on the Mississippi River.

Exposing Johns

Publicizing prostitution arrests popular tool in crime fight

By JOHN PACENTI
Associated Press Writer

WEST PALM BEACH — The undercover police officer swears Jose Borges solicited her for sex on a rainy South Florida day.

The only problem was the 74-year-old Portuguese immigrant is impotent and by the time that little-known fact came out in court his name was published with the names of other "Johns" in a newspaper ad taken out by the city.

Despite Borges' subsequent acquittal on solicitation charges, a state court of appeal last week came down on the side of West Palm Beach Mayor Nancy Graham, whose push helped kick off a frenzied campaign against prostitution that spread throughout the state over the last year.

"It's public record and in many cases they are never convicted because there is a plea agreement," Graham said. "Neighborhoods and cities are grappling with this issue."

"Anybody who doesn't understand these street hookers are tied together with drugs and other crime are not in touch with reality," Graham said.

Borges attorney, Michael B. Small, sees things differently.

"People's lives are being ruined through public ridicule and embarrassment," he said. "They are publicly scrutinized. The printing of this ad was a form of punishment before conviction."

He wouldn't say whether he plans to appeal Friday's state decision that dismissed Borges' complaints about the mayor and the ads.

The movement has led Florida to try innovative ways to combat prostitution. In addition to the efforts of West Palm Beach, anti-prostitution efforts in Miami and St. Petersburg are indicative of the resurgence nationally to publicize Johns. Former New York mayor Ed Koch did it through radio early in his administration.

- In Kansas City, Mo., a crime watch group turned the idea of a phone sex line inside out with a number that spouses and others can call to find out who has been arrested on prostitution charges.
- In Akron and Dayton, Ohio, newspapers printed the names of men nabbed in a four-day prostitution sting last summer. An Akron cable television operator followed suit.
- "It's quite a deterrent," Graham said of the three ads West Palm Beach purchased at $1,000 apiece last year. "People walk up to me and asked when the next ad is going to run and how they found out about their neighbor Jimmy."

Graham, who is a lawyer, said publishing the names of those arrested — but not necessarily convicted — in prostitution stings, is protected under Florida's public records law.

She points to the release of the high-profile client list of prostitute Kathy Willets, the wife of a former Broward sheriff's deputy and part-time pimp.

"And they weren't even arrested!" Graham said of the clients on the list.

But one man arrested in West Palm Beach who had his name printed in an ad said Graham's practice of publishing Johns' names is being abused.

"The whole thing is a setup. It's entrapment," said Leonard, who spoke on condition his last name not be used in the story. "They have been told to make as many arrests as possible. And the names are printed before you even had a chance to appear in court. If you're found innocent, there's no retraction."

Miami and St. Petersburg quickly followed Graham's lead in using the modern day pillory.

Central Florida bald eagles cumulating mercury

By JOHN PACENTI
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI — Bald eagles in Central Florida are accumulating high levels of mercury that could cause disorientation and reproduction problems but the amounts aren't deadly, a researcher said Monday.

"I think, at least at this point, these levels are relatively low compared to other (eagle) populations," said Petra Wood, who headed the University of Florida study.

Mercury levels are five to 10 times higher in bald eagles near the Great Lakes, and higher levels are also found in birds in Maine and Oregon, said Wood in a telephone interview from her current job at the wildlife research unit at West Virginia University in Morgantown, W. Va.

However, the amount of mercury found in blood, feather and tissue samples taken in the Florida study was "within the range of concentrations that can cause behavioral changes or reduce reproduction" in other birds.

Such levels could cause disorientation and lead to the birds getting caught in high-voltage power lines or hit by cars.

Consumers more confident about economy

By Associated Press

GAINESVILLE — The Florida Consumer Confidence Index soared to its highest level in more than four years in January, boosted by improved expectations for personal finances, University of Florida economists said.

"The turnaround in how Floridians view short-term prospects for the national economy has been remarkable," UF economist Dave Denslow said Monday. "After staying near 78 from May through October, our index took off, rising to 83 in November, 90 in December and 94 in January."

The January index of 94 is the highest in the university's Bureau of Economic Research's monthly survey since 1989, when it stood at the same mark.

Floridians are having more positive feelings about their personal finances, and the share of those surveyed expecting better times nationally grew from 33 to 51 percent from October to January.

