

A KNOCLED-NEED TOFFY

Now Out of Ten Attention Either "Knocled" or "Tobby"

Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 4.—Twenty-five of every hundred men in Atlanta are either knocled-necked or knocled-topped. It is a fact that local masculine pride, but it is a sad fact. Collar leaders and knocled-toppers, they are all alike in the respect that their underpinning is out of trim.

The fact was developed in connection with the announcement that eight thousand men are to be worn upon this winter. Therefore, returned knocled-necked men from fifty years in to light, as far as men's fashions are concerned, and men mean to don the top in great-grandfather used to wear.

England has already turned back to the fashions of 1860, and returning accounts all of the fashions which must inevitably reach every hamlet and village in America.

According to the fashion the new style is going to be particularly hard on knocled men. A knocled-necked or knocled-topped man will have absolutely no show to look other than ridiculous in the new knocled-necked material effects.

Tip for Prohibitionists

A criticism that has frequently been made against anti-saloon leagues and individual prohibitionists is that they are inclined to be destructive rather than constructive; that they were themselves up into a fever heat in words of abolition but usually fail to see anything much to do towards offering attractions as substitutes for the liquor establishment.

Just as the bad boy can be turned into the family joy if he is given something interesting to do by which his natural spirits and pent-up energy can be utilized, so can the fact that he made into a useful citizen if he is given an outlet in a wholesome way.

Recently in a beautiful county, Pa., where there is a rather strict license system, the report of judges were accumulated at the small number of applications for saloon licenses, as required by statute, into the cause.

It was disclosed that of the total number of saloons in the county only thirty per cent were making money and the owners of the remaining seventy per cent were willing to go into some more profitable business. If the saloonists had but per cent attributed the decline in business to the coming of the moving picture show which attracted the business and drove that used to flow into the saloon keeper's till.

The discovery would seem to indicate that many men who frequent saloons do so for purely social purposes. Many of them have interesting—some and that, sagging homelife. Some of them have no home life whatever and the saloon is many instances is not attracting them because it is a place to get a dose of nervous relief from their lives. They do nothing but sit in trouble for a lull day—but because of the brightly lighted barroom they will find some jolly companions and so a bit of gaiety to wind up another day.

It looks very reasonable then to conclude that potent medium for reform is offered in the "entertainment" theory. At a recent brewers convention in Chicago most pessimistic reports were made about the falling of it business. "The cups are going dry," one drinking buttermilk, "one beer manufacturer wailed. And another member of the convention bitterly complained that soft drink stands—especially where milk drinks are sold were greater enemies to his business than the crusaders.

Companionship and entertainment and—buttermilk might bring more than one man back to a wholesome way of living.—Miami Metropolis.

SOME IMPRESSIONS AND EXPERIENCES

OF A TRIP TO OLD ENGLAND

Since the writer had decided to spend the next few days in the suburbs of London, instead of in the middle of the city, it was necessary for him to change trains at the famous little town of Rugby, because the one he was on did not stop at Watford, where he expected to find suitable accommodations. There was so short a time between trains it was impossible to see much of the town, but it was some satisfaction to think one had been on the very scene of "Tom Brown's School Days" and "Tom Brown at Rugby."

The next train proved to be not quite so fast as the first, but was quite good enough, and soon landed the writer in Watford. He had picked out Watford for the reason that on the map it appeared to be far enough out of London to be in the country, where one could enjoy the freedom, and still be near enough to reach the city every day. But he was surprised to see that before getting to Watford he was passing through a continuously built up section, really a part of London, and when he got to Watford he was far from the country, in the midst of the city though still eighteen or twenty miles from the center of London.

As London has grown it has absorbed scores of small towns and villages which still retain their original names. They are all, indeed, under the London City Council, but are towns within a town, if such is possible.

A few hours of daylight were left, so the writer had an opportunity to walk around a little and see what an English village is like. Watford reminded him, and so did the other villages he saw, of the villages we sometimes see on the stage. Everything seems to be so compactly built upon the clean, narrow little streets. The houses are all built of stone, have their doorsteps directly upon the walkway, or perhaps there is a little space between the walk and the door where is room for a few carefully kept flowers and the roots of a vine that climbs over the doorway.

Since the streets are narrow and the houses built directly upon them, and since they are never straight for more than a few feet, one can often hear people or vehicles approaching before they can be seen. Thus it was that I heard a noise I had never heard before coming towards me as I proceeded along one of these winding ways. It was evidently something walking, but the sound was not sharp enough to be that of a horse's iron shod feet, and surely no human being could make such a noise by walking. So it was with a great deal of curiosity that I expected momentarily the cause of the approaching sound would appear around the bend of the street. Still I continued to go on and the noise, like some one striking coconuts together, seemed to grow nearer and nearer, until I must have gone a quarter of a mile. At last it seemed to be right upon me and suddenly around the turn appeared two workmen, who because of the sharpness of the turn were right upon me before I saw them, and I saw that the clacking noise came along with them. Upon looking closely I observed that they had their feet encased in great heavy wooden shoes, such as I thought were to be found only in Holland. And since they were keeping step it was these shoes coming in contact with the hard pavement that made such a loud and unusual noise. I could not but be thankful that every one did not wear them, for one would be deafened.

Watford proved to be a very quiet place, though there was much of beauty and interest to a stranger. Indeed it was neither the country village which the writer desired nor yet did it offer the advantages one would expect in such a city as London. After a diligent search a "hotel" was found that seemed to be a little better than the one or two others in the place. Here the writer had the rather novel experience of going to bed by candle light in what purported to be a hotel in one of the best suburbs of the world's largest city. Does not that seem strange to us Americans? The room itself, appeared by that feeble ray to be quite large enough, indeed the more distant parts of it were quite lost to view in the gloom, although four other candles were discovered, evidently left by a prodigal maid, and were pressed into service to add their tiny spark against the darkness. Looming out of the shadows were what appeared to be the specimens of fine old furniture, and in the better light of the nearer portion rose the beds snowy mass upon the dizzy height of which it was evidently my fate to repose, if I could, in forgetfulness of the huge space that separated me from the floor.