Ex-husband: Harding in on plot

By JEFF BARNARD
Associated Press Writer

PORTLAND, Ore. — Tonya Harding's ex-husband claims she was in on the plot against Nancy Kerrigan from the beginning, convinced that skating judges wouldn't give her a fair shake, the ex-husband's lawyer says.

Jeff Gillooly struck a plea bargain under which he was to plead guilty to racketeering today and get two years in prison and a $100,000 fine in exchange for his testimony.

"Tonya was in on it from the beginning," Gillooly's lawyer, Ron Hoevet, told The Associated Press on Monday night. "That's what Jeff has said, and I believe that to be the truth."

Investigators have gathered corroborating evidence, including telephone and bank records and videotapes, Hoevet said.

Last week, Harding denied any advance knowledge of the Jan. 6 attack and said she didn't learn until days later that people close to her may have been involved. She has not been charged.

Gillooly is accused of asking Harding's bodyguard, Shawn Eckardt, to send alleged hitman Shane Stant and alleged getaway driver Derrick Smith to Detroit to club Kerrigan on the knee, knocking her out of the national championships. Harding went on to win the championships, along with a spot on the Olympic team.

Gillooly told authorities that he and Harding began planning the attack in early December after she finished fourth at a competition in Japan and feared judges at the U.S. championships would hold it against her, Hoevet said.

"They viewed Kerrigan as the clear favorite, the fair-haired girl," Hoevet told The New York Times. "They thought what happened to Tonya in Japan was politics and that would hurt her in Detroit."

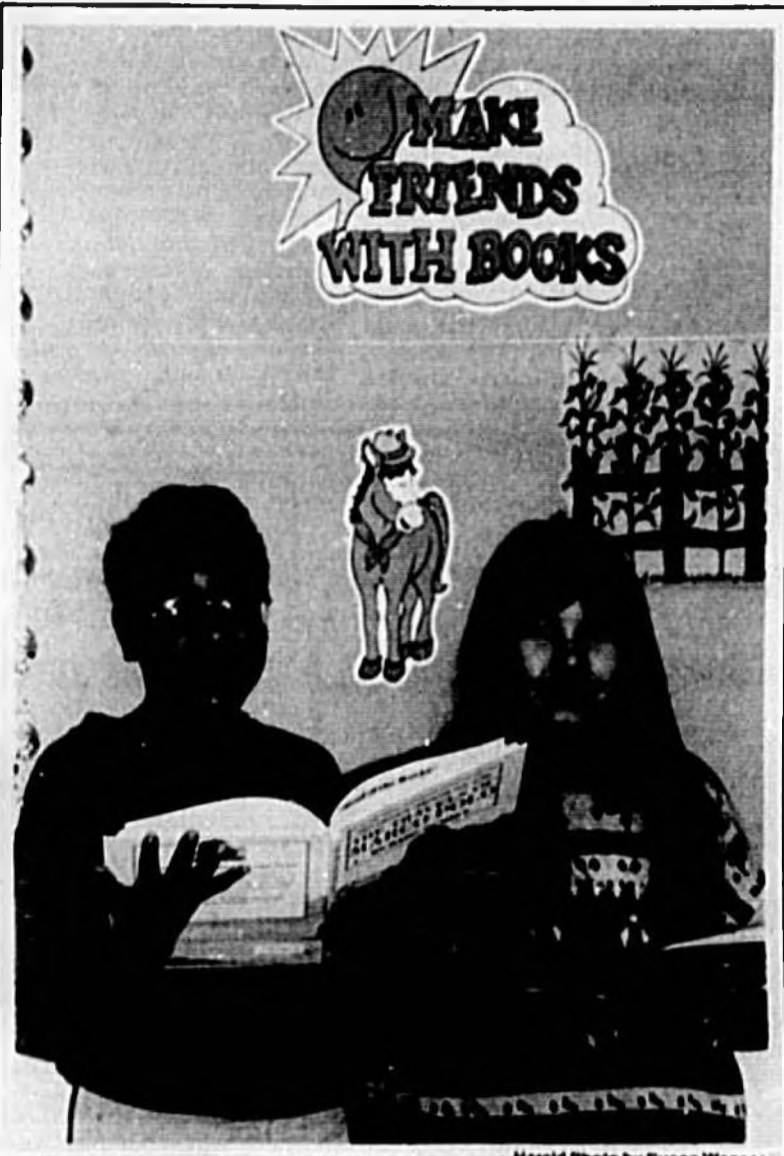

Meanwhile, a special committee of the U.S. Figure Skating Association was to meet today to consider whether to recommend removing Harding from the Olympic team.

On Monday, the U.S. Olympic Committee included Kerrigan and Harding on the team that will compete in Lillehammer, Norway. Michelle Kwan, 13, was named an alternate. The Games begin Feb. 12, but the roster can be changed as late as Feb. 21.

An Associated Press poll taken Wednesday through Sunday found that four in 10 Americans feel Harding should withdraw from the team even if she is innocent.

Hoevet said that it's unlikely Harding's guilt or innocence will be established before the Games begin.

It's nice to be nice to the nice

Last night, the Greater Sanford Chamber of Commerce presented its annual awards. A number of people who possess outstanding qualities received honors and applause for their efforts.

There are many others whom the chamber could have honored. Some people make it their goals in life to do good for their community and its people. Many of them were considered by the chamber, but only one person each year can receive these awards.

There are however, a number of people who are never given a plaque with their name engraved on it, or receive applause from an audience. A few have been singled out for rewards, but refuse them, saying they were only doing their jobs.

Others may go unnoticed. Only a few teachers are honored each year, even though there are dozens and dozens who have gone beyond the requirements of their profession.

A typical day in the life of a firefighter or police officers may be in the line of duty. But whenever the occasion arises, we hear of them going that extra mile to be of assistance to others.

Even non-public figures are deserving of awards. They include: parents who do a good job at raising their children and teaching them moral values; store owners who are out to serve the public in a fair manner; motorists who exercise caution regarding traffic and pedestrians.

People given special honors by the Chamber of Commerce last night deserve this recognition. Now it's time we look at people we meet in our own individual private lives.

Everyone knows someone who has made an outstanding impact on another person or a group of people. Give them an occasional thank you. Let them know they are appreciated, and that their good deeds are not going unnoticed.

In the old MASH television show, the Frank Burns character once had a line that said, "It's nice to be nice to the nice."

It was a gag-line on the show. But when we look at what some people have done and are doing in our community these days, words of appreciation would certainly be nice.

Prevention should be two-fold, before a juvenile becomes delinquent and after they become delinquent. Florida has a big juvenile delinquency problem, because of its high school dropout rate: the kids minds are idle and they are easily influenced.

Education is a key point in solving the juvenile delinquency problem. Another key is the family. The government and the nation have stripped the youths of all family values. If a youth is raised with no morals or values they pick up what is perpetrated by their peers. We need to fix the family structure. Economics is another key point that needs to be addressed in solving juvenile delinquency. Money needs to be redirected to prevention of a youth becoming delinquent. Communities need to set up clubs and organizations that train youth to become productive in society. The goal would be to use computers (technology) and mentors (parents, teachers, executives) to communicate to and help raise the juveniles' self-esteem and make them believe they can become a better person by giving them the needed credentials to succeed.

Fixing the system

P.S. We have to be patient and steadfast in any plan we implement. It took a long time to get into this condition; it will take a long time to correct it.

LETTERS TO EDITOR

Letters to the editor are welcome. All letters must be signed, include the address of the writer and a daytime telephone number. Letters should be on a single subject and be as brief as possible. The letters are subject to editing.

The time for tort reform is now

Forget about "Powerball," "Pick 10" and other various and assorted state lotteries. If you really want to get super rich overnight, try the local courthouse. Consider some of the hefty damage awards that juries generously handed out in just the past month.

In Riverside, Calif., a superior court jury ordered Health Net, the state's second-largest health maintenance organization, to pay $89 million in damages to the family of Nelen Fox, who was denied a costly, experimental bone-marrow transplant for her advanced breast cancer.

In St. Louis, a circuit court awarded $79 million in punitive damages to Jean Kinder, who suffered head and spine injuries after she was broadsided by a Domino's Pizza delivery driver who ran a red light.

"Outrageous, inconsistent and rendered entirely on the basis of emotion," said Health Net lawyer Steven Meadville.

"A judgment of this magnitude... is truly beyond the bounds of reality," said Domino's spokesman Tim McIntyre.

These may appear, on the face, to be the words of venal corporate types, showing little remorse for the harm they've done. But one needn't be callous to question whether the punishment in these cases really fits the crimes.

In the Riverside case, for example, the HMO decided that the remote prospect of successful recovery from the experimental breast cancer procedure did not justify the considerable expense of more than $200,000.