In such a place the imagination runs apace, and by the candle's feeble beam one may summon as a guest, the spectators of all the departed guests that have preceded one to that same prodigious resting place. Even one's own face in the tiny mirror, with which the guest is supplied, seems strange and to lack a body for the candle lights but a small portion at a time. But most impressive of all is to climb in the darkness upon the bed's dizzy heights and sink to unknown depths in oceans of feathers. Once one has to sink, the fear of rolling off the prodigious height is succeeded by the fear that one will suffocate, or escape that fate, one wonders how it will be possible to get out again when morning comes.

However, no accidents befell the traveler, and the middle of the morning found him on his way to "The City," as the main part of London is called, where he found better accommodations and the friend who had preceded him the day before.

As in Liverpool, the railways entering London have each a separate station, and having landed at one of these stations one may take the subway to any part of the city. Being so different from our subways they are worthy a short description.

In the first place they are called "Tubes," by the Londoner, and well they may be so called for each track runs through its own compartment, which is shaped exactly like a tube. Sometimes one has to go down immense distances to get to them, because they are arranged in such a network that at one place no less than five tubes cross, one above the other, at one point. One never makes the mistake of walking down the steps to them more than once. After that one takes the "lift."

There is no way known to the writer in which one may more easily lose one's sense of direction than in these "tubes," in London. First, you are put out of the lift on the opposite side from which you entered, then you have to pursue long winding passage ways that cross other passage ways whence comes the roar of passing tube trains, then up or down steps until one feels that one must be already under a different part of the city and does not need the winding passage in the train to confuse him.

A map of the various lines, that make a perfect network of the city, does not simplify matters much, for each line is represented by a different color and they cross and recross until one hardly knows which way to go. It certainly lacks the simplicity of our subway systems and until one has used them a while they are very confusing.

In London all roads lead to Charing Cross. Here is the center of the enormous city, and most distances are reckoned from this place. It is easily reached by all means of transportation. All the motor busses pass here. Three subways have a station here. One of the largest railways has a station here also. So a person can easily reach that part of the city, and it is the point for which all strangers make.

When the writer emerged from the underground station there he found himself exactly in the middle of London, surrounded by the countless objects and associations of interest he had come thousands of miles to see. Indeed, a glance around seemed to reveal all that was worth while in the history of the English speaking race, and all that was worth while in all of English fiction. It was overwhelming to be brought up from below ground and to be set down right in the midst of things one had read and heard and studied about and hoped to see for years and years. Every name seemed as familiar as though I had been transported to the pages of David Copperfield and were in imagination walking through the familiar scenes. Here was Charing Cross and the Strand, and nearby the Thames, the Houses of Parliament, Westminster, Trafalgar Square and the Nelson Column. Just beyond by the palace gardens, and within just a minutes walk, all that one could wish to see in a week. I didn't know where to begin. To us of America who have to travel so far from one place of interest to another it is bewildering to be placed in such close touch with so much of historic and literary interest, all concentrated into so small a space.

Evidently this was a place in which to settle down to days of revelling in the world's best sights and memories, so a hotel was the first thought on recovering possession of the wandering fancy. A place was found not so very far from here that just suited. A walk of six or seven short blocks along the Strand to the westward brought me to Wellington street, where I turned aside from the Strand's busy throng and pursuing this street, which in less than a hundred yards changed its name to Bow street in the way London streets are always doing, and found in a quiet place a nice little hotel much patronized by Americans. To the left, that of this bustling I climbed in the absence of an elevator, and found myself at last settled as I wished in London.

The name of the street at first sounded familiar, but no more was thought about it at the time. I soon found that I was fortunate to be in such a locality, for it too was full of precious memories.

Directly across the narrow street is Covent Garden Market, the chief market of London for fruits and vegetables and flowers. It takes its name from the fact that it was of old the Convent Garden of St. Peter's, Westminster (the Abbey). After the disestablishment of the convents, fruit and vegetable stands were built against its walls. In 1631 the Earl of Bedford built a large quadrangle around it, and the Piazza of the convent became the lounging place of all the fashionable men about town. This piazza and the taverns connected with it were conspicuous in the social, literary and dramatic history of the eighteenth century. The central avenue of the market is lined with shops in which are displayed the most costly and exquisite fruits and flowers one can imagine. When the market is in full swing a very animated and beautiful scene awaits one.

A KNOCK-KNEED TOWN

Nine Out of Ten Atlantans Either "Knocked" or "Bowed"

Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 4.—Ninety-nine of every hundred men in Atlanta are either knock-kneed or bow-legged. It's a blow to local masculine pride, but it is sadly true. Cotillion leaders and hod-carriers, they are all alike in this respect that their underpinning is out of true.

The fact was developed in connection with the announcement that tight trousers are to be worn again this winter. Time is to be turned backward more than fifty years in its light, so far as men's fashions are concerned, and mere man is to don the togs his great-grandfather used to wear.

England has already turned back to the styles of 1840, and returning tourists tell of the fashions which must inevitably reach every hamlet and village in America.

According to the tailors the new style is going to be particularly hard on Atlanta men. A bow-legged or knock-kneed man will have absolutely no show to look other than ridiculous in the new spider-legged cartorial affects.

Tip for Prohibitionists

A criticism that has frequently been made against anti-saloon leagues and individual prohibitionists is that they are inclined to be destructive rather than constructive; that they work themselves up into a fever heat in works of abolition but usually fail to see anything much to do towards offering attractions as substitutes for the liquor establishment.

Just as the bad boy can be turned into the family joy, if he is given something interesting to do by which his animal spirits and pent-up energy can be utilized, so can the bad man be made into a useful citizen if his desires are satisfied in a wholesome way.

Recently, in Schuylkill county, Pa., where there is a rather strict license system, the board of judges were so astonished at the small number of applications for saloon license, an inquiry was instituted into the cause.

It was disclosed that of the total number of saloons in the county, only thirty per cent were making money and the owners of the remaining seventy per cent were willing to go into some more profitable business. Of the saloonists forty per cent attributed the decline in business to the coming of the moving picture show which absorbed the nickels and dimes that used to flow into the saloon keeper's till.