As it turns out, Fox received the disputed transplant therapy with $212,000 in cash and drugs that her family raised through public appeals. She died four months after the transplant, which, looking at it unemotionally, vindicated the HMO's tough decision.

If you really want to get super rich overnight, try the local courthouse.

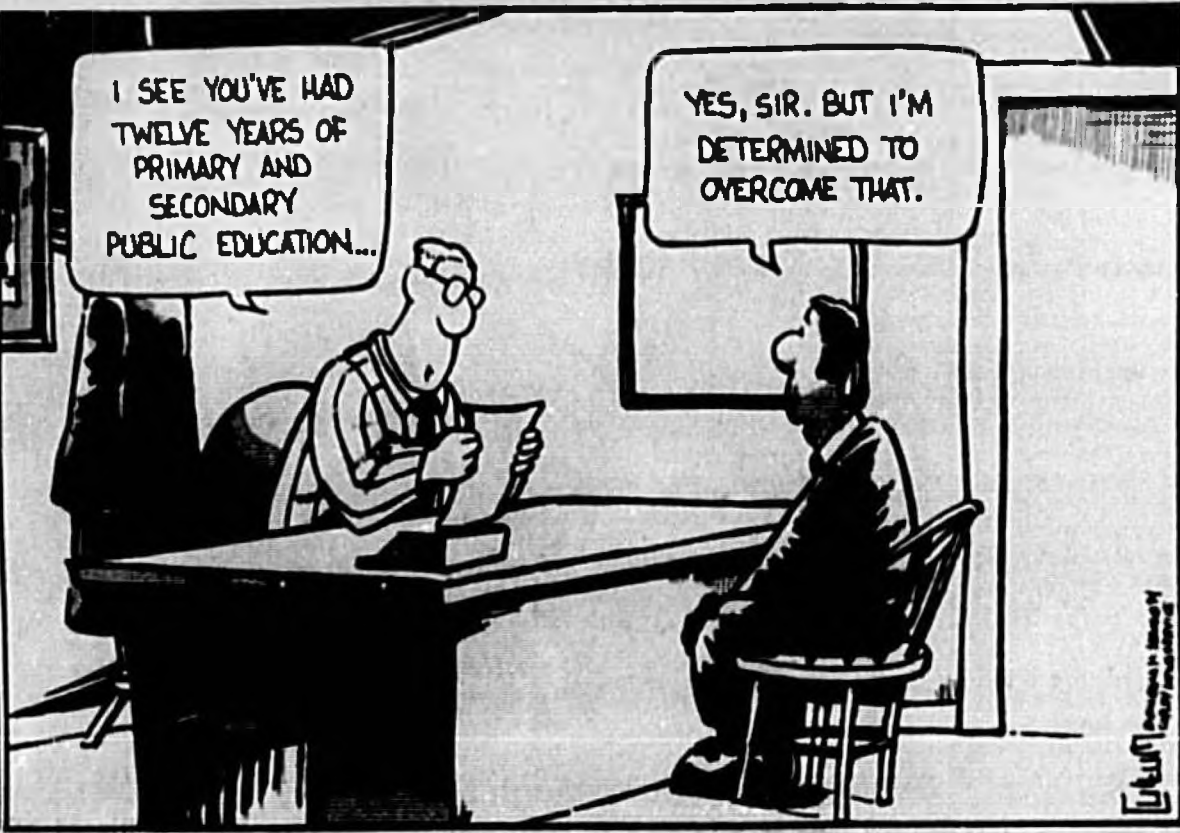

Similarly, Kinder's injury was attributed to Domino's policy of making pizza deliveries within 30 minutes (which the company since has revoked). But Domino's delivery drivers log 2 million miles a day, delivering 5 million pizzas all but a tiny few without incident.

The kind of accident that befell Kinder happens every day at busy intersections throughout the country. Yet, Domino's has been hit with what amounts to the largest traffic fine in history.

Now no one would begrudge injured parties compensatory damages, which amounted to $12 million in the Health Net case, by the jury's calculations, and $750,000 in the Domino's case.

The problem is when juries decide to punish corporations by slapping them with exorbitant punitive damage judgments -- $77 million for Health Net, $78 million for Domino's.

Punitive damages are not supposed to be a windfall for plaintiffs. They are supposed to penalize companies that clearly are guilty of intentional or malicious misconduct. They are supposed "to deter, not destroy," in the words of California Supreme Court Justice Marvin Baxter.