The discovery would seem to indicate that many men who frequent saloons do so for purely social purposes. Many of them have uninteresting—now and then, nagging homefolks. Some of them have no home ties, whatever, and the saloon in many instances is not attracting them because it is a place to get a drink of alcohol—which most men know does nothing but lay up trouble for a future day—but because in the brightly lighted barroom they will find some jolly companions and so a bit of gaiety to wind up another day.

It looks very reasonable then to conclude that potent medium for reform is offered in the "substitute" theory. At a recent brewers' convention in Chicago most pessimistic reports were made about the falling off in business. "Chicago men are going daffy over drinking buttermilk," one beer manufacturer wailed. And another member of the convention bitterly complained that soft drink stands—especially where milk drinks are sold were greater enemies to his business than the crusaders.

Companionship and entertainment and—buttermilk might bring more than one man back to a wholesome way of living.—Miami Metropolis.

There was so short a time between trains it was impossible to see much of the town, but it was some satisfaction to think one had been on the very scene of "Tom Brown's School Days" and "Tom Brown at Rugby."

The next train proved to be not quite so fast as the first, but was quite good enough, and soon landed the writer in Watford. He had picked out Watford for the reason that on the map it appeared to be far enough out of London to be in the country, where one could enjoy the freedom, and still be near enough to reach the city every day. But he was surprised to see that before getting to Watford he was passing through a continuously built up section, really a part of London, and when he got to Watford he was far from the country, in the midst of the city though still eighteen or twenty miles from the center of London.

As London has grown it has absorbed scores of small towns and villages which still retain their original names. They are all, indeed, under the London City Council, but are towns within a town, if such is possible.

A few hours of daylight were left, so the writer had an opportunity to walk around a little and see what an English village is like. Watford reminded him, and so did the other villages he saw, of the villages we sometimes see on the stage. Everything seems to be so compactly built upon the clean, narrow little streets. The houses are all built of stone, have their doorsteps directly upon the walkway, or perhaps there is a little space between the walk and the door where is room for a few carefully kept flowers and the roots of a vine that climbs over the doorway.

Since the streets are narrow, and the houses built directly upon them, and since they are never straight for more than a few feet, one can often hear people or vehicles approaching before they can be seen. Thus it was that I heard a noise I had never heard before coming towards me as I proceeded along one of these winding ways. It was evidently something walking, but the sound was not sharp enough to be that of a horse's iron shod feet, and surely no human being could make such a noise by walking. So it was with a great deal of curiosity that I expected momentarily the cause of the approaching sound would appear around the bend of the street. Still I continued to go on and the noise, like some one striking coconut shells together, seemed to grow nearer and nearer, until I must have gone a quarter of a mile. At last it seemed to be right upon me and suddenly around the turn appeared two workmen, who because of the sharpness of the turn were right upon me before I saw them, and I saw that the clacking noise came along with them. Upon looking closely I observed that they had their feet encased in great heavy wooden shoes, such as I thought were to be found only in Holland. And since they were keeping step it was these shoes coming in contact with the hard pavement that made such a loud and unusual noise. I could not but be thankful that every one did not wear them, for one would be deafened.

Watford proved to be a very quiet place, though there was much of beauty and interest to a stranger. Indeed it was neither the country village which the writer desired nor yet did it offer the advantages one would expect in such a city as London. After a diligent search a "hotel" was found that seemed to be a little better than the one or two others in the place. Here the writer had the rather novel experience of going to bed by candle light in what purported to be a hotel in one of the best suburbs of the world's largest city. Does not that seem strange to us Americans? The room itself, appeared by that feeble ray to be quite large enough, indeed the more distant parts of it were quite lost to view in the gloom, although four other candles were discovered, evidently left by a prodigal maid, and were pressed into service to add their tiny spark against the darkness. Looming out of the shadows were what appeared to be the specimens of fine old furniture, and in the better light of the nearer portion rose the beds snowy mass upon the dizzy height of which it was evidently my fate to repose, if I could, in forgetfulness of the huge space that separated me from the floor.

In such a place the imagination runs apace, and by the candle's feeble beam one may summon as a court, the spectators of all the departed guests that have preceded one to that same prodigious resting place. Even one's own face in the tiny mirror, with which the guest is supplied, seems strange and to lack a body for the candle lights but a small portion at a time. But most impressive of all is to climb in the darkness upon the beds dizzy heights and sink to unknown depths in oceans of feathers. Once one has to sink, the fear of rolling off the prodigious height is succeeded by the fear that one will suffocate, or escape that fate, one wonders how it will be possible to get out again when morning comes.

However, no accidents befell the traveler, and the middle of the morning found him on his way to "The City," as the main part of London is called, where he found better accommodations and the friend who had preceded him the day before.

As in Liverpool, the railways entering London have each a separate station, and having landed at one of these stations one may take the subway to any part of the city. Being so different from our subways they are worthy a short description.

In the first place they are called "Tubes," by the Londoner, and well they may be so called for each track runs through its own compartment, which is shaped exactly like a tube. Sometimes one has to go down immense distances to get to them, because they are arranged in such a network that at one place no less than five tubes cross, one above the other, at one point. One never makes the mistake of walking down the steps to them more than once. After that one takes the "lift."

There is no way known to the writer in which one may more easily lose one's sense of direction than in these "tubes," in London. First, you are put out of the lift on the opposite side from which you entered, then you have to pursue long winding passage ways that cross other passage ways whence comes the roar of passing tube trains, then up or down steps until one feels that one must be already under a different part of the city and does not need the winding passage in the train to confuse him.

A map of the various lines, that make a perfect network of the city, does not simplify matters much, for each line is represented by a different color and they cross and recross until one hardly knows which way to go. They certainly lack the simplicity of our subway systems, and until one has used them a while they are very confusing.

In London all roads leads to Charing Cross. Here is the center of the enormous city, and most distances are reckoned from this place. It is easily reached by all means of transportation. All the motor busses pass here. Three subways have a station here. One of the largest railways has a station here also. So a person can easily reach this part of the city, and it is the point for which all strangers make.