JOSEPH SPEAR

Texas connection

From a source known to investigative reporters as OT (over-the-transom), I have just received a tape-recording of a recent conversation between two adult males. What follows is a verbatim transcription.

Speaker One: Hello, Bobby Ray, you there?
Speaker Two: Yes, this is Bobby Ray.

S1: Old Ross here. I'm callin' from the corporate jet somewhere over East Texas and the connection's not so good, which is why I'm yellin'. Look, I just wanted you to know I'm with ya, admiral. On that media thing, I mean. It's just awful how those creeps criticize dedicated public servants.

It's just awful how those creeps criticize dedicated public servants.

S2: Thanks, Ross. It's nice to know someone understands.

S1: Say, how did you get onto that conspiracy between William Safire and Robert Dole? That's great stuff. Better than Mexican hit squads and Vietnamese assassination teams.

S2: Well, Ross, you know I've been in the spook business for a lot of years. Just like you, I've got my sources.

S1: Yeah. Say, you know I've had my share of... oh my God! I just saw Elvis! So help me, there's some kind of strange aircraft just west by, shaped like a guitar, and it was Elvis sittin' in the pilot's seat!

S2: You lucky dog I spotted Glen Miller once, but I've never seen Elvis.

S1: Wow. Well, I started to say I've had trouble with this Safire fella, too. He called me a "bossy old billionaire bully" once. Look, admiral, in '96 you can be my defense secretary and if one of these clowns dares to pick on any of my boys, they're going to be expelled. It's just that simple. I've got lawyers workin' on a Media Bozos Deportation Act even as we talk.

S2: Can I personally serve notice on Mr. William Safire?

S1: You got a deal, Bobby Ray. Actually, you might want to start takin' names right now. You know that Goodman woman you complained about, Ellen, writes the column for the Boston Globe? She says you sounded like "Dana Carvey doing Ross Perot." How can dedicated public servants put up with this kind of baloney? And the Baltimore Sun says your Dole-Safire conspiracy story "bordered on the paranoid." And the New York Times quotes some anonymous source saying you are "a spook who sees conspiracies everywhere." Wait a minute... Hey! Somebody put on that Patsy Cline tape, the one with the "Crazy" song on it.

S2: Media Bozos Deportation Act, eh? I like that.

S1: Thank you. A stroke of genius if I do say so. Now give me your full attention here, admiral. I've got a super tip for you. Comes from a barber who got it from his handyman who got it from his nephew in Quito, Ecuador, who got it from a drug courier who got it from a Salvadoran buddy in Miami who got it from his fourth cousin in D.C.

S2: Nothing like human intelligence, HUMANITY, we call it.

S1: There's this columnist fella in Washington, Spear is his name. He's got facial hair, so you know he ain't a loyal American. He has heard you wear boxer shorts with little green ducks on them, and he's been conspirin' with a senator -- don't know the name just yet -- to investigate whether they're illegal imports from China. You see, there's reason to believe they are, in fact, little Peking ducks on your drawers there.

S2: That would ruin my reputation as an incorruptible and totally trustworthy, non-partisan patriot who gets along with everybody except Bill Casey and Bill Safire.

S1: I think it's a Texas thing, admiral. They just don't like Texans, Bobby Ray. We shoulda stayed a republic. Say, maybe I'll get my people to organize a secessionist movement. You interested in a vice-presidency, admiral?

Changing blacks' roles in film

WASHINGTON -- "The Air Up there," "Nice name," I remember thinking when my kids and I saw the coming attraction for the recently released Disney film.

The ad suggested only that the film concerns a young basketball coach (Kevin Bacon) who travels to Africa and finds what appears to be the next NBA star. At a climactic point, the coach's handsome young discovery soars toward the basket in slow motion, hovering over the rim before stuffing the ball. In the darkened theater, I glanced at my sons' faces. Their reaction:

Sold.
"Whispered my 8-year-old: "The Air Up there" is going to be Good."

It isn't, really. Which disappoints me in so many ways that I have to rewind four years -- to a discussion on Hollywood at the National Association of Black Journalists convention in Los Angeles -- to explain why.

Disney chief Michael Eisner had been a panelist and as a mother, I was desperate to talk to him. Working my way through the crowd, I scribbled a note in my reporter's notebook:

"Please do more to include all types of people in your movies. I take my kids, (then) 4 and 8, to many Disney pictures because of their high quality, but there's never anyone who looks like them on screen. This is so important!"