When the writer emerged from the underground station there he found himself exactly in the middle of London, surrounded by the countless objects and associations of interest he had come thousands of miles to see. Indeed, a glance around seemed to reveal all that was worth while in the history of the English speaking race, and all that was worth while in all of English fiction. It was overwhelming to be brought up from below ground and to be set down right in the midst of things one had read and heard and studied about and hoped to see for years and years. Every name seemed as familiar as though I had been transported to the pages of David Copperfield and were in imagination walking through the familiar scenes. Here was Charing Cross and the Strand, and nearby the Thames, the Houses of Parliament, Westminster, Trafalgar Square and the Nelson Column. Just beyond by the palace gardens, and within just a minutes walk, all that one could wish to see in a week. I didn't know where to begin. To us of America who have to travel so far from one place of interest to another it is bewildering to be placed in such close touch with so much of historic and literary interest, all concentrated into so small a space.

Evidently this was a place in which to settle down to days of revelling in the world's best sights and memories, so a hotel was the first thought on recovering possession of the wandering fancy. A place was found not so very far from here that just suited. A walk of six or seven short blocks along the Strand to the westward brought me to Wellington street, where I turned aside from the Strand's busy throng and pursuing this street, which in less than a hundred yards changed its name to Bow street in the way London streets are always doing, and found in a quiet place a nice little hotel much patronized by Americans. To the fifth floor of this hostelry I climbed in the absence of an elevator, and found myself at last settled as I wished in London.

The name of the street at first sounded familiar, but no more was thought about it at the time. I soon found that I was fortunate to be in such a locality, for it too was full of precious memories.

Directly across the narrow street is Covent Garden Market, the chief market of London for fruits and vegetables and flowers. It takes its name from the fact that it was of old the Convent Garden of St. Peter's, Westminster (the Abbey). After the disestablishment of the convents, fruit and vegetable stands were built against its walls. In 1631 the Earl of Bedford built a large quadrangle around it, and the Piazza of the convent became the lounging place of all the fashionable men about town. This piazza and the taverns connected with it were conspicuous in the social, literary and dramatic history of the eighteenth century. The central avenue of the market is lined with shops in which are displayed the most costly and exquisite fruits and flowers one can imagine. When the market is in full swing a very animated and beautiful scene awaits one.

WE WIN WITH WILSON

We hope that our own Forrest Lake brought that Speakership back from Tallahassee in his pocket.

When one stops to think about it that Florida Gardens project is some "punkins" and will give Sanford a wonderful prestige.

The people of Sanford should seriously consider the plan of The Herald to ask the A. C. L. to delay the movement to the new passenger station this season.

Harry Floyd only had time to make one speech and it is now up to Escambia county to call a special session of the legislature for Harry's special benefit.

There being nothing else to take our minds from Orange county would it not be a good thing for our people to start getting ready for the Orange county fair?

The Rump Legislature adjourned after a two days' session and will be called again whenever Cromwell Gilchrist wants a new dock for Joyous Jacksonville.

The Herald sincerely hopes that no personal feelings will hold up the brick roads in this district. We need the brick roads now and will need them every day from this time hence.

The showers that are falling each day are very refreshing after such a long dry spell. It has not rained in Sanford since yesterday and the statement can be made without contradiction tomorrow.

A newspaper offered a prize for the best answer to the conundrum, "Why is a newspaper like a woman?" The prize was won by a lady who sent in the following: "Because every man should have one of his own and not run after his neighbor's."

The rejuvenated Eustis Lake Region comes to us this week under new management and it is a work of printers' art mixed with brains. That embodiment of the Kentucky Colonel, Hon. Clarence E. Woods, is the editor and Royal Childs is the presiding genius at the wheel. The Lake Region makes a new start in life under most auspicious circumstances and with a silver spoon in its mouth, being fostered by a twenty thousand dollar stock company, something that is rather a rarity in the Florida press annals. We wish them all the success that is attainable and then some. With a Lake Region, Woods and a Childs a most pleasing ensemble ought to be evolved in this Land of Flowers.

Let every man who has the best interests of Sanford at heart come out to the Commercial Club meeting tonight. The committees on membership have been hard at work this week and will be given an extension of time in order that they may dodge that banquet. It is understood that the committee that brings in the least number of names will have to give a luncheon to the club and both committees are working hard to get under the wire when the bell taps. At each meeting of the Commercial Club after tonight some prominent man will be invited to address the members and The Herald would suggest for the next meeting the Hon. W. R. O'Neal of Orlando, a man whose life and work can well be followed by this generation and his example emulated.

The Dunnellon Advocate announces that it will suspend publication with the next issue, October 5. The reason is forcibly given in the statement that Dunnellon, with a population of 2500 people, over 150 business houses and all the commercial advantages desired by a much larger town, gives its only newspaper but $25 a month patronage. It takes a man of heroic mould, long purse and large credit to stay in the game under such circumstances, and few, if any, country editors have all three of these at the same time. We are sorry to lose the Advocate but we see where Editor Stafford is right. Twenty-five dollars per month patronage divided among 2500 people! That's one cent per month for each inhabitant! No wonder they shrunk from such an intolerable tax and called for a revision of the tariff downward!—Lakeland Telegram.

REJOICE WITH US

The Herald has always maintained that in cooperation or corporation the success of the Celery Delta would be assured. Some time ago the gigantic corporation of the Florida Gardens was launched upon the financial world and the public has been upon the qui vive since regarding the ultimate success of this new departure in the annals of farming in the delta. During the summer months there were various reports concerning the selling of the stock in the new company and while the project seemed feasible to the home folks who understood the proposition better than any outsider it was with trembling and fear that the bark was launched and the result awaited. Various representatives were dispatched north to interest capital in the project that promised so much not only to Sanford but to the investors as well, and they returned with reports of the taking of stock and yet the stock had not materialized.

The final meeting was awaited with much interest for the material welfare of Sanford seemed to hinge on the completion of the organization. At the meeting held one day this week and a report of which is given in this issue of The Herald the fact is announced that the support has been given by Orange county capitalists. The strength of the organization is crystallized in Orange county men and they have the faith in the project to put their money in it, which spells success with large letters.

The new members of the board of directors are James L. Giles and W. R. O'Neal of Orlando, who need no introduction to the people of this section. They are men of means and men of brains and are known to take stock only in the projects that promise returns. The fact that these gentlemen are willing to come in on the Florida Gardens Co. will give that project a boost that no subscription of stock in the north could ever give.

With the strong backing of the Sanford stockholders and the fact that Chase & Co. will handle the shipments the ultimate success of the Florida Gardens is assured.

Controlling the immense amount of the finest of vegetable lands in the flowing well district the Florida Gardens Co. will own, control and farm the hundreds of acres of lands systematically, judiciously and honestly and cannot help but get the best results where the small farmer would fail for lack of capital and systematic effort.

There is no doubt but that farming in the Sanford Celery Delta has reached the stage where only united effort will succeed.

There is no doubt but that the Florida Gardens Co. has solved the question of farming and distributing the crops on the only plan to succeed, viz, united effort and a concentration along purely business lines.

The Florida Gardens project is the best that has ever been started in our midst. It means big things to our city and to the whole vegetable industry. It has been placed in hands that will push it to completion and The Herald takes pride in the fact that our own people will be the prime movers in the project.

Night Blooming Cereus

Mrs. J. D. Davison held last night what might be called a Cereus Party. Having a number of these peculiar blossoms ready to open Mrs. Davison with her customary generosity invited all the neighbors to her home to watch the beautiful flowers bloom and before the evening was over, ten of the white blossoms had opened. It was a most beautiful sight and one long to be remembered. The editor of the Herald was presented with one this morning, but it was withered and died in a short time. 'Tis said that in order to preserve them the flowers must be kept in alcohol, but what would an editor be doing with alcohol?

Early Crops: HOW?

To be a success at maturity, a crop must be started off vigorously; it must have plenty of plant food at hand in the soil, that can be easily and quickly taken up by the rootlets and converted into vegetable fibre and crisp green foliage. Later in the season also, the plant food must be there to ripen the product and harden it for shipping.

BRADLEY'S FERTILIZERS

contain this sort of plant food, as Florida truckers have learned from thirty years of experience in using them. Not only "quality" and "reliability" but "suitability" are watchwords of Bradley's fertilizers.

Miss Irene Brady will assist Miss Butler.

Compliments Our Schools

Dr. J. A. Thackston, State Inspector of High Schools, was in the city yesterday and inspected the Primary, Grammar and High School buildings. The Herald will not give his opinion of our school system because to do so verbatim might cause the other schools in the state to feel small.

Suffice to say that Dr. Thackston stated that the Sanford school system was above par and his words of praise to Prof. Perkins, the teachers and the school board were strong enough to make them feel that their work has not been in vain.

PAST AND FUTURE

The Growers of Sanford Should Profit by Past Examples

The old saying with which we are familiar, namely "There is many a slip between the cup and the lip" has proven true numerous times of late in Sanford and may be again, in spite of all we can do to prevent it. Another old adage likewise familiar to us is, "You can judge the future by the past."

This may be true or not, according to our willingness and ability to profit by the mistakes or mishaps of the past. The wise and intelligent man learns a lesson from the disasters that have overtaken him and turning his back on the past, forgets it and with renewed hope and courage, enters upon his future work determined to make a success of it. Every one does not succeed alike in this world, only five out of each one hundred who enter business for themselves make a success, but all must try alike—endeavoring as best they can with the means at their command to forge ahead. Any other course would be foolish and a waste of time.

My remarks have reference to the Vegetable Growing Industry of Sanford which is the backbone of our community, in fact we might say is the whole thing—and unless I am entirely wrong in my conjectures every business man, be he banker, baker or candlestick maker, is interested in the subject and the solving of the problem.

What is the problem?

Plainly, the intelligent, business-like, systematic and honest marketing of our products, together with the exercise of good judgment in planting and producing.

That we can produce the best and finest vegetables in the land goes without saying, we have the climate and our system of irrigation and drainage in connection with our artesian wells makes us well nigh independent of Nature's sprinkling Can. But we must not forget there are others engaged in doing just what we are and in spite of our natural advantages we have some handicaps that are not easily overcome.

One of the greatest of these is our distance from the markets. Much time is consumed in transporting and the cost of same is a heavy tax on us, yet both these disadvantages can be overcome if the growers would act intelligently and work harmoniously together.

Another serious obstacle is seen in the fact that very few of our crops have to be moved in a period, much too short to admit of their absorption by the trade in a normal and profitable manner. There is a way to meet this trouble and when we get organized as we should and must be, the way will be opened to us.

Our growers are not suffering more than are those of other sections but that does not help us and should not prevent us from looking after our own interests.

To secure our portion of the value of the crops we must cooperate and work honestly together, with confidence in each other, to the end that we are not put in competition with each other on the market in the selling of our crops.

By dividing our shipments among a lot of commission houses and distributors we are simply cutting each other's throats and our own, for when the shipments reach destination the receivers fight each other for the business and use our goods to do the fighting with, cutting prices until the growers get nothing but the stereotyped report "Market glutted sorry, but best I could do."

Let me illustrate. A few days since, in conversation with one of the representatives of the Florida Vegetable Growers' Association in one of the largest markets I was told that a Sanford distributor employs for his representative a broker who was always a cutter, no matter what the article or from whence it came.

This broker cut out celery last winter 10 to 15 cents a crate right through the season. Later when Texas onions came on, our agent was able to get $2.25 per crate at the opening, but this broker kept cutting until the price got down to 40c.

Again when Georgia peaches arrived they started at $2.00 per bushel and were promptly forced down to $1.35, and in every case the grower was the loser.

This is just what happens to Sanford products and in part explains the unsatisfactory returns we continuously receive. We are told the markets are out of joint, are busted, etc., etc.

Well, who puts them out of joint, who "busts" them? No one but the people we ship to, who are trusted with the selling of our goods, which surely is the most important part of the business.

The fault is not with the markets, for we all know what the consumer is paying when we often get nothing, it is the lack of system in marketing that is wrong and there is but one way to correct it, to wit: Cut out absolutely the commission man and combine on one reliable, honest distributor or selling agency, who has the ability and connections to sell for cash in Sanford, all of our products the market will absorb, follow their advice about shipping and throw away in Sanford all that cannot be sold with a profit.