I crumpled the note into Eisner's hand. "Even if he's too busy to respond," I figured, "he'll read it." Don't Disney films teach us to believe in happy endings?

And I do believe: I was a kid who covered at every evil Disney queen; who bought that true love can instantaneously occur who believed the "Cinderella" theme song's promise that, "the dreams that you wish will come true." Part of who I am was forged by the light-images that flashed on long-ago screens. Often, Disney was the light-master.

I never asked my mom one now-obvious question: Why are there no black or Asian or Latino people up there?

Not consciously thinking about something is different from not being affected by it. In the '60s -- when I was young and a Disney movie was the ultimate treat -- I accepted that certain people were not featured in them because that was how it was supposed to be. If brown-skinned girls found princes at all, the princess must not be as magical as it was for white girls. If it was, somebody would make movies about it.

But see what's happened? I start out talking "air" and end up talking Ariel ("The Little Mermaid"). Wondering at the very least why, in a fictional, undersea fantasy land of mermaids and mermen, everyone had to be white.

This stuff can mess with your mind. Eisner never responded to my note. But perhaps "Air" -- and "Aladdin," the company's first animated film featuring non-whites, and the Jamaican Olympian saga

"Cool Runnings" and this summer's upcoming Africa-based "Lion King" -- are his answers, his nod to a million minority parents whose ticket purchases have long fattened Disney's coffers. Or maybe Disney noticed the world's a big, diverse place.

Which brings me to why I wanted to like "the Air Up there," and even Jimmy Dolan (Bacon), the college coach who travels to Africa to find this dream player. The player turns out to be a charming young chieftain (Charles Gitonga Maina) needed by his agrarian tribe (unfortunately that's all we ever learn). To woo him to the United States, and to help save the tribe's homeland from greedy black speculators -- though it was white colonialism's rapacity that sparked many of black Africa's current ills -- Dolan sacrifices.

Disney chief Michael Eisner had been a panelist and as a mother, I was desperate to talk to him.

He climbs a mountain with his bare hands. He eats mush. He even goes under the knife in a ritual belly-aching to become a Winabi brother in order to play in the Big Game -- risking permanent damage to his bad knee.

The film sacrifices only credibility. And a chance to entertainingly enlighten us about an oft-ignored and misrepresented people and continent.

Frankly, most of Disney's feel-good, non-animated films ("The Mighty Ducks," "Runnings," both of the "Sister Act" movies), wallow in stereotype, often to great effect. But the conceit that it takes one undisciplined, immature white man to save dozens of grown Africans is too much. Or far too little when you consider how much kids learn from what they see up there.

I welcome Disney's and other major studios' attempts. But the most obvious way to get better films about black folks -- for all our deserving children -- is for black artists to make them, and to receive an equal shot at financing and distribution. Some efforts will misfire (like the crude "BeBe's Kids"). Others we get -- like Julie Dash's lyrical "Daughters of the Dust," and such brutally compelling fare as Halle Gerima's "Sankofa" and Carl Franklin's "One False Move" -- will illuminate as they entertain, showing that love and wisdom, courage and complexity, all transcend color.

Which should make the air down here a whole lot sweeter.

Bone bruise needs medical attention

DEAR DR. GOTT: Ten years ago I bruised a bone in my elbow. My doctor indicated there is a ligament that slides over it that causes constant irritation and makes it slow to heal. I've taken pills and wear a brace to restrict movement of the ligament. I don't have medical insurance and cannot afford to continue seeing a doctor. What can I do to speed the healing?

DEAR READER: Ten years is a long time to suffer the consequences of a bone bruise. I'm more concerned that a tendon in the painful area may have become irritated and frayed. For example, tennis elbow, which is actually common in carpenters and others whose occupations demand repetitive movements, may require cortisone injections or surgical repair.

In view of your continuing symptoms, I urge you to be examined by an orthopedic surgeon. Once the specialist diagnoses your condition, you'll be in a position to decide what to do about it. I do not believe that repeated office visits will be necessary to relieve your symptoms. See the specialist.