It doesn't make any difference what the name of the distributor is but he must be honest and have the necessary ability. It is beyond my understanding how the grower can turn over his property to strangers, men they never heard of and will never see, about whom they know nothing, trusting them for honest treatment, and will not place the same amount of confidence in their neighbors who they can see every day, who have been in Sanford for years and who they believe to be honest and square. This is especially strange when they have been disappointed so often by the outside party. The chances are all with the grower, if he does business with his neighbor and the man he knows, and if worst comes to worst he can have the satisfaction of "cussing out" his neighbor, for he knows where to find him, whereas the other fellow he cannot get at. There will be times, of course, when some money will be made by some of the growers regardless of the conditions, but these are exceptional cases and are not sure or certain, neither do they fix the value of our lands or insure a safe return on our investment. We cannot figure on an individual case, but must talk the community as a whole. If we do everything we know to safeguard our interests, we still have our troubles, for the weather man has to be reckoned with, bugs and insects beset us and "Life is just one damn thing after another" anyhow but we can get rid of part of our troubles and why not do so?

If we stop consigning our goods we will make buyers of the commission men. This was demonstrated last winter and there is no surer way of keeping up prices than by making the man who sells the goods invest his own money in them. When he has done that he won't be cutting prices but will work to maintain them, which is just what we want.

To the argument you cannot organize the farmers I would point to the California Citrus Exchange, the Florida Citrus Exchange, which controls about 80 per cent of the citrus industry of the East Coast. The Apple Growers Associations of Washington and Oregon are so strong they control every step of the business—even to the picking and packing. The South Texas Onion Growers' Association, who took the business when the growers were all practically broke, soon were making money for them and continued to, until too many independent cuts came into the business, attracted by its profits, who finally ruined the whole thing but at the recent annual meeting these independents seeing their mistake applied for membership and the prospects look good.

The Georgia peach growers improved very much their conditions, under the working of the Association, and should have continued as they began but jealousies crept in and caused dissatisfaction, "the management was changed, many members withdrew and the inevitable happened. No profits to the grower."

The Florida Citrus Exchange has done great things, in bettering the orange industry of the state, and if better supported would do a great deal more. A few cannot secure the same efficiency, no matter how hard they work, as the many, neither is it fair or manly for the majority to accept the benefits of the work of the minority, even if this was possible, which it is not, except for a very short period of time.

The successful organizations, pioneers in this field of endeavor, have been working out their plans of salvation. The growers of Sanford can begin now, save the loss of time and money by following the examples of these organizations and build up for themselves such an association as will be a bulwark of strength and sure cure for many of the ills from which we now suffer.

Until this is done there will be many a "Slip between the cup and the lip" and the "Future can be judged by the past."

Yours very truly, W
R. L. HUGHES.

About Our Schools

Editor Sanford Schools, City

My Dear Holly: It is with much pleasure and satisfaction I note your editorial in your issue of The Herald of Tuesday, Oct. 1st., on "Our Public Schools."

We are proud of our schools and justly so. Indeed the arrangement of our school plant was by no means a "Happened so," but is the result (so far only in part) of carefully laid plans being worked out by the board of trustees with the aid of Prof. Perkins. You have stated a fact, and stated it well, when you say "The schools are the most valuable asset of our city, and are an institution in which all are vitally concerned." As a community we are indeed fortunate in that we are a people who take a deep interest in the better things of life. To bring our public schools up to the high standard they have now attained, and that is recognized by the best educators of our state, has been possible only because of the fact that the citizens of the district and patrons of the schools are deeply interested in the welfare and education of our children. Nothing is too good for OUR children seems to be the conviction of our citizens. It has been my privilege for more than ten years now, as a member of the board of trustees, to assist in the upbuilding and development of our schools, and I can testify from personal experience to the loyal, sympathetic and earnest support (almost unanimous support) always given the board of trustees and teachers by the citizens of the district. This speaks well for our people and is the basis for the good work now going on in the education of our youth. Now that our schools have opened for another term I trust our citizens will make special effort to visit them, and especially do I hope those parents, the fathers as well as the mothers, who have children there will visit and get acquainted with the teacher in charge of your child, for much encouragement is often given to both teacher and scholar by a friendly visit from the parent. We have the best school plant of any city of our size in the state, much better than many larger cities, our corps of teachers second to none, and our citizens the BEST on earth. Why shouldn't we be pleased? Personally, and on behalf of the school board, I wish to thank you for your kindly expressions, and the interest you are going to take in our schools in the future.

Sincerely,

C. R. WALKER

Services at the Episcopal Church

The Episcopal church will be open for Sunday school at 9:45 and morning service at 11 o'clock.

Rev. F. B. Cannon, who was expected to take the restorship, has accepted work elsewhere. Therefore services will be held as during the summer until further arrangements can be made.

Teachers and scholars are requested to be on hand promptly at 9:45 Sunday, the 5th.

With Congressman Sulzer named for governor and Martin Glynn for lieutenant governor, the Democratic convention met, selected the remainder of the New York state ticket and adjourned.

General Manager W. C. Temple of the Florida Citrus Exchange says he expects that at least 500 cars of grapefruit will go forward from this state during the present week, which embraces the opening week of the shipping season for grapefruit. It was decided at the Gainesville convention of the citrus growers to throw down the bars on Oct. 1 so far as grapefruit is concerned.

The First National Bank of Plant City has formally opened its doors to the public. This makes the third bank for that progressive town.

The Orlando Sentinel says: "G. A. Branson brought to the Sentinel office last Friday an extraordinary egg that one of his hens had laid. The phenomenon measured over 8 inches one way and 6 3/8 inches the other. For several years Mr. Branson was manager of the Retreat poultry farm, owned by Rev. H. I. Crisler, and he knows a deal about poultry and eggs, yet he has not hopes of breeding a strain of hens capable of producing regularly such eggs as the one above mentioned."

At a congregational meeting Sunday morning at the Presbyterian church Rev. M. M. McFerrin of Marion, Va., was unanimously called to the pastorate of the Sanford church. While a visitor in the city about two weeks ago Mr. McFerrin preached at the Presbyterian church.

Blood Was Wrong

All women, who suffer from the aches and pains, due to female ailments, are urged to try Cardui, the reliable, scientific, tonic remedy, for women. Cardui acts promptly, yet gently, and without bad effects, on the womanly system, relieving pain, building up strength, regulating the system, and toning up the nerves. During the past half century, thousands of ladies have written to tell of the quick curative results they obtained, from the use of this well-known medicine.

TAKE CARDUI The Woman's Tonic

Mrs. Jane Callahan suffered from womanly trouble for nearly ten years. In a letter from Whiteville, N. C., she says: "I was not able to do my own housework. My stomach was weak, and my blood was wrong. I had back-ache, and was very weak. I tried several doctors, but they did me no good. I used Cardui for 3 or 4 months, and now I am in the best health I have ever been. I can never praise Cardui enough." It is the best tonic, for women.

Whether seriously sick, or simply weak, try Cardui.

JORDAN CALLS BLUFF OF FOXY FRUIT SHIPPERS

Will Inspect all Citrus Fruits Before Allowing Shipment

FLORIDA NEWS AND VIEWS FROM EVERY SOURCE

Daily Happenings in The Land of Flowers Culled and Tied Into a Nosegay of Brieflets

Pure Food Inspector A. P. Jordan will not issue permits to citrus fruit growers allowing them to ship their fruit, following a test of samples that are brought to him. He will make no more tests except from fruit that he has gathered himself, and will then make these at the packing house. Inspector Jordan reached this decision following the action of one grower to whom he gave a certificate of ripe fruit, based on a test applied to a few oranges brought to him. As soon as the inspector issued this certificate neighbors of the grower he had given it to, swarmed in to see him, and ask for certificates. On investigation it was found that the inspector had been imposed upon, the grower picking out some of his ripest fruit for the test. When he got his certificate he commenced shipping everything he had.

One of the largest express depot in the state is to be erected in Miami by the Florida East Coast Railway Company for housing the business of the Southern Express Company.

Another large company with headquarters in Jacksonville has just received its charter from Tallahassee. The company is the Nassau Farm Company, capitalized at $100,000.

The Orlando Reporter-Star says: "Good water, good streets, and a sewerage system to be voted October 19, is a gentle reminder that Orlando has taken her place on the side of city construction."

The membership of the Woman's Democratic League in Duval county is said to be increasing rapidly. The league was organized in Jacksonville a few weeks ago. The work of the organization is to stand for woman's share in helping towards electing a Democratic President.

The Pensacola News says: "The death of Rear Admiral Lucien Young, who at the time of the abandonment of the Pensacola Naval yard was its commandant, comes as a shock to his scores of friends in this city and is a distinct loss to the American navy which he served so valiantly."

The Book Lovers' Club met with Mrs. Harry Ward Thursday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

A short business meeting was held in which Mrs. Hopson was unanimously elected to fill the vacancy left by Mrs. George Fox, Jr.

At the conclusion of the business meeting the hostess announced they would go into the millinery business, whereupon each guest was supplied with tissue paper, pins and scissors and told they must fashion a hat. The experience caused a great deal of merriment and some unique models were manufactured.

Mrs. Fred Williams, whose creation of a white picture hat with willow plume received the greatest number of votes, was awarded the prize, a beautiful wedgewood fern dish. Miss Collins cut the consolation prize, a miniature picture hat.

Delicious refreshments were served by Miss Madge and Veda Ward, who assisted their mother in entertaining.

Mrs. Ward's invited guests were: Mesdames John Dickins, Caldwell, Harry Wilson, Morton Hopson, J. D. Langley and Misses Collins and Mary McClung.

Millinery Opening

A cordial invitation is extended the ladies of Sanford and vicinity to attend my millinery opening Oct. 10 and 11, Thursday and Friday. The largest and handsomest line of pattern hats ever brought to Sanford will be on display at my parlors over Yowell's store.

HELD A ROUSING MEETING

Commercial Club Members Are Enthusiastic

OVER ONE HUNDRED PRESENT

Will Meet Again Friday Night To Perfect The Organization And Committees

Never before in Sanford's history have the business men been so thoroughly aroused to the importance of organized effort for the upbuilding of the city and a general feeling of good fellowship. The reorganized Commercial Club is meeting every Friday night and each week is devoted to a good natured skirmish between the two committees on membership. One committee reported forty new members and the other sixty at the last meeting. Friday night the club met in the band room of the city hall and Vice President Forster faced an audience of over 100 good men and tried when he rapped for order. Mr. Forster presided in his usual affable manner, and after the reading of the minutes of the last meeting by Secretary Bates many of the new members were called upon to make short talks for the good of Sanford, and for two hours the hall resounded with speeches and applause. From the report of the two committees on membership it was thought advisable to continue the good work and they were instructed to search the highways and hedges and let no guilty man escape. All of the members are requested to aid the committees in the hunt for new members and next Friday night President Lake will appoint all the standing committees and the club will then arrange the work for the ensuing year.

The ready response with which every citizen of Sanford has given the committee on membership indicates that at least 200 members will be added to the list and the club representing it as does every progressive citizen of the Sanford district will be a power for good in the community. It will be the purpose of the club not only to transact the regular routine of business at each meeting but some prominent speaker will be invited to make addresses at least once each month and dull business will be enlivened and many good points for the betterment of Sanford and Orange county will be brought to the attention of the members.

Some there are who believe that less talk and more work is needed, but unless the cheerful spirit predominates at the meetings there will soon be a falling off in the attendance.

The busy man who spends ten hours each day with his own affairs needs some relaxation at these meetings and a few addresses on vital questions at the meetings will prove very beneficial to all concerned.

The meeting next Friday night will be in the band room of the city hall and every member is urged to be present.

At the Imperial

The attendance at the Imperial Saturday night was so great that standing room was at a premium for an hour or longer.

This week's show proved so good last evening that preparations are being made to handle a crowd this evening and tomorrow.