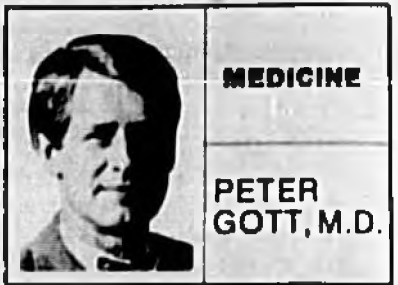

DEAR DR. GOTT: My mother is an asthmatic and has temporal arteritis. She's been treated with prednisone but suffers numerous side effects such as shaky hands and legs, coupled with irritability. I would like to know what the arteritis is all about and if you feel the treatment is appropriate.

DEAR READER: Temporal arteritis is an autoimmune disorder, marked by inflammation of the arterial lining, notably in those blood vessels in the area of the temple. The affliction, of unknown cause, leads to headache, a swollen and painful artery, and -- sometimes -- blindness. Therefore, treatment is necessary to prevent this complication.

Prednisone, a steroid in the cortisone family, is the therapy of choice. Despite its side effects -- osteoporosis and susceptibility to infection, for example -- the drug may have to be administered for several months, to counteract the arterial inflammation.

As luck would have it, prednisone is also an excellent treatment for asthma -- again, with acceptance of (and close attention to) its side effects.

MEDICINE

PETER GOTT, M.D.

Therefore, your mother appears to be receiving suitable therapy. Shakiness and irritability are not normal consequences of prednisone, and may be caused by her underlying diseases.

WIN AT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder

Samuel Stayman, whose name is immortalized in the convention that finds 4-4 major-suit fits after a no-trump opening, died at the end of last year.

Actually, Sam did not invent the Stayman Convention. It was his partner George Rapee (and, independently, Jack Marx in England) who did so. But in 1945 Stayman wrote the first published article about the two-club inquiry, and he did a lot of work on the convention, which culminated in further articles and a full-length book.

Today's deal exhibits the advantage of the Stayman Convention. After the obvious heart-king lead, three no-trump loses six tricks. But four spades can be made with careful play.

There are three top losers. The major danger to the contract is a second trump loser, if the spades break badly or the defenders engineer a ruff, presumably in clubs. Well, there isn't much you can do about the latter. But you can try to maximize your chances in the spade suit.

You should start by leading toward your two honors. So, after winning the first trick with the heart ace (you shouldn't give the opponents a chance to switch), play a diamond to the dummy and a spade toward your hand. If you win the trick, lead a spade to dummy's queen.

With this layout, East's ace collects only low cards. Now the best defense is two more rounds of hearts. You ruff in the dummy and cash the spade queen. When East discards, you must drive out the club ace, hoping for the best. Here everything is wine and roses.

HOROSCOPE

By Bernice Bede Osol
YOUR BIRTHDAY
Feb. 2, 1994

Manage your resources prudently in the year ahead and always try to tuck a little away, so that you can cover any unexpected contingencies that might arise.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Your actions will be closely observed by others today, so put your best foot forward at all times, especially in the presence of people who could help or hurt your career. Aquarius, treat yourself to a birthday gift. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions for the year ahead by mailing $1.25 and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 4465, New York, N.Y. 10163. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Important arrangements must be methodically molded today and not be left up to chance. You may feel very lucky, but events may not bear this out.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Be sensible about your involvements today or else you might be drawn into something where you could be penalized by another's mistakes. The lines of demarcation must be clearly defined.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Strive to be impartial in your relationships with others today. Those you think will assist you, might not, while those who are the least likely could come through on your behalf.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Instead of trying to goat others into doing things for you today, stand on your own two feet. Even if you get their help, you might still have to do all the real work yourself.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) There are indications you might be more of a risk taker today than usual. This could impel you to take chances you normally wouldn't. Unfortunately, it may not be a good day for longshots.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) For the sake of both your image and self-esteem, don't talk about things you intend to do today which you may never start. Keep mum and let the results speak for your record.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) If it is necessary for you to convey some critical information from one source to another today, it might be wise to make notes instead of committing it to memory.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Don't walk around like you have the world on your shoulder today, but, by the same token, don't treat financial matters with indifference. If you do, it could be costly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Do not expect others to do things for you today you wouldn't do for them if the roles were reversed, even though you might kid yourself into believing you would.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) In case you're wondering how someone you've been competing against outmaneuvered you, it could be because you revealed your intentions to the wrong people prematurely.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Financial commitments should not be made impulsively today, especially in situations where friends are involved. There's a possibility several things could go wrong. Copyright 1994 NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.