Curly Monnette in his character singing and impersonations was somewhat different from other acts of the same class. His several quick changes are good.

Joe Alvia, the acrobatic dancer presents an act worthy of special mention and the difficult dance of Mr. Alvia was spoken of as being the big hit of this season's vaudeville. He will no doubt draw big houses today and tomorrow.

Cecilian Music Club

The Cecilian Music Club will meet at the studio of Mrs. Fannie Stenbridge Munson Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock sharp. Every member of the Club is requested to be present.

Millinery Opening

Mrs. J. H. Bruton will have her fall Millinery Opening at her parlors in the Bishop Block on Thursday and Friday of this week and promises the people of Sanford some great surprises in this line. Come early and see the latest styles before they are sold.

To the Daughters of Dixie
Where are the daughters of the south in Sanford?

In every other large city and small in the southland there is a chapter of the Daughters of the Confederacy and on Memorial Day and other occasions the memory of the Lost Cause is kept green. Only in Sanford do we notice an entire absence of any organization and lack of interest in memorializing the great conflict. There are sufficient numbers of southern ladies in Sanford to have a chapter of the Daughters of the Confederacy here or at least to affiliate with Orlando, in order that the memory of the brave hosts in gray can be kept green at least one day in the year. The daughters of Dixie in Sanford are not alive to the opportunity of paying homage to the veterans whose ranks are fast thinning and who will only be here a few years longer to receive homage. Concerted action on our part will organize a chapter here this winter and from this work all of us will realize a vast amount of good not only in studying the history of the south in the revival of sacred memories but in the general feeling of camaraderie that any good organization of this kind encourages.

MRS. R. J. HOLLY

At the Presbyterian Church

There was a most gratifying attendance at the Presbyterian church last Sabbath, both morning and evening.

Announcement had been made of the subject of the evening's discourse, "The Fundamental Basis of Education" by Rev. McKinnon. Being the county superintendent of public instruction and pastor of the Presbyterian church Rev. McKinnon is in a position to handle this subject particularly well and his sermon last Sunday night was ably composed and delivered. The teachers of the public schools were present, together with many members of other churches and Mr. McKinnon's remarks were closely followed.

He demonstrated that religion is the true foundation of education, taking his text from the Bible and illustrating his point by passages from the Scriptures.

Miss Louise Collins of Dunedin rendered solos at both morning and evening services in a manner most pleasing to the audience.

Triplett Will Speak

Stonewall Jackson Triplett, he of the interdict countenance and unassailable Democracy and sonorous voice, is in demand as a campaign orator, and may be heard in the cause of the just if he can get his consent to go out on the hustings.

Mr. Triplett has received a request from Claude L'Engle, nominee of the party for congressman at large, to address the behalf at Kissimmee, Sanford and Orlando.

In making this request Mr. L'Engle said that he would be unable to go out in his proper person on account of ill health.—Kissimmee Gazette.

Governor Wilson, presidential nominee of the Democratic party, and William J. Bryan, three times Democratic candidate for the same office, had a heart to heart talk at Lincoln, Nebraska, on the political situation throughout the country. Both unhesitatingly predict a Democratic victory. In the sun parlor of Fairview, Mr. Bryan's home, the veteran campaigner and the new comer in national politics sat for a few hours before the Governor's train left, discussing the program of the campaign but with particular reference to the Rocky Mountain states, where Mr. Bryan had just completed a six weeks' tour.

Q trolley car, manned by four strike-breakers, was attacked beyond the North Augusta yesterday evening, all of the men being severely flogged and one man shot in the hip. When the crowd had taken the strikebreakers off the car, one of them was rushed over to a clay pit, where an excavation had been made and water was standing. The man was made to get down in the pit and dance, while a number of pistol shots were fired over his head.

The condition of Ralph De Palma, injured while driving in the Grand Prix automobile road race Saturday, when his car hit the machine driven by Caleb S. Bragg, winner of the race, is said tonight to be as favorable as can be expected. De Palma's main injury, consists of an abdominal puncture and unless infection sets in his physicians say chances are bright for recovery. The patient is conscious. He sustained several bruises about the body, but no bones were fractured as first reported.

Pages from the careers of the McNamara and Ortie McManigal, as leaders of "the flying squadron of dynamiters" with conversations in which they were said to have plotted to send McManigal to Panama, to blow up the locks of the Panama canal, were read by District Attorney Charles W. Miller, before the jury in the trial of the accused "dynamite conspirators" at Indianapolis yesterday. The incident in reference to Panama, Attorney Miller said, occurred just before the arrest of Los Angeles dynamiters when they were becoming desperate in their efforts to secure explosives without betraying their identities.

"John J., called James B. McNamara, his brother, and McManigal to the headquarters of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers," said Mr. Miller. "John J. said to McManigal: 'We can't get any more dynamite around here without stealing it. Now you go to Panama and see what you can do down there. The McClintic Marshall Construction Company have a large amount of dynamite stored down there. You could easily get hold of it and blow up the locks. That would make 'em sit up and take notice and take their minds off the Los Angeles affair.' McManigal refused to go at that time. Soon after they all were arrested."

Nine young men lost their lives early today when an automobile in which they were joy riding crashed through the railing on the side of the new Thirty-third street Boulevard at Philadelphia and fell into a coal yard seventy-five feet below. The machine, a big touring car, turned turtle in the descent and the occupants were found crushed and mangled in the hood of the machine. The body of the car was smashed to splinters.

War or peace between Turkey and the Balkan states is in the balance. If anything it might be said that the scales swung slightly today against peace in the sense that every hour's delay in the power's intervention in the case increased the chance of hostilities. The word now rests with Great Britain, all the other powers having accepted with some modifications the French Premier's plan for intervention, but it is understood here Great Britain hesitates in going so far as to assume, with other powers, responsibility for gaining from Turkey broad reforms in Macedonia.

Thos. J. Ryan, for many years a leader of the Democratic party in Philadelphia, and a prominent promoter of amusement enterprises, ended his life here today by shooting himself through the mouth. His body was discovered in a downtown office building shortly after he had been discussing business affairs with his private secretary.
